A Washington dispatch says: "Mr. Conkling's friends say that he does not apprehend any difficulty in securing the rejection of Judge Robertson as Collector of New York. The nomination is in Mr. Conkling's hands, as Chairman of the committee, and he will not delay action upon it. He believes that the Senate will not, against the wishes of both of the Senators from New York, confirm the nomination, and, therefore, he says he is not disturbed over it. The politicians to-day credit Mr. Blaine with having brought about the nomination, as a reward to Robertson for having divided the New York delegation at Chicago, and favored Blaine's nomination. Mr. Conkling is very indignant. He says the President has seen fit to recognize an element that does not number over 26,000 in the State, and to reward bolting with one of the best positions in the gift of the Executive."

WASHINGTON.

Gen. John W. Foster, of Indiana, formerly our Minister to Mexico, and now Minister at St. Petersburg, has been cabled by Secretary Blaine that the President desires him to remain.

A Washington dispatch states that the investigation which led to the exposure of the alleged land swindle in Missouri and the arrest of Robert L. Lindsay at St. Louis, and of other alleged land swindlers in Cleveland and Pittsburgh, was instigated by a letter received by Secretary Schurz more than a year ago. This letter stated that Lindsay, whose father had once been in charge of the land office at Ironton, Mo., had in his possession one or two boxes filled with United States land patents, which were certainly genuine, although Lindsay might have obtained them by questionable means. The writer of the letter alleged that Lindsay kept these boxes concealed, and had queer dealings with queer people. The writer, who professed to be a friend of Secretary Schurz, suggested, in conclusion, it might be well to look into the matter. The Secretary secured Special Agent D. P. Terrell, of the Treasury Department, to investigate the matter. The result was the arrest of Lindsay and several other persons. It is believed at the Land Office the ring have obtained fraudulent land titles to more than 1,000,000 acres of the public lands, most of which they have sold to innocent settlers, who therefore have no valid title to the land they occupy.

The omission of the word "an" in the Sunday Civil Appropriation bill has defeated an appropriation of $250,000 for the erection of a Pension Bureau building in Washington.... President Garfield has expressed himself on the Mormon question. He says that polygamy must and shall be stamped out, and he has asked at least one prominent Republican Senator to take his stand upon that platform and fight the evil to the death. He wishes, however, to save from illegitimacy the children born of polygamous marriage. This much he feels bound to do, because two of his predecessors, Fillmore and Buchanan, had recognized the institution by appointing Brigham Young Governor of Utah Territory.

As a preliminary step in the war against polygamy, a bill will be introduced in the next Congress to change the form of government in Utah. It is proposed to place the administration of affairs in the hands of seven Commissioners, to be appointed by the President, and continue in office during his pleasure. It is thought the evil can be reached in this way more readily than under the existing form. The law disfranchising polygamists, male and female, will also be passed.

R. D. Trowbridge, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, has tendered his resignation, and asks that it be speedily accepted.

Judge William H. Robertson, who led the independent bolt in New York prior to the Chicago Convention, who has long been the personal and political opponent of Senator Conkling, and who is a near friend of Reuben E. Fenton, who, at the Chicago Convention, headed the seventeen New York delegates who voted for Garfield, has been appointed Collector of Customs for the port of New York. Mr. Fenton's other friend, Gen. Merritt, was transferred to London as Consul General. The appointment of Robertson is said to be a severe disappointment to Mr. Conkling.....William Walter Phelps, nominated to be Minister to Austria, is a wealthy young New Jersey ex-Congressman, now traveling in Europe for his health. He is an intimate personal friend and supporter of Mr. Blaine and a friend of Whitelaw Reid. It was Mr. Phelps who was reported to have furnished the loan which first enabled Mr. Reid to secure control of the New York Tribune..... Gen. Badeau, Gen. Grant's biographer, receives a diplomatic promotion, being transferred from the London Consul Generalship to the higher grade of Charge d'Affaires to Denmark. The present Minister to Denmark, Mr. Cramer, the brother-in-law of Gen. Grant, also receives promotion, being transferred from Charge d'Affaires at Denmark to Minister to Switzerland, a somewhat higher rank..... Thomas M. Nichol, of Wisconsin, who has been appointed Commissioner of Indian Affairs, is well known in the West and throughout the country as Secretary of the Honest-Money League. He is a personal friend of Gen. Garfield. He has for some weeks been in charge of the Indian Office....Gen. Lionel A. Sheldon, who is named as Governor of New Mexico, was an officer in the Union army, and at the close of the war he settled in New Orleans. He was elected to Congress three times successively from one of the districts of that city. He is a personal friend of the President....Gen. Lew Wallace, now Governor of New Mexico, goes to Paraguay and Uruguay as Minister....Judge Phillips, of North Carolina, has been nominated for Judge of the Court of Claims to succeed Secretary Hunt....William E. Chandler has been appointed Solicitor General of the Treasury.

A Washington telegram to the Chicago Tribune says "there has been a great deal of speculation as to what course the Secretary of the Treasury will take to provide for the payment of the bonds which become redeemable in May and July, in case an extra session of Congress is not called for the purpose of passing a funding bill. It is announced that Secretary Windom has, among other projects, considered that of using money in the treasury to buy, before the 1st of next December, $150,000,000 of 6-per-cent. bonds. It has also been asserted that this plan embraces the idea that it will be practicable to avoid the necessity of issuing the $104,000,000 of 5-per-cent. bonds. There is some reason to believe that a project like that above outlined has been taken into consideration, but nothing is known regarding the probability that it will be adopted.

Solicitor General Phillips refuses to accept the Judgeship of the Court of Claims, to which he was nominated by the President.

GENERAL.

The Philadelphia Press prints a letter from Gaboon, west coast of Africa, giving news about Stanley, the explorer. Stanley's party, when last seen in November last, were on the Ogowe river, far in the interior of Africa. They were in a mountainous country, and obliged to travel overland, for the river was full of rapids. Their progress was slow. There were no provisions to be had where they were. The men were eating rice and the donkeys corn and hay, all brought from Europe.

The names of three of the gentlemen who made up the Grant fund are Jay Gould, William H. Vanderbilt, and J. W. Mackay. They are down for $25,000 each.

The establishment of a new line of steamers between England and America will shortly be announced. Milford Haven will be the English port, saving a day in the length of the sea voyage. The steamers will be steel built, with engines of great power and all the latest appliances in steam navigation, and will run twenty knots an hour....Sitting Bull is still at Woody mountain, where he intends to go to farming.

The Directors of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, at a recent meeting, decided to distribute the residue of the common stock, amounting to nearly 180,000 shares, which has been held in the company's treasury since the reorganization in 1875. This issue completes the total amount of common stock authorized by the plan of reorganization and by the act of incorporation, $49,000,000. The reason for the distribution of the stock is said by the officers of the company to be the anxiety of the persons entitled to receive it to realize their profits at the present market value of the stock. The chief opponent of the issue has been the President of the company, Frederick Billings, who was unwilling that the stock should be issued any faster than the road was completed and accepted by the Government.

Chief Special Treasury Agent Adams, at New York, says the quantity of goods smuggled into this country by persons claiming to be respectable is enormous.

The Mexican Southern Railroad Company has been organized in New York. U. S. Grant was chosen President; G. M. Dodge, Vice President; and Russell Sage, Treasurer. A resolution was adopted requesting Gen. Grant to proceed to Mexico to represent the interests of the company. Ex-President Diaz, Gen. Mejia and ex-Minister Romero are interested in the project....The Chief Engineer of the Mexican Government, having surveyed the Tehuantepec route, reports Capt. Eads' project entirely practicable.

FOREIGN.

The Russian Foreign Minister has addressed a circular to the Russian representatives abroad relative to the policy of the new Emperor. It sets forth that he will first give his attention to the internal development of the state, and that only the duty of protecting her honor or security will divert him from this work. His foreign policy will be pacific, and he will act in common with all other governments in maintaining a general peace.... France yields to the request of the United States that pork shipped before the passage of the decree shall be subject only to inspection. ....In consequence of the refusal of the Austrian and Hungarian Diets to pass resolutions of condolence on the occasion of the Czar's murder, Baron von Haymerle has resigned the office of Minister of Foreign Affairs.

The persons to be tried for the murder of the Czar are Roussakoff, who confesses that he threw one of the bombs; Andrei Telejkoff, who admits participating in the preparations for the crime; Timofei Michaeloff, who shot a policeman in resisting arrest at the Ritzkoff's domicile; and a woman named Hessie Helfmann, supposed to have been an accomplice of Navrotski, who committed suicide when the police entered his house...... A special cable dispatch from London, speaking of the new Czar's policy, says he is bent upon establishing institutions which shall secure a large measure of self-government, and shall at the same time be adapted to the character and habits of the Russians.... It has been noticed as a strange coincidence that the day of the Czar's death was the anniversary of Orsini's execution, and that the spot on which the Emperor was murdered was that on which Gen. Mezentzoff, Chief of the Third Section, was stabbed by his assassin. It is now inclosed and covered with turf. A memorial church will be erected upon the spot.

The funeral of the Czar is described by the correspondents as a most magnificent pageant. Three cannon shots were the signal for the mourners to fall into line, and three others were the signal for the procession to move. The funeral-car was a bier of ebony and silver, on wheels, with heavily-carved silver spokes and a superstructure of black and silver. The whole was canopied by superb material encircling the columns of the bier. The coffin of the illustrious dead was almost hidden by a golden pall, lined with white satin, and the vast car itself was drawn by eight black horses, completely shrouded in sable draperies. Four General aides-de-camp stood one at each corner of the catafalque, the polished metal wheels of which glistened in the sunlight. Sixteen General officers held the silken cords of the canopy. Behind the bier of his murdered sire walked Alexander III. in his imperial solitude, bearing alone his filial sorrow and his state care and symbolizing in this last respect his unique position..... Many arrests have been made in St. Petersburg. At the house of one of the persons captured the police found 700,000 roubles. Another prisoner was well armed, and had some poison and 20,000 roubles in his pockets. Two dynamite stores have been discovered....The total cost of the Afghan war to the British has been, so far, $97,500,000.... Turkey has agreed to make additional concessions to Greece in Thessaly, and to cede Crete instead of Epirus. The Greek Premier says that, whatever may be the state of preparation, Greece will move promptly if the proposition of Turkey be insufficient....Cypress trees have been planted around the spot where the Czar fell, and sacred pictures, with lamps burning before them, have been placed there.... The press of Russia invokes the aid of the European powers to eradicate Nihilism, the headquarters of which are located at Geneva, Switzerland....It is reported from London that the Boers have accepted all the British conditions except that requiring them to disarm....President Grevy has accepted an invitation to send representatives to the Yorktown centenary celebration.

The Boers have accepted the British terms, and the war is at an end. All arms, munitions and other property captured by either side during hostilities to be restored, and Transvaal to be granted independence, subject to conditions to be decided by a royal commission.... Indictments have been found against Nicolai Roussakoff, Andrei Telejkoff, Timofei Michaeloff, and a woman named Hesse Hoffman for complicity in the assassination of the Czar. They will be allowed seven days for the preparation of their defense. The Agence Russe says that the Government has evidence that the assassination was planned in Paris and Switzerland..... A Land-League meeting was held in Dublin, and every speaker apologized for Dillon's speech in which he warned Judge Fitzgerald to take care that the League did not do away with him....Over 1,000 persons left Berlin to embark for the United States.

A pension of 6,000 roubles has been granted to Col. Durjiky, who was wounded at the time the Czar was assassinated....Advices from Berlin state that the emigration to America is so large that the steamship companies have been forced to charter extra steamers. ....Sir William Harcourt, of the Gladstone Cabinet, received from Manchester a parcel, which he requested the police to open. It was found to contain a loaded pistol.... A council of regency, of which the Empress of Russia and the Grand Dukes Vladimir and Nicholas are members, has been appointed to act in case of the assassination of Alexander III....A French force of 150, detailed to establish a telegraph line through a portion of Senegambia, in Africa, routed 1,500 hostile natives who attacked them, killing 200 of the dusky warriors....The police of Madrid discovered a secret store of 1,600 rifles outside the barriers of the city.... A bomb with a lighted fuse attached was placed outside the Royal Theater at Madrid, but was seen in time by the police.....Two Frenchmen have been sentenced to eight months' imprisonment each for posting congratulatory placards on the death of the Czar on the dead-walls of Paris, and another Paris editor has been sentenced to six months' imprisonment and a fine of 200 francs for publishing an article applauding the assassination....

The city of Nice, in the South of France, has been the scene of a soul-sickening horror. The opera-house, during a performance, and while a large number of people were occupying the seats and stalls, took fire and was consumed in an incredibly-short space of time. It is believed that not less than 200 people were roasted alive. A cable dispatch gives the following particulars of the holocaust: The fire commenced soon after the curtain had risen for the performance of "Lucia di Lammermoor." A majority of the victims belong to the working class. Shortly after the fire began the gas exploded, and the house was plunged into complete darkness. A scene of terror and dismay ensued which beggars description. A detachment of sailors from the squadron in the harbor arrived on the scene, and displayed great gallantry in rescuing the people and combating the fire, which was subdued toward 10 o'clock. Strakosch, the impresario, was slightly hurt. One whole family of five persons and another of three persons are known to have perished. Relief subscriptions for the sufferers have been opened throughout Nice. Most of the artists were in the dressing-rooms and were aware of their danger, but it was too late to escape. The choristers rushed along the narrow passage in the darkness, presumably unable in the crush to escape. The bass, tenor, and baritone must have been suffocated. Some of the bodies found are so horribly charred that recognition is impossible. The body of one of the singers has been recognized. The cause of the fire was a leak in the gas-pipes behind the scenes. The leak was caused suddenly, in some way unknown, and allowed great volumes of gas to escape. This ignited before the leak was discovered from the rear stage lights, and the explosion which followed at once set all the scenery and inflammable material on the stage on fire, and before the audience recovered from their first horror the entire building was in flames. To add to the calamity, some one turned the gas off in the efforts to stop the fire, and then a terrible panic ensued. The audience became frantic, and in their endeavors to escape all sought personal safety, and the weaker and the women were remorselessly knocked aside and trampled upon. Many of the actors and chorus were burned to death.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

The Senate was organized by the Republicans, on Friday, the 18th inst., Mahone voting with them, and David Davis with the Democrats. The vote stood 37 to 37, Edmunds and Vance being paired, and Vice President Arthur gave his casting vote in favor of the Republicans. The committees, as arranged by the Republican caucus, were then appointed. As soon as Senator Frye was sworn in, Mr. Anthony, Chairman of the Republican caucus, offered the list of committees prepared in the caucus as an amendment to the resolution offered a number of days ago by Mr. Pendleton. The vote stood 37 to 37, and the Vice President said that, the vote being a tie, he would vote in the affirmative, and declared the resolution adopted. The President nominated Philip Doppler to be Collector of Internal Revenue of the Sixth district of Tennessee; George H. Starbuck, of New York, to be Supervising Inspector of Steam Vessels for the Second district, and the following Postmasters: James C. Sherman, Menominee, Mich.; Joseph E. On the morning of Monday, March 21, the Vice President laid before the Senate a communication from the Governor of Wisconsin transmitting a joint resolution of the Legislature of that State relative to the death of M. H. Carpenter. The Chinese treaties were reported favorably from the Foreign Relations Committee. The President nominated Thomas Wilson, of the District of Columbia, United States Consul to Ghent; Thomas E. Douglas, Postmaster at Mansfield, Ohio; Charles Esslinger, Postmaster at Manitowoc, Wis.; Donello W. Barry, Collector of Internal Revenue, Idaho.

In the Senate, Mr. Voorhees offered a resolution, on Tuesday, March 22, setting forth that the hostile attitude assumed by the national banks toward refunding the national debt at low rates, and the recent attempt to dictate the legislation of Congress on the subject, were contrary to the best interests of the people, and well calculated to excite their alarm for the future. It was objected to on the ground that it was in the nature of legislative business, and not proper to be considered at this session. At Mr. Conkling's suggestion, it was deferred for one day. The President nominated Stewart L. Woodford to be United States Attorney for the Southern district of New York; Asa W. Tenney, to be United States Attorney for the Eastern district of New York; Lewis F. Payne, to be United States Marshal for the Southern district of New York; Clinton D. McDougall, to be United States Marshal for the Northern district of New York; John Tyler, to be Collector of Customs for the district of Buffalo Creek, New York; Albert Woodcock, to be Collector of Internal Revenue for the Third district of Illinois; Edward S. Meyer, to be United States Marshal for the Northern district of Ohio; Henry Fink, to be United States Marshal for the Eastern district of Wisconsin; A. M. Jones, to be United States Marshal for the Northern district of Illinois. The Republican Senators in caucus determined to complete the reorganization of the Senate by the election of the various officers. The following are the nominees for the principal offices: Secretary, George C. Gorham, California; Sergeant-at-Arms, Henry Riddleberger, Virginia; Principal Executive Clerk, James R. Young, Pennsylvania; Chief Legislative Clerk, Charles W. Johnson, Minnesota; Chaplain, the Rev. Dr. Byron Sunderland, of Washington, D. C. Riddleberger is a particular friend of Mahone, and is now editor of a weekly Readjuster paper at Woodstock, Va.

On the meeting of the Senate on the morning of Wednesday, March 23, Mr. Voorhees again submitted the resolution declaring that the hostile attitude assumed by the national banks to refunding the national debt at a lower rate of interest, and their recent attempt to dictate the legislation of Congress, are contrary to the best interests of the people, and calculated to excite their alarm for the future. Mr. Morrill raised his point of order that the resolution was not in order, inasmuch as it was a legislative proposition. Mr. Voorhees spoke at length in opposition to the point of order. Mr. Morrill withdrew it, and the resolution was laid over. Mr. Dawes offered a resolution for the election of Senate officers, naming the candidates selected by the Republican caucus. The following list of nominations was sent in by the President: William H. Robertson, Collector of Customs at the port of New York; William Walter Phelps, of New Jersey, Minister to Austria; Edwin A. Merritt, of New York, Consul General to London; Adam Badeau, of New York, Charge d'Affaires in Denmark; Lewis Wallace, of Indiana, Charge d'Affaires in Paraguay and Uruguay; Michael J. Cramer, of Kentucky, Charge d'Affaires in Switzerland; William E. Chandler, of New Hampshire, Solicitor General; Samuel J. Phillips, of North Carolina, Judge of the Court of Claims; L. A. Sheldon, of Ohio, Governor of New Mexico; Thomas M. Nichol, of Wisconsin, Commissioner of Indian Affairs; Edward S. Meyer, United States Attorney of the Northern district of Ohio; George W. Atkinson, United States Marshal, West Virginia; Bryan H. Langston, Collector of Internal Revenue, Fifth district of Missouri; Ellis G. Evans, Receiver of Public Moneys, Ironton, Mo. And the following Postmasters: Michael Piggott, Quincy, Ill.; Daniel Sawyer, Wabash, Ind.; George K. Gilmer, Richmond, Va.; T. Morgan, Pulaski, Tenn.; Charles M. Wilder, Columbia, S. C.; Hamilton Jay, Jacksonville, Fla.

Mr. Dawes called up the resolution for the election of officers of the Senate on Thursday, March 24. After several dilatory motions were voted down, a motion to adjourn was carried. During the session there were some sharp passages between Senator Brown and Senator Logan, and also between Senators Brown and Hoar. Senator David Davis generally voted with the Republicans. In a speech explaining his course, he said that the constitutional majority had a right to appoint the officers. Senator Garland opposed the present election of officers, on the ground that it would work great injustice to the present incumbents. Senator Cameron, of Pennsylvania, asserted the determination of the Republican side to sit the question out. Senator Brown accepted the issue, and stated his intention to sit here until December, before he would consent to change officers. The President nominated the following Postmasters: Joseph O. Jones, Terre Haute, Ind.; Henry Davis, Bedford, Ind.; Hamilton E. Baker, Rolla, Mo.; Henry N. Cook, Columbia, Mo.; Presley C. Lane, Palmyra, Mo.; Cornell Cryaler, Independence, Mo.; William Lydwith, Jacksonville, Fla. Charles F. Chandler, Receiver of Public Moneys at Oberlin, Kas. Thomas H. Cavanaugh, Register of Land Office at Oberlin, Kas.

WHITES, NEGROES AND CHINESE.

According to the tables of the Census Department, the white population of the United States has increased, since 1870, from 33,592,245 to 43,402,408, or nearly 29 per cent.; the colored population from 4,886,387 to 6,577,497, or nearly 35 per cent., and the Chinese population from 63,254 to 105,679, or about 67 per cent. In California, the Chinese population has increased in ten years from 49,310 to 75,122; in Arizona, from 20 to 1,632; in Oregon, from 3,330 to 9,508; in Washington Territory, from 234 to 3,227. In Idaho, the Chinese numbered 4,274 in 1870, and 3,378 in 1880.

Biblical Authority for Immersion.

A Kentucky preacher rose to speak and opened the Bible. The first verse that met his eye happened to be "The voice of the turtle shall be heard in the land." "Brethren," said he, "at first sight one would not think there was much in this text, but on a little consideration you will see there's a great deal in it. Now, you all know what a turtle is. If you've ever been along by a pond in the sun, you've seen them sitting on a log sunning themselves. Now, it is said, 'The voice of the turtle shall be heard in the land.' But the turtle hasn't any voice that anybody ever heard, and so it must be the noise he makes in plunging off the log into the water. Hence we must conclude that immersion is meant, and that immersion will become universal."

How He Got On.

Son to his father, who has asked him where he is in his class now: "Oh, pa, I've got a much better place than I had last quarter." "Indeed? Well, where are you?" "I'm fourteenth." "Fourteenth, you little lazybones! You were eighth last term. Do you call that a better place?" "Yes, sir; it's nearer the stove."

GRASSHOPPERS.

Efforts Toward Their Extermination.

The United States Entomological Commission, under the supervision of Prof. Riley, has completed its second report, relating to the Rocky mountain locust and Western cricket. This report is mainly supplemental to the very valuable one printed last year. It treats of the best means of subduing the locust in its permanent breeding-ground, with a view of preventing its migrating to the more fertile portions of the trans-Mississippi. The report makes a volume of nearly 400 pages. Prof. Riley comes to the following conclusions:

"A large proportion of the money losses resulting from the locust invasions of 1867, 1868, 1874 and 1876 was the result of a panic of uncertainty as to the future. This resulted in disheartenment, in the abandonment of large tracts of the best farming lands to nature and the locusts. This will probably never again happen in the West. The knowledge already disseminated, the extent of the population now pouring into the Northwest, the rapid settlement of the Territory of Montana, and the completion of the Northern Pacific, Canadian Pacific, the Utah and Northern railroads, and the consequent change in the surface of the country due to human agency, will so essentially modify the locust situation that we believe the West will never again suffer as in the past. It remains for the people of the Rocky mountain plateau to use such local and general means as their own experience and this commission have suggested in the first and present reports for the State and Territorial and county Governments to make, and execute laws for combined and persistent action during times of general local invasion, and for the prevention of others. If this be done in the plateau region in the future, the invasions of the Western border Mississippi States will tend to become more and more feeble, inconsiderable and harmless, until, we venture to predict, the time will come when the losses from locusts will be only local and comparable with those inflicted by locusts and grasshoppers in the Eastern Atlantic States. At any rate, the Western locust has already ceased to be a bugbear and object of dread. Familiarity with its habits and history has already taught the pioneer farmers of Utah, Montana and Colorado that with energy its ravages can be lessened if not entirely overcome, and no one intending to migrate West from the Atlantic States or from Europe need to be deterred by the fear of such alarming invasions as have occurred in former years."

One of the preventive measures suggested in the mountain and plateau areas is a permanent system of observations and warnings under the control of the Signal Bureau.

Fir Forests.

The fir tree growths of Puget Sound form one of the wonders of the American world. They average 200 feet in height, and some specimens have been cut that measured 320 feet in length and 12 feet in diameter at the base, with a straight and well proportioned log length of 90 feet to the first limb. The cedar trees are in like proportion, and are most valuable for wooden wares of all kinds, while the firs are the best for spar and ship timber yet found in any country. There are few nations that do not use them in ship building. One-fourth the wealth of San Francisco was culled from the firs of Puget Sound while the government slept, and to-day all the principal steam mill owners who saw and prepare for market from 100 to 200,000 feet a day to each mill—and there are thirty or more mills—are residents of San Francisco, where they invest their profits, to the great injury of residents of the Sound. There is, apparently, no exhaustion of the timber, and a century will possibly elapse before Puget Sound forests will be cleared of their immense resources of varied tree growths.

Outrage on a Colored Clergyman.

The Rev. Jim Groce received a call from a Galveston colored congregation, provided he gave satisfaction. Last Sunday he preached his trial sermon. After it was over he walked home with Uncle Mose, who is celebrated for his candor.

"Dat ar congregation," said the Reverend Groce, patronizingly, "is composed of de finest-lookin' body of men I ebber saw."

"Ef dat ar is your pinyon, you should nebber hab called 'em 'belubbed bredern.'"

"Why not, Uncle Mose?"

"Because you don't look like you belonged to de family."

There now exists a polar wave, or a glacial period, between Uncle Mose and the new pastor, and there is some talk of a hostile meeting with brickbats.—Galveston News.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, MARCH 31, 1881.

SENATOR DAVID DAVIS.

His Speech in the United States Senate Defining His Political Status:

Mr. President, before casting my vote on this occasion it is proper for me to state the reasons that determine it. In 1877 the Legislature of Illinois unexpectedly elected me Senator. I was not in any sense a candidate for this honor, and when applied to for the use of my name I declined to answer the request. Numerically the Republicans had a plurality of that Legislature, and my distinguished colleague (Mr. Logan) was their nominee. The Democrats stood next in strength, and a small body of Independents hold the balance of power. The two last united, and they voluntarily conferred upon me the distinction which I now hold. No man ever entered Congress freer from political committals or from personal obligations than I did four years ago. I had been identified with the Republican party, and still look back with pride to its grand achievements. The extreme measures after the war and the excesses incident to civil strife drove tens of thousands into the Liberal movement of 1872. I found myself in company with Charles Francis Adams, Horace Greeley, Carl Schurz, Stanley Matthews, Reuben E. Fenton, Murat Halstead, Charles Sumner, Lyman Trumbull, Samuel Bowles, John Wentworth, Whitelaw Reid, Leonard Swett, and others known to fame, who had been conspicuous Republicans. Some of them have returned to the fold from which they had separated, doubtless prompted by patriotic motives.

I have never acted distinctively with the Democratic party, and unless its methods change and its wisdom is broadened there is little prospect of my revising opinions calmly formed. The country would be materially benefited by a reconstruction of parties, especially since the errors of one seem unhappily contrived to prolong possession of power in the other. Standing between these two great organizations, and exposed to the carpings of the organs of both, who regard independence of party as a crime, is not an agreeable position to occupy; [illegible] suited my politics, because I could not accept either extreme. I have voted on all public measures, without regard to their political origin, according to my convictions of right, and I propose to continue that course until the close of my Senatorial term. Dreams of ambition do not disturb my sleep. When the day for retiring comes, I shall go back to private life, as I came out of it, carrying with me the consciousness of having striven to discharge every duty.

An honorable recognition of the trust generously confided to my keeping by Democratic votes in 1877 requires me to sustain the existing organization of the Senate, for which I disclaim all responsibility. Parts of it are neither agreeable to my taste nor to my judgment. I do not refer to the formation of committees.

In giving this vote it is proper to say, whatever may be the result, that I can accept no honor at the hands of either side. A new administration is starting out under exceptional circumstances. The States were numerically divided at the Presidential election. A few thousand votes separated the two principal candidates in a poll exceeding 9,000,000. Both branches of Congress are almost balanced. The country craves a respite from angry discord, and most of all it needs rest from sectional strife. The voice of patriotism demands peace and fraternal fellowship, North and South, East and West. Every good citizen should desire the success of the administration, for we all ought to have a common interest in the glory and in the greatness of the republic. Measures intended to advance either shall have my cordial support. The President and his Cabinet are entitled to a fair hearing, and to be judged impartially by their acts. If they fail to justify the public confidence, it will be a misfortune which has overtaken other administrations having equally good intentions and prospects.

It follows from what I have said that I shall vote for the formation of all the committees as reported by the Senator from Ohio, except the Committee on the Judiciary. I wish to retain my old place on that committee; and, profoundly thankful to my Democratic friends for the distinguished honor of being placed at the head of that committee, I must decline that position.

MAHONE.

Ben Hill's Parting Salute to the Little Virginia Renegade.

Never before has there been such an exhibition in the Senate, where a gentleman shows his Democracy by going over to the Republicans. I will not defend Virginia; she needs no defense; she has given to the country, and world, and humanity some of the proudest names in history. She holds in her bosom today the ashes of some of the noblest and greatest men that ever illustrated the glories of any country; and I say to the Senator from Virginia that neither Jefferson, nor Madison, nor Henry, nor Washington, nor Lee, nor Tucker, nor any of the long list of great men whom Virginia produced ever accepted a commission to represent one party and came here and represented another party.

(Addressing himself to the Republicans.) I commend him to you. Is there any man on that side of the chamber who doubts the honorable Senator was sent to this body as a Democrat? Is there a man in this vast audience who doubts? Is there a man in Virginia who doubts it? The gentleman himself will not deny it. Up to this hour it was not known on this side the chamber or in the country how the gentleman would vote. The Senator from New York (Mr. Conkling) seemed to have information that somebody who had been elected as a Democrat would vote with the Republicans, and I wanted to find out who that was. It seems I have uncovered him. The Senator (Mr. Mahone) will not rise and say he could have been elected to this Senate as a Republican or if he had given notice that in the organization of this body he would have voted with the Republicans. I have no objection to the gentleman remaining outside the caucus; I have no objection to the gentleman being independent; I have no objection to a man taking every side to a question; but I do object to anybody coming into this high council, sent here by one sentiment, commissioned by one party, professing to be a Democrat, and after he gets here acting with the other party. If the gentleman, as he has very broadly hinted, changed his opinions and his party affiliation (as he had a right to do), he should have gone to the people of Virginia and said: "You believed me to be Democratic when you gave me this position, but I now feel it my duty to co-operate with the Republican party, and I return you the commission you gave me." If the gentleman had done that he could have asked the people of Virginia to renew his commission and he would have had a claim to the title of manhood to which he pronounced himself entitled here in such theatrical style. I have done what the newspapers could not do, what both parties could not do, what the whole country could not do; I have brought out the Senator from Virginia. But now, in the kindest spirit, I make a last appeal to the honorable Senator, whatever other fate befall him, to be true to the trust which the people of Virginia gave him. Whoever else may be disappointed, whoever else may be deceived, I appeal to the gentleman to be true to the people and sentiment of the party which have kindly commissioned him to a seat in this body.

The Free-Trade Movement.

A recent telegram from New York says: Congressman Hurd, of Ohio, is just now very busy in this city organizing free-trade leagues, with the view of making the movement national. He says the intention is to have a league in every State in the Union before the year is out, with the parent society in Washington and the financial and executive bureau here. The campaign is to be pushed something after the fashion of the Land League in Ireland, subordinate societies reporting periodically to headquarters for counsel and instruction. The idea seems to be that the Democrats lost the last Presidential election solely in consequence of the mismanagement of the tariff issue, and it is part of the programme of the new organization to prevent like mismanagement in future. At the same time the aim will be not to make it appear an exclusively Democratic movement, and to that end it is quite likely several Western Republicans will have a place in the management. Mr. Hurd has no doubt that free trade will overtop all other issues in the next Presidential election, and that, as the people need to have clear ideas on the subject, it is not a moment too soon to commence agitating the question. He would not be surprised if the next State election in Ohio would turn on this question. Co-operating with Mr. Hurd are many well-known New York gentlemen of large means, who have only been sentimental free-traders heretofore, but who have pledged themselves to take a more active part in the agitation in future. As soon as the State leagues are thoroughly organized a series of public meetings throughout the country will follow.

Mahone & Co.

The Republican party in the Senate is the "Co." Mahone is the important and commanding member of the firm. The Republicans in the Senate of the United States have formed this partnership with Mahone, whom but recently they denounced as a "traitor" and "repudiator" at the opening of the Garfield administration, in order to give to the incoming administration the flavor of civil-service reform. We are not at this moment dwelling upon the infamy of Mahone, who was purchased by the Republicans, and who, by selling himself, has lost his tenacious hold upon a large portion of the people of Virginia who have admired his courage and fearless independence. Mahone has been goaded by Democrats as well as bribed by Republicans. We will leave Mahone and his treachery to the criticism of others, to the State of Virginia, and to the comments of all men everywhere who love honor and hate treachery, and to the memories that hang about the fate of the man whose price was a mess of pottage. But Mahone's partner and inferior in the firm consists of the Republican Senators of the United States. No Republican United States Senator can hereafter lift up his voice in denouncing repudiation. At the opening of this administration the Republican Executive and the Republican Senate are both placed upon record upon one important question. Garfield chose his Secretary of the Treasury, his Financial Minister, from the most flagrantly repudiating State of the Union, Minnesota; and the Republicans in the Senate, in a body, form a copartnership with the man whom they have all arraigned as a "vile repudiator." The country will not fail to take notice of these facts.

It is expected that many individual members of the Republican organization will be devoted singly to the spoils. It was not expected by the country that by notoriously-corrupt methods the Republican members of the Senate of the United States, together with the recently-elected Vice President of the United States, and by his vote of doubtful legality, and by the sanction of the newly-inaugurated President, whose inaugural address contained such beautiful words concerning the reform of the civil service, the purity of administration, the sacredness of suffrage and idealism in government, would, as one man, wade through corruption to a partnership which they have pronounced ignoble and dishonorable, to the seizure of some party spoils. The firm of Mahone & Co. will take a prominent place in our history, just as the theft of the Presidency, four years ago, will always be conspicuous in our annals.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Bachelors in History.

In antiquity it was considered unpatriotic to remain unmarried. Hence bachelors were subject to peculiar disabilities in the Spartan and Roman code. They were obliged to pay extra taxes, and under Augustus they were barred from the inheritance of real estate, except from their nearest relatives. Only one of our Presidents was a bachelor, and he was a failure. Bachelors are not as successful in life as married men. It is said that one of Washington's associated patriots in the revolutionary struggle was a celibate. All had the influence of marriage and social life. Hence the tendency against wedlock which marks the present day is among the worst features in society. Speaking of marriage, it should be a complete union of affections and of intellectual powers. It may be added, that a man's wife should to a certain degree be his business partner. She should know something of his risks and financial difficulties, and in this way the burden of life is often divided. Walter Scott concealed from his wife his connection with the Bannatynes, which caused his ruin. It is one of the best features in General Grant's character, that he takes his wife along and gives her a full share of those dignities and honors which spring from national gratitude.

Reward for Lost Property.

One P. lost a diamond pin and published in a city paper the following notice: "Lost, $25 reward—A diamond pin. The finder will be paid the above reward by leaving the same at this office." The pin was found by C., who demanded the reward, which was refused. P. then demanded the return of the pin, and, on being refused, brought action in replevin for recovery. Held that the finder, according to the common law, becomes the proprietor in case the true owner does not appear, and meantime his right as finder is a perfect right against all others. And he is entitled to recompense from the owner for his care and expense in its keeping and preservation; but his status as finder only does not give him a lien. Yet, if such owner offers a reward to him who will restore the property, a lien thereon is thereby created to the extent of the reward so offered.—Wood vs. Pierson, Supreme Court, Nebraska.

A LITTLE five-year-old boy astonished his mother one day by urging her to see if his chin whiskers had not commenced to sprout. Another, standing before her and looking up into her face, inquired, "Ma, what's the reason I ain't a man now? I've got a jack-knife and a pocket-book."

FREDDIE went to a funeral. When he returned his mother asked where the text was. He couldn't tell where it was, but he knew what it was, and he repeated it: "He's dead, and they went up the road." The text was, "Man goeth to his long home and the mourners go about the streets."

"I SHOULD like to know," said little Allie, after church one Sabbath, "what makes the minister say what he does always when he reads a hymn." "What does he say?" asked mamma. "Why, he always says 'short Peter,' or 'long Peter,' or some other kind of Peter, when there isn't a word about Peter in the whole hymn!"

Proud bird of the barnyard, blithesome and free,
A murderous bludgeon is hovering o'er thee—
A fleet-footed urchin, a hard-hearted bub,
Will hit you a rap with more'n a stuffed club.

And thine own precious head to the block'll be brought.
Then gobble! and gobble! and gobble away,
Thyself will be gobbled at no distant day.

A dinner thou'lt make and cheap sundry hashes;
A breakfast, perhaps, and a light supper, too,
And then be dissolved in a thin, carcass stew.

A YOUNG lady at an evening party found it apropos to use the expression, "Jordan is a hard road to travel," but, thinking that to be vulgar, substituted the following: "Perambulating progression in pedestrian excursion along the far-famed thoroughfare of fortune cast up by the banks of the sparkling river of Palestine, is, indeed, attended with a heterogeneous conglomeration of unforseen difficulties."

Two Women Wedded.

The Boston Herald prints the following strange story from a correspondent at Dover, N. H., and it is given for what it is worth. The writer vouches for its truthfulness: Ten years ago two persons were united in marriage by a Congregational clergyman of this State. The ceremony was performed in a small town not many miles from this city. They lived together as husband and wife for more than nine years, having resided in several different places, a part of the time in this place. A few months ago the wife petitioned for a divorce on the ground that her husband was a woman. On examination it was found to be as she had said. That she dressed in female apparel when she first became acquainted with her, but told her she was a man. It was proved that she was the divorced wife of a merchant of New York, and had one child.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

WEDNESDAY, March 16.—SENATE.—The feature of the day's work in the Senate was the adoption of an amendment to the Tax bill abolishing the publication of delinquent tax lists. Afterward the vote was reconsidered, and a long discussion ensued, but no vote was reached before adjournment. Other amendments made to the bill were as follows: That where a tax deed proves to be invalid the holder can recover only lawful charges, with 8 per cent. interest, and requiring the Treasurer to give ten days' notice of sale of personal property for delinquent taxes.

HOUSE.—The Ryan Election bill was passed by a vote of 54 to 34. A new feature is the provision that all ballot-boxes should be uniform, the box being so arranged that it cannot be shifted by the Election Board itself. The ballots are to be preserved a given length of time, and each ballot is to be numbered by the clerk as it is cast. Mr. Gibson's bill concerning the landlords and tenants, giving the former a lien on the crop, was also passed by yeas, 89; nays, none. The House then proceeded to the discussion of the special order, being the consideration of the bill for a reorganization of the State Prison, which was ordered engrossed for the third reading by yeas, 49; nays, 40.

THURSDAY, March 17.—SENATE.—The Senate to-day finished consideration of the Tax bill on which it has worked for the past month, and immediately took up the bill from the Codification Committee relating to offices and officers. The most important changes over the present Tax law are those doing away with the printing of delinquent lists and taxing semi-annually the gross receipts of foreign insurance companies $3 on $100, and not allowing any deduction for actual losses sustained in the State. A concurrent resolution was adopted instructing the Committee on Fees and Salaries of both houses to draft and report a bill fixing the fees and salaries of public officers in this State.

HOUSE.—The Common Carriers' bill passed the House this morning with but six voting in the negative. The bill provides that there shall be no greater charge for freight carried a less distance than is charged for a longer distance; there shall be no discriminations made among shippers; competing points on a road shall not receive any advantage over other points, and there shall be no charge for switching or transferring cars, except when they are compelled to pay trackage. Section 2 fixes the following rates: For all distances not exceeding twenty-five miles, 6 cents for each 100 pounds; for all distances exceeding twenty-five miles and not exceeding fifty miles, 7 cents for each 100 pounds; for all distances exceeding fifty miles and not exceeding seventy-five miles, 8 cents for each 100 pounds; for distances exceeding seventy-five miles and not exceeding 100 miles, 10 cents for each 100 pounds. Section 8 prohibits railroads from increasing their charges a greater sum than the rate of freight charged by them at the time such freight is offered for transportation. The bill also passed for the protection of sheep husbandry and the taxing and killing of dogs. A constitutional amendment was proposed making the term of all county and State officers four years instead of two, and rendering such officials ineligible for re-election until four years after the expiration of their term. The bill reorganizing the benevolent institutions was ordered engrossed after a sharp partisan fight. The remainder of the day was occupied with the School bill proposed by the Codification Committee, during which the effort failed looking to the abolishment of County Superintendents. A concurrent resolution was adopted for a joint committee to report upon the feasibility of consolidating the State prisons. The House also adopted the Senate concurrent resolution for the Fee and Salary bill.

FRIDAY, March 18.—SENATE.—The Senate during the morning session took up the Tax bill on third reading, reaching a vote early in the afternoon. The bill passed—33 to 11. Some progress was made on the bill relative to offices and officers, and by resolution it was decided to take up the General Appropriation bills on Thursday next. A committee was instructed to inquire into the feasibility of an appropriation for representing the State in the World's Fair of 1883, and a joint resolution was introduced requesting Indiana Congressmen to favor the passage of an amendment to the Federal constitution prohibiting the disfranchisement of citizens of the United States on account of sex, which was read the first time and referred to the Committee on the Rights and Privileges of the inhabitants of the State.

HOUSE.—The House worked the greater part of the day on the School bill, and among the amendments was one reducing interest on the school-fund loans to 6 per cent.; also, permitting half an hour's instruction each day in German. After engrossment the bill passed—55 to 26. A joint resolution was introduced requesting Congressmen to favor an amendment to the Federal constitution for the enfranchisement of women.

SATURDAY, March 19.—SENATE.—The Senate consumed the day with discussing the committee report censuring the management of the Institution for Feeble-Minded Children. The friends of the accused Superintendent claim that he was not permitted to make a defense, and that the judgment of the committee was based on misrepresentations by his enemies. The Superintendent, Ibach by name, has never been present, owing to the terrible illness culminating in the death of his son, Charles L. Ibach, with trichiniasis. For these reasons Ibach's friends demanded an investigation, and, although this was voted down, they prevented any definite action against him during the day.

HOUSE.—The House closed this week by engrossing a number of bills and making the proposed change in the jury system the special order for Tuesday. The bill passed providing for the purchase of school books for indigent children; also allowing fees for State witnesses in criminal cases, and the bill was engrossed making Washington's birthday a legal holiday.

MONDAY, March 21.—SENATE.—The Senate was without a quorum, but it spent its time on the bill relating to public officers and offices. The bill was drafted by the Revision Committee under the old law requiring fees and salaries of public officers to be granted according to the population of counties. One of the constitutional amendments submitted to the people at the recent election wiped out this law, and it is now left with the present Legislature to provide what the fees and salaries shall be. The vote thereon showed no quorum. During the afternoon all matters relating to fees were referred. Consideration of the report of the committee on the Feeble-Minded Institute went over until Wednesday.

HOUSE.—The House attempted to pass the Whipping-Post bill, but the measure failed for want of a constitutional majority. The bill passed providing that County Auditors shall file a duplicate list of school bonds with the State Auditor, so that in case of fire a record may remain; and the bill was engrossed taking from the Grand Jury small felony cases and misdemeanors, and conferring jurisdiction upon Peace Justices. The bill exempting private libraries from taxation was killed because it was unconstitutional. Bills were introduced, preventing the pollution of water in canals and streams and fixing the terms of Criminal Court Prosecutors at four years. The bill prohibiting the receipt of life insurance applications on the tontine plan was indefinitely postponed.

The returns from the special election on the amendments, held last Monday, were completed to-day, and to-night Gov. Porter issued his proclamation declaring the amendments adopted. The vote on the several amendments is as follows:

	For.	Against.
First	123,736	46,976
Second	124,062	45,826
Third	128,038	40,161
Fourth	126,170	42,163
Fifth	129,731	36,343

The highest vote cast was on the first, 169,711; the lowest on the sixth, 158,094.

TUESDAY, March 22.—SENATE.—The Senate voted down a proposition to adjourn sine die on April 4, after a lingering debate, in which both parties charged bad faith in delaying public business. A resolution was adopted ordering night sessions. Resolutions were offered prohibiting the sale of liquors, and providing for female suffrage. Another amendment was suggested, empowering women to practice law. Numerous new bills were introduced: Empowering married women to apply for alimony; making township Trustees superintendents of roads; to regulate and license the sale of spirituous, malt and other intoxicating liquors, prescribing penalties for intoxication, and providing for the recovery of damages for injuries growing out of sales of intoxicating liquors, and requiring police officers and constables to see this act enforced; providing subjects for dissection. Senators Spann and Menzies were appointed a conference committee to confer with the House on Tax-bill amendments. Consideration of the bill relative to officers and offices took up the remainder of the afternoon and night session. The only bill passed was one legalizing ordinance 60 of the town of Edinburg.

HOUSE.—The House objected to the Senate amendments to the Tax bill and a conference committee was appointed, which resulted in the Senate receding from the clauses abolishing the publication of delinquent lists, and taxing foreign insurance companies on gross receipts. The House, therefore, agreed to the amendment prohibiting the employment of ferrets, and the report was unanimously accepted. A bill was passed providing for a special May election in Indianapolis on the erection of a market-house, and the one fixing the salary of the Adjutant General at $1,800 per year, and his assistant $800, was defeated. The bill abolishing constructive mileage for Sheriffs on serving notices passed, and a resolution in memoriam of the late ex-Speaker, John U. Pettit, of Wabash, was unanimously adopted. A bill was introduced prohibiting cities on rivers from charging dockage or wharfage, the plea being made that the charges now collected along the Ohio river from steamboats was proving a serious bar to inland commerce. A bill was also introduced prohibiting corporal punishment in schools, and providing that pupils may be suspended for habitual idleness, insubordination or gross immorality. Two witnesses are necessary for suspension, and the right of appeal is given to the County or State Superintendent. The House refused to reconsider the vote by which the School bill was passed. Bills were passed: Relating to the manner of choosing Township Trustees; amending section 26 of the Fee and Salary act; authorizing railroad companies to construct and operate telegraph lines for commercial purposes; and authorizing the construction of bridges over county boundary lines.

WEDNESDAY, March 23.—SENATE.—The Senate concurred in the report to-day censuring the management of the Institute for Feeble-Minded Children, and accepted the result of the conference on the Tax bill. A bill passed repealing the act establishing a Superior Court in Cass county, but the one against "hay-fork" swindlers and others of that ilk failed for want of a constitutional majority. Consideration of the bill relative to offices and officers absorbed the afternoon. An amendment was accepted requiring County Commissioners to file a $5,000 bond. A bill passed amending the Discount act so that the capital of a bank may be reduced at any time, and one concerning the Liberty and Richmond Turnpike Company. Among the bills introduced was one enabling medical colleges to secure subjects for dissection.

HOUSE.—The House passed a road law to-day remodeling the present system of the State, creating a Road Superintendent for each township, assessing $2 on each able-bodied citizen in lieu of labor, and exempting incorporated towns and cities from road service. An iron-clad medical bill also passed, being a compilation of several bills pending in the House, and differing from the bill passing the Senate in every material respect; all physicians must secure license by June, 1882, from the Circuit Court; the Board of Examiners provided by the Senate bill were thrown aside. The bill providing for the appointment of Fish Commissioners passed, as did the Evansville Bridge bill. The State House bill was engrossed, appropriating $100,000 from the general fund, and authorizing a levy of 2 cents on each $100 for 1881 and 1882. The Jury bill raising the per diem of jurors to $2 per day, and allowing 5 cents mileage, was passed in lieu of the one vetoed by the Governor.

THURSDAY, March 24.—SENATE.—The Senate passed the bill providing for the survey of drainage routes in the Kankakee swamp lands. This bill is based on the Governor's recommendation that such survey be made, the estimated cost of which is placed at the maximum figure of $5,000. Bills passed: Legalizing the incorporation of the Baptist Association in Gibson county and the Union Christian College in Sullivan county; amending the act incorporating the Indianapolis Insurance Company (now the Bank of Commerce), making stockholders liable for three times the amount of stock; providing for reinvestment of Purdue University funds in 5-per-cent. twenty-year State bonds; and providing for but one voting precinct in towns of less than 2,000 population. The Indianapolis Police Judge bill met with strong opposition, and went over until to-morrow. An amendment was adopted adding Physician-of-the-Poor duties to the Health Officer, without additional pay. A joint committee was instructed to visit the Kankakee region next week to inspect and report upon the drainage question.

HOUSE.—The House amended the pending bill relative to temporary loans by providing that the maturing bonds now held by Purdue University shall be replaced by the State with bonds bearing date April 1, 1881, running ten years with 5 per cent. interest. The bill was then engrossed. Numerous bills were then passed, among them a bill increasing the bond of Poor-Farm Superintendents to $5,000; enlarging the limit of taxation from 33 cents to 45 cents on the $100 in Marion county; prohibiting the destruction of wild deer and making the killing a crime at any season of the year, and compelling railways to fence tracks against straying cattle. Several hours were given to the Civil Code bill and 260 sections were disposed of, leaving 600 to be considered. Amendments were accepted making a change of venue in cases where local prejudice is alleged discretionary with the Judge and prohibiting the payment of special Judges' services save where the regular Judge is incapacitated by sickness from attending court. The Mechanics' Lien bill passed, being a codification of all the old laws, with additional provisions enlarging the rights of mechanics and empowering a mechanic having a lien to file notice with the County Recorder instead of employing an attorney.

AT the beginning of the eighteenth century the English language was spoken by less than eight millions of people; at the beginning of the nineteenth by only twenty millions, and now with one-fifth of the century yet before it in which to spread, it is the mother tongue of ninety millions.

THE SYMPTOMS

of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels alternately costive and lax; Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; Debility, Low Spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a dry Cough often mistaken for Consumption.

Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

CARTER HARRISON has been renominated for mayor of Chicago, and it is confidently predicted that with him at the head of the municipal ticket, the democrats are certain to carry the coming city election.

THE national banks that sent in their money to redeem their bonds and retire their circulation, now want to get their money back, but are informed that it can't be done. They are now mourning their hasty action. Hayes was the only one they could scare.

YOUNG KALLOCH, who killed Charles DeYoung, editor of the San Francisco Chronicle last year, has just been acquitted, the jury giving him the benefit of a plea of temporary insanity. After Kalloch left the court-room his friends took the horses from his carriage and drew it themselves, hauling him home with the wildest enthusiasm. California does nothing by halves. But DeYoung's friends would have done the same by him had he succeeded in killing the elder Kalloch.

THE Butler Record comes out with a prospectus of "the Solid South," the successor of the "Okalona States." It is very proper for republian papers to back up this maudlin rebel sheet, so as to keep the old sores of the war running as long as possible. It is their stock in trade. Without republican support no such publication could live, for there is no such sentiment existing as the paper advocates, and these dregs of the rebellion have no sympathizers outside of the republican party.

THE village of Moodus, on the Connecticut river, has been greatly excited of late over the renewal of the famous "Moodus noises." These have been heard at intervals ever since the earlist settlement of the country, and seem to be something like the rumbling of an earthquake, changing at times to violent explosive sounds in the air. The cause of these phenomena has never been explained. They were formerly attributed to witchcraft and other supernatural agencies.

THE president having nominated Robertson to the collectorship of the port of New York, Conkling and other stalwarts are disgruntled, and have half a mind not to help Mahone elect his friends to any of the senate offices. Roscoe wants it understood that his mortgage on the Empire state is a first lien.

FRANCE, Spain and other foreign countries are just now trying to prevent the importation of American pork, claiming that it is largely diseased. It is believed, however, that this is only a device to keep our pork out of their markets, as we can produce a better and cheaper article than they can. The treasurer of the United States has prepared a statement showing that there is no greater amount of diseased meat in the American article than in the foreign. Trichina, the disease about which all the trouble is raised, exists in all parts of the world where hogs are produced.

THE governor has issued his proclamation announcing the ratification of the constitutional amendments. So the constitution of the state is changed by the affirmative vote of about one-fourth of the voters of the state. Last fall the vote of Indiana was over 460,000. This spring the number voting on the amendments was 166,000, and the average majority about 80,000. In short, about 120,000 voters wanted the change, and came out and voted for it; about 40,000 were sufficiently opposed to them to come to the polls and vote against them. The remaining two-thirds did not care enough about it to come out. Certainly no one can claim that this is the way the constitution of a state should be changed. The meager attendance at the polls shows conclusively that there was no pressing demand for a change.

The commissioners of Koscuisko county have opened the different bids for their new court-house. Jas. Lillie, of Ft. Wayne, made the highest estimate, his bid being $208,115; and Hiram Iddings, of Kendallville, the lowest, his being $167,500, both bids being to complete the entire work. The bids being higher than was expected, the commissioners took a few days to decide what to do.

Neighborhood Nippings.

They are getting ready for the next state election in Ohio.

Fort Wayne is now luxuriating in new onions, radishes, lettuce and other "garden sass."

Bryan, Ohio, expects to get a north and south railroad running from Cincinnati to Mackinaw.

It is claimed that more than 10,000 persons are now applicants for different Federal offices within the gift of the president.

Eight cases of small-pox are reported at Monroeville, and several cases of measles. As a consequence, but little business can be done.

St. Joseph county is to have a joint-stock agricultural society known as the Northern Indiana Agricultural Society. How does that name strike Ft. Wayne?

A man named Boyles had his leg broken while sawing wood in Hicksville. A log rolled on him and crushed the limb so badly that amputation was necessary.

South Bend is in a fair way to get the division shops of the Grand Trunk railroad. This will add materially to the already large manufacturing interests of the place.

The Wabash road having decided to remove their shops from Fort Wayne to Antioch, the ground at the latter place has been laid out, and other preparations made for the erection of the new buildings.

The first marriage license in Whitley county was issued to Jacob Kistler and Sophia Paine, and bears date September 1, 1838. The couple were married by Edwin Cone, then an acting justice of the peace.

The Middlebury Record has a pithy article on the evils of office-seeking. Had that four-dollar-a-day-clerkship bird alighted in the editor's hand, we fear its readers would have missed seeing the above-named article. Give us a rest, Brother H., you can do better on some other subject.

The large woolen mills at Columbus, Indiana, valued at $50,000, burned down last Saturday morning. The watchman, John Keating, perished in the flames while vainly endeavoring to save the property of his employers. The building and contents were insured for about half their value.

We copy the following from the Indianapolis Sentinel of March 25. The deceased was a brother of Thomas R. Grant, of Garrett, Indiana: "Early yesterday morning Charles W. Grant, an old engineer on the L, B. and W., met with a sad death in the yards of that road, just across the river. For a week or so past Mr. Grant has been acting as switchman in the yards, as he had just returned from the west and was unable to get an engine. On Wednesday he told the yardman that he would not work after Thursday as a switchman, as he was afraid he would be killed. Yesterday morning he went to work, and while switching some cars his foot caught in a "frog," and before he could extricate it the cars passed over him fearfully cutting his body. He was picked up by his fellow-workmen, and all that could be was done for him, but his wounds were of such a nature that he soon died. The coroner will hold an inquest to-day."

A man at Mishawaka named Wesley Hopkins met some little girls going to a store to get castor-oil. He persuaded them to entrust him with the money, fifteen cents. A mob gathered around him, accusing him of an intention to keep the money. A row ensued, durnig which Hopkins was compelled to give up the money, and ordered to leave town. This he agreed to do, but the crowd kept increasing; the most zealous of them began kicking and striking Hopkins, knocking him down and bruising and beating him brutally. They tied a rope around him in order to duck him in the race, but finally let him go. He went to a physician, had his wounds dressed, and was then taken to his mother's house, but lived only three days. It is claimed that Hopkins was a worthless character, but this does not excuse the action of the set of rowdies who assaulted him. Such scenes are more worthy of the mining camps of the far west than of our own boasted civilization.

ECKHART CARRIAGE WORKS.

An Important Enterprise.

[From the Butler Record.]

One of the most important branches of industry in this county to-day is the Eckhart Carriage Works, located one-half mile east of Auburn. Important because the work manufactured is first-class, and always warranted. Charles Eckhart, the proprietor, is a practical mechanic, and is competent to build a carriage from the rough to completion, including the painting and trimming, and knows therefore when his work is properly constructed. Several years ago Mr. Eckhart started his shop in a room in his dwelling, and the first work done was for Herman Froehlich, of Waterloo, but his work has been such as has given him a reputation in this and adjoining counties, and to-day his shops and ware-rooms cover over ten thousand square feet, and his manufactory is the largest and most complete of any within fifty miles. His workmen are employed by the year and he carries the largest stock in northern Indiana. His show-room to-day is filled with carriages and buggies, and is open to all who desire to invest. The trimmer, Mr. F. J. Stierheim, is a gentlemen of many years experience in the best shops of the country, and more perfect, substantial work can be found nowhere elsewhere in the state. Of one thing the people of DeKalb can be assured, and that is, that Mr. Eckhart never misrepresents, and when a purchases is made of him, the purchaser can depend upon it that he has not been misled. The farmer or business man who would board a railroad car knowing that it was unsafe and liable to come to pieces at any time, would be considered very reckless, and the man who would place his children or family on such a car would be deemed cruel, and so it is with the shoddy buggies which are sent to this county from Cincinnati and other points, only they are more dangerous than the cars, the engineer having control over his engine, but the frightened horse is not always controlled. The careful, judicious man, who has a care for himself and family, purchase first-class work, and of men of character whose warrants are good. Gentlemen from other counties, and other states, are patronizing the Eckhart Carriage Works, for the reason that they have confidence in the proprietor. The material from which the work is built can be seen by anyone who may take the trouble to examine. Steel tires alone are used on the wheels, and everything that goes to make up a carriage or buggy, is of the most substantial. We refer at length to this establishment because it is worthy of praise and patronage, and the day is not far distant when it will rank with the most extensive manufactories in the country.

Painting and Kalsomining.

We wish to say to the citizens of Auburn and the surrounding country who want work done in our line, such as painting, graining, kalsomining, whitewashing and paper-hanging, that we are prepared to do the same on short notice and at low rates. Also sign writing and carriage painting in the latest styles. Rooms over Sthair's blacksmith shop, Auburn, Indiana.

—The W. F. M. S., of the Methodist church, will meet in the lecture-room next Saturday afternoon at two o'clock, sharp. After the usual business has been transacted, the society will proceed to elect officers for the ensuing year. Their third annual meeting will be held on next sabbath evening in the audience room of the church. The programme for the evening, will consist of addresses, recitations, essays, etc. Free to all. MRS. ENOS CASEBEER, Sec'y.

—The assessors of the several townships will meet at the auditors office, April 15, to agree upon a uniform rate of assessment, etc. The new law requires them to complete the assessment this year, between the 15th of April and the 15th of June. Another new feature of the law is, that the judge of the circuit court appoints four freeholders of the county, who, together with the board of commissioners and auditor, form the board of equalization.

—C. H. Brown closed his fifth term of school in district No. 1, Jackson township, last Friday. Mr. Brown has had charge of the school there for the last five winters, making four hundred days in all. In fact, it is the only school he ever taught. The closing exercises were attended by all the people in the district. Speeches were made by Mr. Brown, Mr. McIntosh and Trustee Brandon. The picnic passed off pleasantly, as did also the concluding entertainment in the evening. The pupils leave the school with sad hearts, for it has been to them a most pleasant and profitable term. It speaks well for the district, as well as for the teacher, when the same teacher is employed term after term. It is to be hoped that other schools will adopt the same plan.

—It is a nest of prostitution, of vile practices, constant quarrels bickerings, contains more old topers than any place we know of, a gamblers' paradise, and is the wickedest place we know of for its size, has but one church and one Sunday-school, and these are not attended and supported as they should be.

The above is from the Hicksville Republican and has reference to Syracuse, Indiana. Brother Eveland's son-in-law started a republican paper there, and busted wide open after a few publications, hence all this pawing and frothing. If Syracuse is one-half as bad as the editor of the Republican would like to make out, we think the citizens there have displayed very good sense in not supporting a republican paper. Good Lord, what would become of such a community with a republican paper as their educator?

Teachers' Association.

The Graded School Teachers' association will hold its third meeting in the Auburn high school room, on Saturday, April second. Papers will be presented and read on various educational subjects, and many topics of interest and importance will be discussed. A cordial invitation is extended to all who are interested in schools to attend this meeting. Exercises will commence promptly at 10 o'clock a. m.

W. H. MCINTOSH, Pres.

Medical Society.

The medical society held a meeting at the soldiers' hall on Tuesday of this week. Quite a number of the profession, from our sister towns were in attendance, among whom we noticed Drs. Teal and Gilbert, of Kendallville; Drs. Wood and Crane, of Angola; Drs. Chamberlain, Darby and Stough, of Waterloo; Dr. Murphy, of Spencerville; Dr. Schutt, of Avilla and Dr. Spooner, of Peru, and of course, all the resident members of the profession. Dr. Gilbert, of Kendallville, read a paper on "Protintis," which was quite generally discussed. Dr. Wood, of Angola, read an interesting report of a case of injury to the skull. After some other business, the society adjourned to meet at Kendallville the last Tuesday in June next.

Waterloo.

Day Bro's. open out in good style.

H. T. Smith is still confined to his bed.

Young & Sparks have dissolved partnership.

Charlie Clark is getting on a new stock of goods.

Mrs. James Trail, south-west of town died last Friday.

No great excitement as yet, about the village election.

Sadie Johnson is bringing on her new stock of spring goods.

Nettie Chamberlain went to Auburn last Saturday to visit friends.

Miss Lida Welch, of Ligonier, was in town last week visiting friends.

It is rumored that Mr. Leo Caro will make Waterloo his future home.

The M. E. social was entertained last evening by Mrs. Samuel Moody.

W. B. Johnson & Co. have had their store room painted and put in shape.

Go and see the logs at McCague's mill: you may never see the like again.

The marshal has scraped the streets, and the new snow covers them like a blanket.

The old soldiers will have a festival and hard tack supper at Butler to-morrow evening.

Miss Florence Jackman who has been sick since the burial of her sister, is still quite ill.

Mrs. B. F. Kennedy went to Fort Wayne Tuesday, to lay in a new stock of goods.

Swartz, the butcher, has a new sign.

Brand & Duncan have a fine new delivery wagon.

'Squire Stevens has qualified, and is now ready to administer justice, marry folks and 'sich'.

Mrs. J. J. Martin, of Auburn Junction, spent a part of last week visiting relatives in this place.

W. H. Leas is over head and ears in business. Among other things, we see he has added a farm to his assets.

The entertainment Monday evening was said to be very good, but the bad weather prevented a full attendance.

Ab. Kelley expects to have over one hundred gallons of maple syrup this spring. Therefore Ab. looks happy.

Mrs. W. H. Sudlow, having completed her visit in Waterloo, has returned to her home in Carrollton, near Saginaw, Michigan.

There was a temperance lecture on the street Tuesday afternoon, and one by the same person at the disciple church in the evening.

The Presbyterian social will be entertained by Mrs. J. A. Barns, Wednesday afternoon and evening of next week. All are cordially invited.

Marshal Hoover was made the recipient of a fine gold headed cane, on the anniversary of his sixty-fourth birthday, the givers being his children.

St. Joe.

Another man in St. Joe is happy, Geo. Bleaks—its a boy.

Wm. Leighty, our jolly host of the St. Joe hotel, has been badly afflicted for the past few days.

J. D. Leighty attended the annual convocation of Scottish Rite Masonry, at Indianapolis last week.

The usual time for working will soon be here; already the grumblers are busy about having to work out their poll tax.

Two men, who are surely old enough to know better, got too full of west end benzine on last week Monday, and the usual whisky row was the consequence.

Nelson Thomas and Clyde R. Woodcox have succeeded in getting a position on the train, of which Marion Teagardes is conductor. The boys are now at Defiance, Ohio.

Mark Barney was off on a visit three days last week, taking in Auburn, Ft. Wayne, Antwerp and Defiance. Mark got around all right Wednesday morning, but oh! how sad he looked.

James Ferell, the heaviest man in St. Joe, will move to Concord this week. Jim has secured a position on Pat Campbell's construction train, which necessitates a move, to be nearer his work.

Case & Olds are putting up an addition to their store, and we are informed that they intend to put in a good stock of agricultural implements. Success to you gentlemen, in your new line of business.

Nelson Thomas has gone to work for the B. & O. again, after a short absence. Nelson is a good railroad man and has worked for the company a great deal. We are glad to learn that they appreciate his services.

A sad and fatal accident happened near this place on last Thursday. Wilson Widney, one of St. Joe's most promising young men, while in the woods chopping, was hit upon the head and shoulders by a falling limb, which caused his death the same night at two o'clock. The particulars are about as follows: Wilson and his father were in the woods together felling trees, and had just felled one which, in its descent, fell against another which bent over but soon gave away. When it sprang back, its re-bound threw the limb which caused the accident. His father saw the limb and gave him warning, but too late. The father was but a few feet away when the accident occurred. Wilson was a young man in his 23d year, and was esteemed by all who knew him. His sad misfortune has cast a gloom over the whole neighborhood.

James Foley, a railroad man, took it into his head to knife Isaac Meese, and would undoubtedly have accomplished it, had not Meese took to his heels. As it was, Foley ran him sixty or eighty rods, where they both halted, when Foley put up his knife and Meese went for him with a weight which he obtained from the counter of E. Fales. Missing Foley with the weight which he threw, Foley pitched into him and had Meese whipped so he cried "enough!" In a short time the bystanders took Foley off, and Meese, getting hold of a stick of wood, made for Foley again, and succeeded in getting the best of him, and would have used him up, had the bystanders not interfered. It is understood that when court meets again, there will be a shaking among the boys who are in the habit of frequenting the saloon at the west end. One thing is certain, such scenes as were enacted on our streets last week, should not go unpunished if there is any law that will reach such cases.

Spencerville.

Charley Emanuel was visiting under the parental roof from Wednesday until Friday, of last week, when accompanied by his brother Gerry, he went to Cecil, Ohio.

Miss Alice McKay, of Auburn, has brought her stock of millinery goods to Spencerville, and is located at the residence of Mr. John Provines.

Mr. Mason Long, the reformed gambler, of Fort Wayne, lectured at the Methodist church last Monday evening.

Coroner's Inquest.

I, the undersigned coroner of DeKalb county, state of Indiana, on the 25th day of March, 1881, in the town of Butler, said county, and legally authorized to inquire and true presentment make, in what manner, and by whom Frank Anderson came to his death. DOUCE.

She was so quiet and gentle in voice and manner that her family called her "douce" (sweet), and Douce was her name to all her neighbors.

She had been christened Helen, but to all intents and purposes the nickname was the only one by which she was known. She was not a pretty girl so far as features and complexion went, but with nothing mawkish or insipid about her, as might be inferred from her name.

The tones of her voice were so even, her movements so quiet and deliberate, that you could not understand how Douce was the ruling mind in a family of six children, five of them boys, and unruly ones at that. But the truth was she was the most daring of all of them, though she would climb the tallest tree and ride the most dangerous horse with the same calm composure of manner.

Her mother had been an invalid for many years, and her father, a prosperous merchant at the little town of Oakport, about two miles from his residence, was too busy a man to do more than pass his nights at home, generally too tired when he reached there to spend much time in social intercourse with his family.

Mr. Turean's residence, as I have said, was about two miles from town, but one mile was through a thick, swampy forest, very bad walking in rainy weather, and dark and dismal enough even on a summer's morning.

It bore, too, an evil reputation among the country people in the neighborhood, for fifteen years before a peddler had been robbed and killed there, and his body had been found near an old rotten log by the roadside. On a large beech tree which overhung the spot had been carved by some boy, "Here Amos Crowe was murdered."

Of course, the ghost of the peddler was presumed to haunt the spot, and, as the murderer had not been discovered, the ignorant, superstitious people of the neighborhood all believed the spirit would never rest in its grave until the criminal who did the deed was brought to justice.

To the little Tureaus, these woods were a perpetual delight. Such nutting, such berries, such persimmons were found there, that, in spite of a thrill of terror when they passed the spot of the sad tragedy, nothing short of a visible apparition would have kept them from the woods.

Douce, who feared neither man nor ghost, was always their leader in these expeditions. At 16 she was as fond of swinging on grapevines and mounting to the top of tall trees as when she was 10. This sounds as if Miss Douce Turean was rather tomboyish; but she did these things so gravely and quietly that somehow no one thought of reproving her for her gymnastic feats.

"Let Douce alone," said her father. "She has a wary eye, and a firm, strong grasp, and she'll never come to harm. It is not a ladylike amusement for a young girl to climb trees, but she is not a tomboy, and does not climb them because she is of a rough, masculine nature. It is, perhaps, an eccentricity, and in her case I accept it when I should not in some other children. Besides, it strengthens her muscles and makes her hardy."

One fine September morning, Mrs. Turean astonished them all by insisting upon walking to town with her husband.

"The walk is too long for you, Mary," he remonstrated.

"No, indeed," she answered, "I feel equal to it, and I prefer the walk to riding. I will spend the day with Cousin Jane, and be quite rested when you return in the evening. The cook (Dora), too, wants to go to town to spend the day and night with her sister."

"As you please; but if Dora is going, who will stay at home with the children? We shall not get back until after dusk, you know."

"You're not afraid to stay here with the children, Douce, are you?" asked her mother.

"Afraid? Why, mamma, I did not suppose you thought me such a foolish coward! What can harm us?"

Of course it did not seem as if there could be anything to harm them in that quiet place; so, after an early breakfast, the children walked part of the way to town with their parents. Douce stood and looked after them as they left, with a strange heart-sinking, she afterward said.

"I thought it was because mamma was always at home," she said. "The house would seem so lonely without her. But then, I was so glad to see her able to walk again that I could not understand my depressed feeling.

There was a deal of work to be done that day. The house was to be cleaned, churning done, and Douce thought she would surprise her father and mother by a nice tea when they returned. Assisted by her sister Alice, a girl of 12, she was still hard at work when the clock struck 12.

"Is it possible?" she cried, "noon already, and not a thing cooked for dinner! Well, children, there's bread and cold meat and some jam in the safe, and we'll make a cup of tea and have a picked-up dinner."

Picked-up dinners, with tea and jam, are things not to be despised by children. They sat down, a merry, noisy party, to the table.

"Hush, children!" cried Alice, "don't you hear somebody knocking at the hall door?"

"One of the neighbors, I suppose," said Douce. "Go, Arthur, and see who it is."

In a few minutes the boy returned, breathless.

"It's a horrid old man," he cried, "with a gray beard, and such a red face, and such dirty hands! and he asked for the master of the house, and I told him pa was in town, and he said he must see you, Douce, or somebody."

Douce felt her heart beat a little quicker when she reached the hall door and saw a repulsive, grimy-looking man, who had seated himself on the gallery.

"Well, sissy," he said, with an insolent grin, "I'm desperate hungry, and I reckon you've got to come across some meat and bread fur me. Better fetch it quick lest I take a bite at you."

The tone was one of command, and, after a little pause, Douce saw that she must obey.

"Better not be too scared to bring my vittles!" he called out, "or maybe I'll foller you in spite of locks!"

Douce felt that the locks would be of little avail if the man chose to enter the house. She hurriedly filled a plate and carried it to him.

"This is all we have in the house," she said, quietly.

Without a word he seized it, and Douce watched him ravenously devouring the food like some wild animal.

"Got any whisky or wine?" he growled.

"No; nothing but milk," and she brought him a pitcher full. She tried to appear unconcerned, snipping the dead leaves off of her geraniums, and whistling to the mocking-bird in the cage; but she knew the hard gray eyes were watching her every movement.

"Aint you scared, gal, to be left here alone?" the tramp said, as he rose and slung his dirty bundle over his shoulder.

"What would harm me?" she said, with a faint laugh. "My parents will soon be back."

The man then went boldly into the hall, and Douce saw him look up stairs and into the rooms on the lower floor. She tried to appear cool and indifferent; but when he marched out of the house without a word of farewell or thanks she felt like uttering a cry of relief. She watched him disappear in the woods, and then returned to the frightened children.

This unexpected incident cast a gloom over her spirits that she could not throw off. A sudden shower of rain came up late in the afternoon, and she began to fear her parents would remain at Oakport all night. The rain, however, held up before sunset, and her mind was made up that she and the children must not remain alone in the house that night. She felt assured that the tramp would return.

Without expressing her suspicions, she said to Alice, "I must run to Oakport, if you don't mind staying a little while alone with the children."

"But what do you mean by going at this hour?" cried Alice. "Pa and ma will be on their way back, I reckon."

"It's a great secret!" and Douce laughed, or tried to laugh. "You'll know all about it when I get back."

She left the house and walked rapidly until she got to the woods, but then, turning from the path, she moved cautiously, looking on every side, and with the stealthy step of an Indian.

About half way through the woods she paused and looked intently before her.

Then quickly she seized a vine and swung herself into a magnolia tree that was so draped by the gray Spanish moss that even its leaves could hardly be discerned.

When seated on the tree she was completely hidden from view. Soon after there was a crackling among the bushes, and two men came in view, one of them her friend of the morning, and the other quite as wicked looking. They were lounging slowly along, pausing every now and then, and their words came distinctly to her.

"Think he'll be back to-night?" said one.

"Of course. He's left his children all alone, and he and the ole ooman will be sure to go back. Wish he'd left her at home. Two 'stead of one, and one on 'em a squally ooman, is hard to manage."

"Did you see the money? Maybe he'll leave it in his store."

"Got it arter the bank shut up. Col. Sparks, he counted it out, $300, and I heerd Turean say, 'Reckon I'd better take it home to-night, as they say there's tramps in town.' Didn't know I was listenin' outside."

"What's the best place to wait for him?" said Douce's acquaintance.

"The best place, where you kin see furthest, is the peddler's tree. You take your stand there, and I'll watch near town, and foller him behind. When he comes up, you ax for a dime, and I'll be ready if he kicks up a row when we eases him of a few more dimes."

"I don't want to do any killin' ef it can be helped," said the other ruffian. "We kin gag the ooman. But look here, Dick, I don't like doin' the job on that spot. They say Amos is a-walkin' round of a night, and maybe the ghost will appear."

"You're a blasted fool!" cried Dick. "You git to your post, and don't be a sneak!"

They separated, Dick going toward town, and the other slouching slowly along in the other direction.

Douce's heart beat like a sledge-hammer. She could not go to town, for the only path was blocked up by the ruffian. She felt sure her parents would be murdered, for she knew that her father would resist to the death. By this time, they must be on the way.

Thought after thought surged through her brain as she sat there, when, suddenly remembering the tramp's terror of ghosts, an inspiration came to her.

She knew a short cut to the peddler's tree. In a few minutes, she had descended, and was gliding through the bushes. No one was at the tree, and she had hidden herself in it when the tramp appeared, looking timidly around him.

He stopped nearly under the branches and looked down the road. Twilight was passing into darkness when Douce heard steps approaching, and her father's voice.

She was dressed in white, and, taking off her apron, she tied it around her head. As the man was preparing to advance, she uttered an unearthly groan, and dropped at his feet.

He gave one look and a screech, and, taking to his heels, flew like the wind. His companion, who was behind, not knowing what had happened, joined in the flight, and neither of them were seen again.

Douce's explanations were soon made, and her father never wearies of telling the story to every one. He firmly believes that her love of climbing led to something useful after all, though quickness of mind and quiet movements should count for something in the story of that evening.—Youth's Companion.

Something of Millionaire Mackay.

Mr. Mackay, as most Americans are aware, is a Scotchman by birth, his native town being Airdrie, Lanarkshire. I had known his family all my life, and last spring had many long talks with his brother, Robert Mackay, who is a member of a large engineering firm in his native town, and is regarded as one of the greatest practical mechanics living. But Mr. Mackay is a very unselfish and modest man, otherwise he might have been as rich to-day as his brother. Though he has experimented and invented all his life, he has never sought to reap the just rewards of his talents. He is content with discovering new methods of applying force and to let other people reap the benefit. And the United States are not a little indebted to his inventive genius. He it was, in conjunction with a Mr. Gray, who first constructed a locomotive for ascending steep grades; and it was from plans furnished by him and explanations given to American mechanics who visited him in Scotland, that the locomotives were built which first crossed the Rocky Mountains. But he is one of those men, as I have said, who set no store by such achievements as these; he speaks of this new invention as if it was a very small matter. Between him and his brother, though remarkably like each other in personal appearance, there is no community of feeling, or even of friendship, far less kinship. The only talent that his brother possessed, to hear him speak of him, was stinginess and the power to close his hand on every penny which crossed it. Of intellectual points he had none worth mentioning, and when young was incapable of cultivating the few he had been endowed with. But it is several years since millionaire Mackay broke off correspondence with his father and mother and family. Of the many times he has visited England during the past ten years, he has never visited his family or his native town. Two years ago, nevertheless, he sent his secretary down from London to Airdrie to inquire after his mother and relatives. This gentleman put up at the Royal Hotel in great state, and after he had abused everybody about the hotel for the meanness of the accommodation they could offer, he sent for his employer's brother, the person I have spoken of above. His surprise may be readily imagined when he was informed by Mr. Mackay that if his brother could not condescend to come to Airdrie in person to see his friends, he would receive no information from him; furthermore, Mr. Secretary was specially instructed to inform his master that since he had forgotten his family so long, the latter had now no better message to convey to him than this, to-wit, that, for all they cared, he could go to a climate where the temperature was always above ninety in the shade, or words to that effect. But I think Mr. Mackay judges his rich brother harshly. Though a man of plain speech, and entirely innocent of all usages of grammar in communicating his thoughts orally, he seems to possess plenty of good, hard, practical sense, and, considering how rich he is, he is certainly not proud; but what he lacks in this latter respect his wife makes up. No Queen that ever lived could be prouder or more imperious than she.—London Correspondent of Buffalo Courier.

Only A Dog.

We were all crying, every one of us. Father declared it was smoke that had got into his eyes and made them smart; but mother threw her apron over her head and sat rocking and sobbing for ten minutes. Phœbe and I just threw ourselves down on the floor by poor Leo, and I took his dear old shaggy head in my lap, and the hot tears dropped one by one; and Phœbe petted his poor old stiff ears and smoothed out his thin, gray hairs; and then we took off the old brass collar that was marked all over with hieroglyphics that we had scratched with pins in the proud days when he first wore it; then we cried again, and just then in, walked Squire Toots, and he didn't seem to know what to do when he saw us all so distressed; he looked at us and then at Leo; then he took out his handkerchief and gave his nose a real Sunday-school blowing, and said kind of huskily:

"Why, it's wicked to feel s' bad. Anybody d' spose it was a pusson; 'taint only a dog!"

That just made us all feel worse! There wasn't any Heaven for him to go to, and we knew we could never see him again, and we couldn't remember any life without Leo, we were such little tots when he came to us, and he had been one of the family all the time. Father used to lecture him just as he did us children. "Where did I see you to-day, sir?" he would say. "Over at Mr. Mason's, associating with that dog that steals! Shame!" And then Leo would whine, and pretty soon father would say: "Go to bed, sir!" and he'd sneak off to his box in the back shed and lay awake all night to protect us while we slept, and he never once in over fourteen years was forgetful of his trust—and he was "only a dog."

Only a dog! Why, was there ever a time that we went racing home from school that Leo hadn't met us half-way to race with us and do all sorts of funny tricks at our bidding, and how proud we had always been of him with his handsome stately presence and superior manners and how safe we felt to hear his deep-chested bark as we went to sleep.

Well, death had found him sure enough, and we buried him out in the grove in a little hollow, where he loved to lie on hot summer days, and there will be no resurrection for him, though there will be for the vilest thief he kept from our doors; but none the less, in looking over his honest, blameless life, in which he was never faithless to any, even the smallest trust, I dare apply to him the Master's meed of praise: "Well done, good and faithful servant;" though as 'Squire Toots said, "He was only a dog."—*M. AN OLD STORY RETOLD.

What the Governor of South Carolina Said to the Governor of North Carolina.

A great many years ago the Governor of North Carolina received a friendly visit from the Governor of South Carolina. After a real North Carolina dinner of bacon and yams the two Governors lit pipes and sat in the shade of the back veranda with a demijohn of real North Carolina corn whisky, copper distilled, within easy reach. "There was nothing stuck up about these Governors," says a North Carolina State historian, in the homely but vigorous language of his section. "There they sot and smoked, and sot and smoked, every once in a while taking a mutual pull at the demijohn with the aid of a gourd which they used as a democratic goblet. The conversation between the two Governors was on the subject of turpentine and rice, the staples of their respective States, and the further they got into the subject the lower down they got into the jug, and the lower down they got in the jug the dryer the Governor of South Carolina got, who was a square drinker and a warm man, with about a million or more pores to every square inch of his hide, which enabled him to histe in a likely share of corn-juice, or other beverage, and keep his carcass at the same time well ventilated and generally always ready for more, while the Governor of North Carolina was a more cautious drinker, but was mighty sure to strike bottom at about the twelfth drink, like as if nature had measured him by the gourdful. Well, they sot, and smoked, and argued, and the Governor of North Carolina was as hospitable as any real Southern gentleman could be, for he ladled out the whisky in the most liberal manner, being particular to give his distinguished guest three drinks to one, and gauging his own dose with great care, for fear that if he didn't he might lose the thread of his argument and the demijohn might run dry before the Governor of South Carolina should be ready to dust out for home, in which case it would look like he had not properly observed the laws of hospitality, which would have been a self-inflicted thorn in his side for years to come, and no amount of apology could ease his mind or enable him to feel warranted in showing his countenance to his fellow-men, especially in his home district, where for generations it had been a main point with every gentleman to keep his visitor well supplied with creature comforts, and to hand him a good gourdful as a stirrup-cup when about to take his departure for the bosom of his family. Singular to relate, the cautiousness manifested by the Governor of North Carolina was of no avail, for at one and the same moment the jug went dry and the Governor of North Carolina, much to his subsequent mortification when he learned the fact afterward, dropped off into a quiet sleep, while the Governor of South Carolina continued to keep on with his argument, holding the empty gourd in his hand in close contagiousness to the demijohn, and wondering at the apparent absent-mindedness of his hitherto-attentive host, to whom, after a minute and a half of painful silence, he made use of but one remark: 'Governor, don't you think it's a long time between drinks?' the remark being overheard by George, the body-servant of the Governor of North Carolina, who, knowing that there was something wrong, took to the woods, where he remained in seclusion for three days, but the Governor of South Carolina, receiving no reply from the Governor of North Carolina, mounted his horse and rode sadly homeward with an irrepressible feeling at his heart that there was coming to be a hollowness in friendship, and that human nature was in danger of drifting into a condition of chaotic mockery."

Ever since the occurrence so touchingly described by the conscientious historian, a common form of invitation to join a social glass has been, "As the Governor of South Carolina said to the Governor of North Carolina, it's a long time between drinks." The form is as efficacious as that used by the itinerant minister when called upon to turn two into one at short notice—"Jine hands."

The Homes of America.

It is not a mere accident that the homes of America are the most comfortable and comforting on earth. Nor are these home comforts due simply to mechanical skill or economic judgment. A country which has limited the powers of its government stimulates society, and highly moral society produces the most perfect homes which human eyes or poetic visions can behold. No one knows the American system well who does not know the American home. Our political system is publicity itself; American society has never yet been fully characterized; while the best result of both, the perfect home, has been praised in general terms, but not described and explained in its true fullness. The novel-writers, from whom such descriptions might be expected, have failed ignominiously in their attempts at showing the maturest results of our social system. Yet this system is unique, and it is a marked advance upon all European models. The English home approaches the American home, while the German home approaches the English; but the ideal American home, not rarely realized, has a comfort, a character and a dignity all its own. It may seem to be wanting in the graces, traditions and responsibilities peculiar to the best English homes; it surpasses them in moral dignity; it differs from all the others in being the result of a highly refined civilization; it is the best and purest outcome of our ethical system. There has been much pleasant banter about the great American novel that is to come. Let it not dwell too much on politics; British politics are larger than ours. Let it not tell too much of busy people; the French are as industrious and industrial as we are. Let it not confine itself to analysis of character or sentiment; other nations have both in abundance. Let it describe the purest and sweetest of American homes and let it describe, not an ideal, but that reality which distinguishes the American home from all others, and shows it to be the best outcome of our history, our political institution and our social system.—Boston Advertiser.

Home.

"I have traveled some little in my day, and I never yet saw the place over the seas where I could say, 'Here will I live and die.' My steps have been arrested by beautiful spots, by savage spots, by great and luxurious cities; a week, a month, I could spend in many, a year in some, and spend it happily; but not life—not all my days. This may be prejudice, but is the only prejudice I have no wish to part with. I know of no pleasure that will compare with going abroad, except one—returning home."—D. Conway.

MR. BEECHER says that one-half the human family are eaters, not producers. Speaking of immigration, he says that there is no fear so long as our institutions have the assimilating power, and when the lion eats the kid he does not turn into kid, but the latter turns into lion. When the children of immigrants get through the public school they are all Americans. The greatest needed revival is not of religion, of temperance, or of commerce, but of common schools.

THREE cotton mills near Augusta, Ga., have during the past four years, with a capital of $1,600,000, paid their operatives in cash $1,560,000, and their stockholders $540,000 in dividends, besides expending $5,673,000 for the purchase of cotton and other material for manufacturing purposes. Such substantial figures as these ought to attract not only capital but intelligent laborers from points where work is scarce.

Shot-Making.

There is a shot-tower in Baltimore, and the American describes the process of making shot. One of the "secrets" of the manufacture is the mixing of lead with a certain proportion of a combination of mineral substances called "temper." The "temper" is fused with lead, and gives the molten metal that consistency which makes it drop. If it were not for the "temper" the lead would be moulded by the sieve, and would form little pencils instead of round shot. When "BB" shot, for instance, are to be made, the lead is poured into a pan perforated with holes corresponding to that size. The little pellets pour down in a continuous shower, and fall. In their descent of two hundred feet they become perfect spheres, firm and dense, and they are tolerably cool when they strike the water, although the swift concussion makes the tank foam and bubble as if water were boiling furiously. The shot must fall in the water, for if they should strike any firm substance they would be flattened and knocked out of shape. It is said that this method of making shot spherical was the invention of the wife of a poor European workman in metals, who had spent months in trying to find how to do it without moulding. To get the little pellets perfectly dry after they have been in the "well" is the most difficult and troublesome process of the whole manufacture.

An elevator with small buckets, very much like those used in flour mills, carries the shot up as fast as they reach the bottom of the "well" and deposits them in a box sixty feet above the first floor. The water drips from the buckets as they go up, and not much is poured into the receiver above, although it is intended to be a sort of dripping machine. From this receiver the shot runs down a spout into a drying pan, which greatly resembles a gigantic shoe, made of sheet iron.

The pan rests at an angle which permits the wet shot to roll down to the chamber below, and the pellets become perfectly dry as they pass over the warm sheet-iron.

The Building of Homes.

Double doors—folding or sliding, are a great social "institution." By them two rooms may be thrown into one. A good broad hall becomes in summer an extra room. The air circulates. There is a freedom, an openness about the house, which gives an air of superiority to even very humble dwellings. The superiority is real, too. If we invite a few friends for the evening, it is not necessary to confine them to the "parlor," but the doors are thrown wide open, our guests will fill parlor and hall and sitting room and kitchen, perhaps, and yet all are one company, for the broad doors being open the whole house is thrown together. Music sounds through such a house delightfully, and people have a good time and love to come, because it is so cheerful and social; even a funeral loses much of its stiffness, so oppressive in the little isolated rooms, if broad halls and doorways connect the mourning company of neighbors in one group. Another point in our home building which we too often overlook is the exposure of the principal living and sleeping rooms to the direct influence of the sun. The effect of the sunlight is best gained when the house stands with its corners toward the cardinal points, for thus the sun shines with considerable power on all sides of the house every clear day in the summer, and yet his power is broken, because at noonday the rays strike two sides obliquely, and very soon leave the southeastern side in the shade. We should not forget that the sunshine is healthgiving; dampness and shade, if slightly in excess, injure the health of both men and animals.

One thing more is the importance of having some provision for fire in the chambers. We build for health and not for sickness, and I do not hesitate to say that many a family mourns the loss of a member simply because the sleeping room could not be easily heated.

The best mode of heating no doubt is by an open fire of some kind. It is very easy in building to make open fire-places in at least those chambers through which the chimney passes. These may be loosely bricked up, if desirable, but so that the flues may be promptly opened in case of illness.

Chimneys ought to be built with separate flues for each principal fire. In that case the chamber fireplaces need never have their flues bricked up, but constantly open, thus affording the best ventilation at all times. Of course open fireplaces are not economical of fuel, but in the chambers fire is seldom wanted, and stoves may be used, if preferred. As to economy of fuel, builders, as well as architects and proprietors, either frequently overlook one important fact, or they do not look at it, that is, that the warmest part of any room is farthest from the floor; so if we make our rooms ten or eleven feet high, we must heat the air in all that upper part before a person sitting at a table begins to feel at all warm, unless he is where he gets radiation from the stove or open fire. Low ceilings effect the greatest economy of fuel, and even make open fires economical as compared with stoves and high ceiling. Notwithstanding that open fires always make good ventilation, while rooms or houses warmed with furnaces and stoves usually have poor ventilation, and often are oppressive, with a stale, nauseous odor, like the dormitory of an orphan asylum. Nine feet is, I think, an extreme height for the ceiling of an ordinary country house, say one in which the largest single room is not more than twenty feet square, or of equivalent area. For houses with rooms of medium size; eight feet is high enough.

Beside, there are other numerous considerations which tend to the saving of fuel, and, at the same time, increase the healthfulness and comfort of a home. Some of these are the material of the walls, their impenetrability to air and moisture, "deafening" of the floors which adds greatly to their warmth, good joiner work about windows and doors, etc.—A Farmer, in American Agriculturist.

"Bob" Toombs Brass Band.

I suppose every one connected in any way with the University of Georgia, says a letter to the Atlanta Constitution, has heard of the famous oak in front of the chapel, and in connection with it I will relate an anecdote of Bob Tombs, showing his impetuous, irresistible nature, which so characterized him in his after life.

Toombs had been attending college two years, and was within a week of graduating, when, in a difficulty, he stabbed one of the students, inflicting a serious, but not fatal, wound. For this act he was expelled by the Faculty, who soon after were petitioned by the graduating class to allow him to graduate with them, as he had so nearly completed his course, and had also been given a speaker's place. Toombs himself petitioned them, but both were refused. He apparently submitted, but on commencement day, when the chapel was crowded with visitors, and the Seniors vehemently orating preparatory to receiving their diplomas, he stationed a brass band under the spreading limbs of the oak, whose music succeeded in bringing scores of town people, who were not then in the chapel, and also of clearing it of nearly all its auditors.

Then, in as cool a manner as possible, he placed himself in a chair and made an oration, such, it is said, as was never spoken by a student here before or since. He never received his diploma, though after his celebrated Boston speech, it was sent him, but was returned with the answer: "D—n the diploma; when it would have been an honor to me I was refused it; now, when I am an honor to it, it is offered me." He was afterward reconciled with the Faculty, and is now one of the staunchest supporters of the college.

An Unsympathetic Crowd.

An excited man rushed into a drug store and exclaimed:

"Oh my! I'm ruined! Give me ten ounces of camphire or whisky. Give me the whisky."

He fell against the counter. His eyes rolled back and his tongue hung out.

"What ails you, man?" He drew back his tongue, said "snake bit," and shot it out again.

"Whisky, snake bite."

"How did you get snake bit?" asked a physician, taking hold of the man's hand and feeling his pulse. The tongue went in and the words "foolin' with a rattlesnake' came out.

"Where did it bite you?"

"Right here," he replied, exhibiting a small black hole on the back of his hand.

"Where did you get the snake?"

"Museum. Gimmy some whisky."

"This hole was made by a lead pencil."

"Lead pencil?" said the victim, contemptuously; "made by the pizen fang of a copperhead.

"Thought it was a rattlesnake?"

"Didn't say it was a rattlesnake. Oh, I'm dying! Dying in a civilized land. Dying within forty miles of home. To think that I have traveled all over the snake countries, and then to come back and be killed by a common black snake.

"Thought it was a coppeahead?"

"Now, here," said the man, untangling his eyes and stiffening himself, "it don't make any difference what you think. I'm dying from the effect of a snake bite. That's about as much as you want to know. A gallon of whisky will save my life. Am I among human beings?"

Just then a red-faced man stuck his head into the store, and yelled:

"Come on, Bill. Them fellows wouldn't care if you was swallowed by a booyconstructor."

The tongue went back into the mouth, the evidence of suffering passed away, and the victim took up his hat and joined his companion.

TRIAL BY JURY.

[From the St. Louis Chronicle.]

Some believe that even this form of trial is not perfectly free from prejudice. But in our section, St. Jacobs Oil has been tried by that great jury—the public—and been judged the infallible cure for Rheumatism and all painful diseases.

Unexplainable Facts.

Affairs do go oddly in this world. Not long ago there was a railroad disaster in New Jersey, whereby several persons were badly hurt, but only one, as it turned out, fatally. He was a young man of singularly industrious habits and of a most unselfish character. Upon his labors an aged father and mother and two sisters wholly depended for their support. It was the ambition of this young man to give to his mother a deed of the house which the family occupied. To this end he had foregone marriage, and toiled early and late; he personally attended to the smallest housekeeping details, managing them all with the most painstaking economy. The family itself had seen better days, and he was the last prop left. His manly and self-sacrificing spirit had gradually impressed itself upon the community in which he lived, so that he was respectfully and kindly regarded on every hand. He had been in one place of service and trust for eight years, and only life and time seemed to be needed to enable him finally to secure the end toward which all his energies were bent. Well, out of eight car-loads of passengers he was the only one killed. Sitting in the seat with him at the time of the crash was a man who has said since that he thought that he was ready to die, and that no one would have suffered by his death, or, according to his own perhaps excessive modesty, missed him. This man was not even scratched, while his fellow occupant of the same seat, about whose life so many interests were linked, was so hurt about the head that even his remarkable natural strength gave no hope from the first that he could survive. Things do go strangely in this world.—New York Post.

[From the Sparta (Wis.) Herald.]

AS AN exhibition of the intrinsic worth of St. Jacobs Oil, we think the case referred to, that of Mrs. O. W. Hubbard, of this town, cured of Sciatic Rheumatism of long standing by the Oil, is certainly striking, and, beyond all doubt, conclusive as to its efficacy. The remedy has our indorsement.

Men Are Liberal to Be Seen of Men.

An eminent British clergymen was severely opposed to what he called sensational methods of gatherings collections. He denounced the practice of passing collection boxes or baskets through the congregation, and said it was unscriptural. He believed that giving ought to be done on principle, without special impulse, and without appeal to the feelings. He determined to put his views into practical operation in his own way. So he told his people that for one year they might put their donations for missionary work into two large boxes, which he placed for the purpose in the church vestibules. These boxes, which were made of stout oak, were securely locked, and would not be opened until the close of the year, when he hoped they would be full of money. He wanted people quietly and unostentatiously to deposit their gifts in the openings in the tops of these boxes, in the sight of the Lord, and not "to be seen of men." The boxes were recently opened. On carefully counting the contents of both, the total sum was found to be somewhat less than two shillings, all in copper coin.

The eminent clergyman still believes that his theory of benevolence is the correct one. But he believes that he is in advance of his age, for he is persuaded that the people will not put his view into practical operation.

Diameter of Cyclones.

Cyclones extend over a circle from 100 to 500 miles in diameter, and sometimes 1,000 miles. In the West Indies they are sometimes as small as 100 miles in diameter, but on reaching the Atlantic they dilate to 600 or 1,000 miles. Sometimes, on the contrary, they contract in their progress; and, while contracting, they augment fearfully in violence. The violence of the wind increases from the margin to the center, where the atmosphere is frequently quite calm.

MORE than 800,000 acres of land have been reclaimed from the water in Holland since the beginning of the sixteenth century, and the work still goes on at the rate of about eight acres per day.

Newfoundland Indians.

The head of the tribe was old Abraham Joe, a fine specimen of his race, an active, upright man, standing about six feet two inches in his moccasins, and broad and strong in proportion. He has spent nearly all his life in Newfoundland, and knew the interior of the island better than any man living. He was a good hunter, trapper and guide, but he was—well, he is dead, and I will put in mildly—he had the bump of acquisitiveness highly developed. They had, I should imagine, a very pleasant life, these Indians; and if one can judge by the independence of the men, and the nature and quality of the clothing worn by the girls, they must have been very well off in this world's goods. They had comfortable little cabins in which they spent the winter in comparative idleness, earning little or nothing. The single exception to this rule was in the case of one of old Abraham Joe's sons, who carried the mail during the winter and spring months between St John's and the copper mines at the entrance of the bay. He was well paid, and deservedly so, for his was an arduous task. Traveling on snowshoes backwards and forwards over a distance of some hundreds of long, weary, desolate, monotonous miles, over bare wind-swept barrens, through dense pine forests and thick alder swamps, without a mark to guide or a hut to shelter the traveler; tramping on alone with no companion to cheer one on the lonely way, without the chance even of seeing a human being from one end of the journey to the other; struggling along from dawn to dark of the short, wintry days against snow, storm, or sleet, or in the bitter cold of hard frosty weather; crouching through the long nights by a solitary fire with a few bushes stuck in the snow for shelter; caught perhaps in some sudden thaw, when the softened snow clogs and sticks in the netting of the snowshoes, and progress is almost impossible; exposed to mal de raquette, snow blindness, and all the chances of a forest life—such an occupation is one that fully deserves to be well paid. However, the activity of this particular "Joe" was abnormal; the rest of the family spent their winters lounging about the beech, making perhaps a few mast hoops, butter tubs, or fish barrels, or sitting by the stove indoors, smoking their pipes and doing nothing. In the summer they fished a little, and in the autumn the whole community went up Indian brook and spent the months in the interior of the island, shooting and trapping beavers and otters. Fur was pretty plentiful in those days, and a man could make a good income out of a couple of months' hard work, furring in the fall. These "Joes" appeared to entertain, to a limited extent, communistic principles, while partially recognizing at the same time the right of private ownership in land and chattles. They would use each other's boats, canoes, etc., without hesitation, but spoke of them nevertheless as belonging to some individual member of the spet. They wandered about the island in an apparently haphazard, aimless, happy-go-lucky way, and some member or other of the family was always turning up at odd times in unexpected places. Sometimes we would meet a Joe striding over some barren or crossing a lake in his canoe; occasionally a Joe would drop into our camp, miles away from anywhere, unprovided with boat, canoe, provisions or baggage of any kind, and furnished only with a pipe, tobacco, a rusty gun and some powder and lead. He would sit down quietly by the fire and chat a little and smoke a little, and after a while accept, with apparent insouciance, an invitation to eat and drink, and after consuming enough good food for three men and swallowing a few quarts of tea, would say, "Well, I suppose I shall be going now. Adieu, gentlemen, adieu. Yes, I guess I was pretty hungry; most starved, I expect."—Lord Dunraven.

Shrewdness and Ability.

Hop Bitters, so freely advertised in all the papers, secular and religious, are having a large sale, and are supplanting all other medicines. There is no denying the virtues of the Hop plant, and the proprietors of these Bitters have shown great shrewdness and ability in compounding a Bitters whose virtues are so palpable to every one's observation.—Examiner and Chronicle.

The King of Burmah's Finance.

Among the thousand and one odd things which affect the state of commercial markets, surely massacres and lotteries must be reckoned among the oddest. Yet these are contingencies which the British merchant in Rangoon has to take into account in casting up his prospects of a profitable trade. The massacres of his reigning Majesty of Burmah in the spring of 1879 at once sent down the returns of the dutiable goods exported from Rangoon to British Burmah fifty per cent. The Mandalay trade was affected about the same time in a manner quite as characteristic. The King having just finished with his massacres, established lotteries for the purpose of filling his exchequer. The bait took at once. Every one who had powers of locomotion of any kind posted away to the "golden city," to stake his chance. The Treasury profited, the population did not. Most of them lost every pennyworth of property they possessed, and were too poor even to get back to their homes.—Pall Mall Gazette.

An Empress Who Makes Her Toilet in a Stable.

A recent letter has this about the Austrian Empress: "One day the Countess, hearing that their Majesties had ridden into the stables, hurried to the stalls to receive them. Alas! Elizabeth was changing her habit in the stall beside her horse, and Frans Yosef had to act as screen to this impromptu toilet scene. The Countess never told exactly what they did and said, but her maid gathered enough next day to describe it to me as being very disagreeable. The grooms told me that the Empress often changed her dress in this way in preference to going into the house. 'Less danger of taking cold,' she says, and nobody dared dispute the imperial will. She refuses all refreshment except a glass of water during her visit, and one of the grooms carries a little square package tissue paper, for the imperial lady never uses any other substance to wipe the perspiration from her pretty face.

Temporary Preachers.

In Boston there is a certain religious publishing establishment, which is recognized as a headquarters for ministers seeking temporary preaching places. It is besieged by a run of preachers who have a dash of the "carpet-bagger" element in their ecclesiastical and professional make-up. Some of them are men of talent who are a little run down. Some are men who have worn themselves out in pastoral service, some are do-nothings, and some are very excellent brethren, who are worthy of steady employment, but who somehow or other do not manage to be favored with "calls," as their more lucky brethren are. Any church wanting a supply for a Sunday is almost sure to find it here in various grades of quality, and at corresponding rates of pay. The more expensive ministers are not to be found in this way, but rather the low-priced ones. A few of these receive as high a fee as twenty dollars a Sunday. Many are glad to go for ten, and there are some whose efforts can be secured for five dollars. These five-dollar brethren are not esteemed, either the most eloquent or the most original. They generally have a faded manuscript or two with them. Sometimes they are given to what they call extemporaneous preaching, that is to say, they preach without manuscripts, but they give their hearers a repetition of what they have preached over and over again so often that they have no need of a manuscript as an aid to memory. This Boston headquarters of ministerial supply is an informal thing which attends to itself, and has grown up from the mutual necessities of churches and ministers. It regulates itself, costs nobody anything, and is worth a great deal to those who make use of it. Its operation is quiet, and few people except those who are directly benefited by it know of its existence.

AN IMMENSE AREA OF RAILROAD AND GOVERNMENT LANDS, OF GREAT FERTILITY, WITHIN EASY REACH OF PERMANENT MARKET, AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES, is now offered for sale in EASTERN OREGON and EASTERN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

These lands form part of the great GRAIN BELT of the Pacific Slope, and are within an average distance of 250 to 300 miles from Portland, where steamships and sailing vessels are directly loaded FOR ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

GRAIN AT PORTLAND, OREGON, COMMANDS A PRICE EQUAL TO THAT OBTAINED IN CHICAGO.

The early completion of the Northern Pacific R. R. is now assured, and guarantees to settlers cheap and quick transportation and good markets both East and West. The opening of this new overland line to the Pacific, together with the construction of the network of 700 miles of railroad by the O. R. & N. Co. in the valleys of the great Columbia and its principal tributaries, renders certain a rapid increase in the value of the lands now open to purchase and pre-emption. There is every indication of an enormous movement of population to the Columbia River region in the immediate future.

LANDS SHOW an AVERAGE YIELD of 40 BUSHELS OF WHEAT PER ACRE. No Failure of Crops ever known.

TRANSLATIONS.

American News Via Paris.

The following piece of news, recently published in a French paper shows how awkward the account of an ordinary railroad accident, may appear, when strained over by an incompetent translator:

"Most horrible!"

"An accident atrocious comes to have place on the line of the Great Northwestern, at the States United.

"Two trains are encountered themselves shocked, and so for to say reentered the one in the other in leveling himself completely.

"There does not rest of a survivor many more than a mechanician.

"Arrived at the station, we do not know how, all the world throws itself on him; we interrogate him, feverishly.

"Him very calm:

"Oh, there has not had large thing—the two trains have made telescope!"

"Saws."

The body grows according to what it feeds upon; so does the mind.

When some politicians are weighed they are found wanting every office in the country.

A sympathy with the pains and pleasures of others is the foundation of our social virtues.

There is no slavery so hard, so degrading, so miserable, so loathsome, as intemperance.

The three most difficult things are, to keep a secret, to forget an injury, and to make good use of one's leisure.

If you wish to know whether anybody is superior to the prejudices of the world, ask him to carry a parcel for you.

If a man has a right to be proud of anything, it is a good action done as it ought to be, without any base interest lurking at the bottom.

There is no nobility like that of a true heart; for such never stoops to artifice, nor is wanting in good offices when they are seasonable.

One always feels the better for looking any small evil of life straight in the face. It is wonderful how few evils are remediless if you fairly face them, and honestly try to remove them.

The man who will abandon a friend for an error, knows but little of the human character, and shows that his heart is as cold as his judgment is weak.

With regard to manner, be careful to speak in a soft, tender, kind and loving way. Even when you have occasion to rebuke, be careful to do it with manifest kindness. The effect will be incalculably better.

Mrs. Livermore is lecturing on "How Shall We Reach the Boys?" This question can never be satisfactorily answered until every saloon has a telephone.

"Etiquette" writes to us to inquire if in our opinion it would be proper for him to support a young lady if she was taken with a faint—even if he hadn't been introduced. Proper, young man, certainly—prop her by all means.

A friend of George Eliot, in speaking of the deep tinge of melancholy in her books, say that "one of her most constant thoughts turned on the waste of force in the world." We suspect that George once saw a 200-pound man kick a 120-pound lightning-rod agent off the front stoop.

"Ball this evening, dear?" inquired Desdemona of Othello, when she saw him loading up his navy revolver. No, no: this evening, s'mother evening," he replied, as he reached for the pillow and wedged it softly down her esophagus.

The Power of the press.

In no way is the power of the press more surely shown than in the universal knowledge that has in less than a year, been diffused throughout fifty millions of people of the wonderful curative properties of that splendid remedy, Kidney-Wort. And the people from the Atlantic to the Pacific have shown their intelligence and their knowledge of what is in the papers, by already making Kidney-Wort their household remedy for all diseases of the kidneys, liver and bowels. —[Herald.

KIDNEY-WORT

PERMANENTLY CURES

KIDNEY DISEASES,

LIVER COMPLAINTS,

CONSTIPATION and PILES.

Dr. R. H. Clark, South Hero, Vt., says, "In cases of Kidney Troubles it has acted like a charm. It has cured many very bad cases of Piles, and has never failed to act efficiently."

Nelson Fairchild, of St. Albans, Vt., says, "It is of priceless value. After sixteen years of great suffering from Piles and Costiveness it completely cured me."

C. S. Hogabon, of Berkshire says, "One package has done wonders for me in completely curing a severe Liver and Kidney Complaint."

IN EITHER LIQUID OR DRY FORM

IT HAS WONDERFUL POWER. WHY?

Because it acts on the LIVER, BOWELS and KIDNEYS at the same time.

Because it cleanses the system of the poisonous humors that develope in Kidney and Urinary Diseases, Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation, Piles, or in Rheumatism, Neuralgia Nervous Disorders and Female Complaints.

☞ It is put up in Dry Vegetable Form, in tin cans, one package of which makes six quarts of medicine.

☞ Also in Liquid Form, very Concentrated, for the convenience of those that cannot readily prepare it. It acts with equal efficiency in either form.

GET IT AT THE DRUGGISTS. PRICE, $1.00.

Escaped.

Not long after Fort Reno was established on the south-east border of the Big-Horn mountains, on the Powder river, a detachment of recruits was expected to arrive there. With them, was an officer of the 18th United States infantry—Lieutenant White.

His wife accompanied him, and was one of the few ladies who chose to share the hardships and privations of frontier life in the Big-horn country. She was also one of the still smaller number whose husbands were willing that they should do so.

Many of the army ladies would gladly have followed her example, had not the prudent opposition of their husbands deterred them from risking their lives in that dangerous country.

The detachment had made their last camp, at the head of the Dry Fork, and had descended the long declivity,—the road crossing and re-crossing its dry bed—and were nearing the top of a bluff which bordered on the river valley, from which point they could first see the fort, just across the river, hardly a mile distant.

No Indians having been seen since the party left Fort Laramie, all thought of danger from them had ceased when they found themselves so near the fort. Arrived at the top of the bluff, the "halt" was sounded, to enable the long wagon train to close up, as it had become considerably strung out on the latter part of the march. When all had caught up, the "forward" was sounded, and the march was resumed.

During the halt, it had been arranged that as soon as the train had closed up, the ambulance in which Mrs. White was riding, should be driven to the fort ahead of the troops, instead of, as was customary, following slowly behind them. The fort was near, and the road to it in plain sight of those following close behind, as well as of those in front; for the troops at the fort, seeing the party approaching, had come outside the stockade to welcome them.

The only mounted men with the troops were Lieutenant White and his orderly, and the wagon master and his assistant—four in all. The ambulance was drawn by four mules; the curtains to it were all down, to keep out the sun from one side and the dust from the other, leaving only the front open.

The ambulance was driven by a soldier, who, when the "forward" was sounded, astonished his mules by a loud crack of his whip, which started them off at a lively trot, a gait they had not tried since leaving Fort Laramie, ten days before. The brake had to be used to check their speed down hill, but another flourish of the whip at the bottom, caused them to speed rapidly along the level road in the river valley.

Just then three Indians, mounted on ponies, dashed at the ambulance out of a clump of bushes close to the road, and began shooting arrows at he mules, as was, evidently, their intention.

At the first alarm, Mrs. White, with great presence of mind, had crawled under the seat on which she had been seated. The arrows were flying thick and fast. The driver, who had been hit, had dropped the reins and tumbled backwards, inside the ambulance. The mules, terrified by the yells of the savages, and the arrows which had hit them, rushed madly along at a fearful gait.

Who can imagine the feelings of the husband at this sight? Or those of the many spectators both in front and behind? No one dared fire a shot at the Indians, for fear of missing them and hitting the occupants of the ambulance, or perhaps one of the mules. At the first alarm, Lieutenant White and the other three men who were mounted, galloped at full speed after the ambulance, while the guard from the fort ran towards the river where the road crossed, and which the ambulance was rapidly approaching.

The Indians seeing succor immediately in front, and also approaching rapidly from the rear, abandoned the pursuit, riding into the bushes that fringed the river bank, probably thinking "discretion the better part of valor."

The mules dashed madly into the river, nearly upsetting the ambulance The force of the current checked their speed so much that they were easily caught, as they emerged from the ford on the opposite side, by some of the guards from the fort.

As the Indians rode away, a few shots at long range quickened their gait as they crossed the open space down the river, and disappeared in a thick cotton-wood grove.

The ambulance was hardly out of the river before Lieutenant White arrived, and rejoiced to find his wife uninjured, although nearly frightened to death The driver had two bad flesh wounds, and the four mules were all wounded, two of them so badly that they died; in fact, one of them had to be unharnessed at the river bank, and died very soon after.

This narrow escape was a good lesson to all the spectators, and taught them the value of caution, confirming the adage always good in an Indian country: "Safe places are dangerous."—[Youth's Companion.

Baby is Dead.

"Baby is dead!" Three little words passed along the line; copied somewhere and soon forgotten. But after all was quiet again, I leaned my hand upon my head and fell into a deep reverie of all that those words mean.

Somewhere—a dainty form, still and cold, unclasped by mother's arms tonight. Eyes, that yesterday were bright and blue as skies of June, droped tonight beneath white lids that no voice can ever raise again.

Two soft hands, whose rose-leaf fingers were wont to wander lovingly around mother's neck and face, loosely holding white buds, quietly folded in confined rest.

Soft lips, yesterday rippling with laughter, sweet as woodland brook falls, gay as trill of forest birds, tonight unresponsive to kiss or call of love.

A silent home—the patter of the baby feet forever hushed—a cradle bed unpressed. Little shoes half worn—dainty garments—shoulder knots of blue to match those eyes of yesterday folded with aching heart away.

A tiny mound, snow covered in some grave-yard,

A mother's groping touch, in uneasy slumber, for the fair head that shall never again rest upon her bosom. The low sob, the bitter tear, as broken dreams awke to sad reality. The hope of future years wrecked, like fair ships that suddenly go down in sight of land.

The watching of other babies, dimpled, laughing, strong, and this one gone! The present agony of grief, the future emptiness of heart, all held in those three little words, "Baby is Dead!"

Indeed, it is well that we can copy and soon forget the words so freighted with woe to those who receive and send them.

And yet it cannot harm us now and then to give a tender thought to those for whom our careless pen strokes are preparing such a weight of grief.—[Kokomo Tribune.

The last system proposed for the improvement of the Mississippi river, is an engineering project of extraordinary magnitude. The object to be accomplished is, in brief, to collect the vast volume of water furnished by the spring floods of the numerous streams and lakes constituting the headwaters of the river, into immense reservoirs, for the purpose of maintaining a steady depth of four feet in the upper Mississippi from July to November. To do this will require the construction of forty-one dams, seven on the upper Mississippi, fourteen on the St. Croix, twelve on the Chippewa and eight on the Wisconsin. The first set of these dams will be located at the outlets of Lakes Winnebagosish, Leech, Mud and Vermillion, and at Pokegama Falls, Gull Lake and Pine River. The total holding capacity of these reservoirs will equal in extent an unbroken sea of 400 square miles, with a uniform depth of eight feet. The plan specifies that all the reservoirs shall be constructed of earth and wood, no suitable stone being found in the region in sufficient quantity. Congress has already granted an appropriation for beginning the work at Lake Winnebagosish, where it is proposed to build a dam sixteen feet high. The total cost of dams, including telegraph lines for operating them, is set down at less than $1,500,000.

Grateful Women.

None receive so much benefit, and none are so profoundly grateful and show such an interest in recommending Hop Bitters as women. It is the only remedy peculiarly adapted to the many ills the sex is almost universally subject to. Chills and fever, indigestion or deranged liver, constant or periodical sick headaches, weakness in the back or kidneys, pain in the shoulders and different parts of the body, a feeling of lassitude and despondency, are all readily removed by these bitters. —[Courant.

"How are You My Old Friend"

Asked a bright looking man, "Oh! I feel miserable, I'm bilious and can't eat, and my back is so lame I can't work." "Why in world don't you take Kidney-Wort? that's what I take when I'm out of sorts, and it always keeps me in perfect tune. My doctor recommends it for all such troubles." Kidney Wort is a sure cure for biliousness and constipation. Don't fail to try it —[Long Branch News.

At a social re union a few evenings ago, the question was asked, "Of what sort of fruit does a quarrelsome man and wife remind you?" The young lady who promptly answered "A prickly pair," got the medal.

The Age of the Earth.

At the Midland Institute, Birmingham, England, Prof. Ayrton delivered a lecture in which he gave some estimates of the earth's age. In reply to a question of whether the earth's existence was to be counted by thousands or by millions of years, he called attention to the geological evidences of organic changes on the earth's surface which require not much less than a hundred million years for the earth's age. There was, however, a better method of approximating to the age of the earth. The changes of temperature belonging to the different seasons were less perceptibly felt as they penetrated the substance of the earth, until at a depth of about fifty feet the temperature was experienced at about the rate of one degree per fifty feet of the descent. Supposing this increase went on at the same rate until the center of the globe was reached, the temperature there would be 400,000 degrees higher than at the surface.

There was, however, no reason to assume that the increase did go on, or that the temperature at the center was higher than that of the molten rock, 7,000 degrees, or at most 10,000 degrees. Assuming this to be the temperature at the center, and knowing, by experiment, the conducting power of rock in relation to heat, Sir William Thompson was able to calculate the present distribution of temperature throughout the whole earth, not only the present distribution downward, but the distribution at any future and at any past time. Taking the temperature of 7,000 degrees as having been once the uniform temperature of the whole body, the result of the calculations was that the earth had been a hundred million years in cooling.

Boiling Water on Paper.

The following experiments for boiling water and melting lead on a sheet of paper are given in Nature. Take a piece of paper and fold it up, as schoolboys do, in a square box without a lid. Hang this up to a walking-stick by four threads, and support the stick upon books or other convenient props.

Then a lamp or taper must be placed under the dainty chaldron. In a few minutes the water will boil.

The only fear is lest the threads should catch fire and let the water spill into the lamp and over the table. The flame must, therefore, not be too large. The paper does not burn, because it is wet; and if it resisted the wet it still would not burn through, because the heat imparted to it on one side by the flame would be very rapidly conducted away by the water on the other.

Another experiment of a similar nature, but perhaps even more striking, is as follows: Twist up the edges of a common playing card, or other bit of card-board, so as to fashion it into a light tray.

On this tray place a layer of small shot or bits of lead and heat it over the flame of a lamp. The lead will melt, but the card will not burn.

It may be charred a little round the edges, but immediately below the lead it will not be burned, for here again the lead conducts off the heat on one side as fast as it is supplied on the other.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of th Age.

Kellogg's Columbian Oil is a powerful remedy, which can be taken internally as well as externally by the tenderest infant. It cures almost instantly, is pleasant, acting directly upon the nervous system causing a sudden bouyancy of the mind. Eats 'em Skins an' All.

He had never eaten a Malaga grape, and he squeezed the outside of one between his thumb and finger, expecting the pulp to fly into his open mouth like any decent sort of grape. The tough skin held, looking at it dubiously he tossed it away and tried another one. This one crushed in his fingers, the juice flying all over his thirty seven cent necktie. With a look of unutterable disgust he appealed to street of gamin. Here bub, I thought green grapes wuz gone by, but I'm durned if they ain't selling 'em yet. I will give you ten cents if you'll eat these durned things. And the boy sat on a dry-goods box, swung his chops and earned his money, the rustic occasionally exclaiming between his fits of uncontrollable laughter: "Eats 'em skins, and all, durned if he don't; skins and all, like a cow chewing a pumpkin."

Profit, $1,200.

"To sum it up, six long years of bed-ridden sickness, costing $200 per year, total, $1,200—all of this expense was stopped by three bottles of Hop Bitters taken by my wife. She has done her own housework for a year since, without the loss of a day, and I want everybody to know it, for their benefit."—[N. F. Farmer.

WASHINGTON.

Robert R. Hitt, of Chicago, long-time Secretary of the Legation at Paris, has been nominated First Assistant Secretary of State.

A Washington dispatch says that "permission is finally given to announce the fact that it has been decided by the Cabinet not to call an extra session. This decision is subject to the reservation that, if circumstances shall seem to make it necessary, Congress may be convened in the early fall, but there will be no summer session."

POLITICAL.

Secretary Kirkwood has issued an order suspending competitive examinations in his department.

The difference between the position of the Readjusters and their opponents in Virginia on the debt question, says a Washington correspondent, which has been made so prominent in the Senate, is about as follows: McCullough's (or the Debtpayers') bill fixed with the consent of the creditors the debt at $32,000,000, made the coupons receivable for taxes and other dues to the State, and the bonds non-taxable. It fixed the rate of interest at an average of 3 per cent. Riddleberger's bill, which the Readjusters stand by, fixed the debt at less than $20,000,000, made the coupons not receivable for taxes, made the bonds taxable, and the rate of interest 3 per cent. It was proposed to make this bill a law, without the consent of the State's creditors, on the ground that it was just to both the creditors and the State. The Readjusters' bill excludes from the State debt the interest accumulated during the war and the reconstruction period. McCullough's bill includes this.

After ratifying the reorganization of the party by the committee of 100, the Irving Hall Democracy of New York was disbanded.

The New York Spirit of the Times has compiled a new table of the vote in the late Presidential election, the figures being obtained from the Secretaries of the several States, and the highest vote given electors on each ticket being considered. The footings are: Garfield, 4,446,628; Hancock, 4,443,106; Garfield's plurality, 3,522.

GENERAL.

On the petition of Henry Villard, President of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, the Superior Court in New York has enjoined the Northern Pacific road from issuing the 180,000 shares of common stock proposed to be given to its projectors. It is believed that a large portion of these shares have already been thrown upon the stock market. Villard states that a fund of $12,000,000 was made up in January, with which he secured control of $27,000,000 of the common and preferred stock of the Northern Pacific. He then apprised President Billings of his acts, and invited himself and his friends to come into the combination, whereupon the latter caused the issue of the stock held by the company.

The immigrants who arrived in the United States for the eight months ended Feb. 28 numbered 305,022, of whom nearly 83,000 were from Germany, 77,000 from Canada, 36,000 from England and Wales, and 30,000 from Ireland.

The tide of immigration is rising higher than ever before on the shores of this country. All the resources of the Commissioners of Emigration at New York are taxed to the utmost to attend to the vast army that is pouring across the Atlantic. The statistics show a constant and large increase of German immigrants over other nationalities. The number of immigrants landed at Castle Garden during the year 1880 was 320,800, the largest number in one year since the establishment of the Emigrant Commission in 1847. This year bids fair to eclipse the figures of its predecessor.

The majority of the immigrants thus far have come from Germany; Ireland contributes the next largest number; there is a falling off in Scandinavian immigration, while the numbers coming from England and Holland are larger than at this time last year....A tinge at Londonville, Ohio, has been punished. He attempted to rule the town by bulldozing and insult, when the citizens assembled, put a rope around his neck and led him through the streets on exhibition, and he was only released upon a promise never to show his face there again....New York papers report that the large stockholders of the Chicago and Northwestern and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad Companies are considering plans for the practical consolidation of these two railroad systems....The manhead of a boiler in Brown, Bonnell & Co.'s furnace at Youngstown, Ohio, blew out, and three men were seriously scalded and otherwise hurt by the escaping steam and flying debris; nine others were somewhat injured.

Diphtheria of a malignant type has broken out at Ottawa, Ontario. Many deaths, particularly among children, have taken place....The contest for the Astley belt, between Weston and Rowell, will take place in England, commencing June 20....Martha Borum, a girl of 16 years, has been sentenced to the Illinois penitentiary for arson....A British man-of-war has been dispatched from Canadian waters to intercept the steamer Australia off the Sable islands. The Australia has on board one Coleman, and it may be others, who are suspected of being concerned in the plot to blow up the London Mansion House....A Pittsburgh (Pa.) paper is authority for the statement that a number of slaves have been sold at auction in Fairview, W. Va. The prices ranged from $80 to $160....Capt. E. P. Dorr, of Buffalo, whose name is familiar to everybody interested in lake-marine matters, died in South Carolina.

Gen. Benjamin F. Loan died at St. Joseph, Mo., of apoplexy. He was 62 years old, a native of Kentucky, and served in the Union army....Weyprecht, the Austrian Arctic explorer, is dead....Miss Emma Sproa, a young lady of Defiance, Ohio, tried to cross the canal on the ice, when the ice broke and she was drowned....Dr. Heinrich Windward, a German revolutionary hero, is dead....Large numbers of the inhabitants of the mountain regions of Bohemia are preparing to emigrate to this country on account of the intolerance of the Czechs, the dominant faction in Bohemia.

A reduction of 5 cents per 100 pounds on grain and provisions has been ordered on the railroads leading east from Chicago. The new rate, 35 cents on provisions and 30 cents on grain, is as low as the lowest that prevailed last summer during the height of the navigation season....A dispatch from Woody mountains says Sitting Bull and camp of about 100 lodges arrived at Woody mountain, N. W. T., on the last day of January, and has been camped near that post ever since....During the eight months ending Feb. 28, 77,218 persons left Canada to make their homes in this country. The Canadian Government is alarmed at the exodus....Mrs. Capt. Flagstaff, of Montague, Mich., became jealous of Emma Drake, a 17-year-old girl, threw twelve ounces of sulphuric acid into the poor girl's face, and permanently disfigured her....Reports from all parts of Ohio indicate a larger acreage of winter wheat in that State this year than last year. The crop is in healthy condition, and the recent snowfall will prove advantageous unless followed by frosts.

FOREIGN.

Parnell addressed a meeting in London and urged the organization of land leagues in England and Scotland for the purpose of educating public opinion on the land question. In the course of his remarks he stated that money was pouring in from America at the rate of $20,000 a week. CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

On the meeting of the Senate on Friday, March 25, Mr. Ingalls offered a resolution calling on the Secretary of War for a list of appointments, other than those in the army, made in his department since the 1st of December, 1879, to March 4, 1881, and under what provisions of law said appointments had been made. Mr. Dawes called up his resolution for the election of Senate officers, the pending motion being that to postpone its consideration until the first Monday in December. The debate was interrupted frequently by motions to adjourn and to go into executive session. Mr. Johnston, of Virginia, and Mr. Saulsbury did most of the speech-making, their themes being Mahone, Riddleberger and repudiation. The President nominated: Assistant Secretary of State, Robert R. Hitt, of Illinois. Assistant United States Treasurer at San Francisco, Cal., Nathan W. Spalding. Assistant Appraiser at San Francisco, Charles M. Leavy. Postmasters, John McKenny, Jr., Aledo, Ill.; William Rule, Knoxville, and William S. Tipton, Cleveland, Tenn.; Elliot H. L. Rogers, Red Oak, Iowa; George K. Foote, Jackson, Tenn.

In the United States Senate, on Saturday, March 26, after some argument on the propriety of electing new officers, an adjournment was effected, Mr. Mahone having the floor for Monday. The President nominated Charles E. Van Pelt, to be Postmaster at Seward, Neb.; W. C. Brundage, to be Surveyor of Customs at Michigan City, Ind., and C. H. Smith, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Washington, Minn.

The galleries of the Senate Chamber were jammed on Monday, March 28, in anticipation of a sensational debate. Among the auditors was Mrs. Sprague. Senator Mahone devoted three hours to the task of making his position on repudiation clear, and rounded off in a few extemporaneous remarks. A feeble attempt was made toward the election of officers. The President nominated William H. Craig for Postmaster at Albany, N. Y. Mr. Craig is the present Postmaster.

In the United States Senate, on Tuesday, March 29, Wade Hampton denied the statement of Gen. Mahone that the Democratic party had repudiated the debt of South Carolina. Mr. Brown refuted the charge that he had withheld the militia of Georgia from the Confederate cause. Mr. Beck ridiculed the Republicans for picking up Readjuster Riddleberger. Messrs. Jonas and Kellogg had a war of words in regard to the infamy of Louisiana politics. The following revenue appointments were made: Charles C. Johnson, Store-Keeper, Seventh district, and W. H. Havens, H. L. Marion and Edward P. Botsford, Fifth district, Kentucky.

In the Senate chamber at Washington, on Wednesday, March 30, Mr. Kellogg found a handsome bouquet on his desk, while Mr. Hill was the recipient of a magnificent floral effect—a ship of state sailing upon a sea of violets and roses, accompanied by a laudatory letter from ladies of Alexandria, Va. A resolution was passed to pay the expenses of the funeral of Matt H. Carpenter. A motion by Mr. Harris to adjourn to the first Monday of December was lost. Hill and Dawes then opened debate on political issues, during which Logan indignantly denied that he sympathized with the South at the outbreak of secession.

The Senate was apparently no nearer the election of its officers on the last day of March than it was at the beginning of the fight. The proceedings were similar to those of the day before. The principal speakers were Senators Cameron, Maxey, Dawes, Jones, Kellogg, Jonas, and Beck. Jonas provoked a discussion of the Louisiana debt question, and the debate branched out into the features of the election of 1876. There was nothing of a sensational character in any of the speeches. The President nominated John B. Stickney to be United States Attorney for the Northern District of Florida.

A bill-head of a Texas doctor, thusly:

God and the doctor, we alike adore,
Just on the brink of danger, not before;
The danger passed, both are alike requited,
God is forgotten, and the doctor slighted.

THE SNOW.

How Much Damage Has It Done?

(From Bradstreet.)

The extreme severity of the winter and the consequent lateness of the spring opening in the West have necessarily aroused an eager desire to learn definitely the agricultural, trade and transportation situation in the regions indicated. In response to this want of the business public, we have obtained dispatches from our correspondents at Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati, Dayton, Detroit, Grand Rapids, Indianapolis, Louisville, Chicago, Peoria, St. Louis, Milwaukee, St. Paul, Burlington, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Joseph and Denver. Our correspondents at these centers are in constant communication with trained observers at interior points, who are in contact with the farmers and country merchants. One main query which has taken possession of the business public is: Has anything occurred in the West to seriously check business prosperity? From the tenor of our dispatches, the answer unmistakably is, No. While the elements have conspired to delay the spring trade in the West and Northwest, there is nothing to show that its volume will be less than last year. The trade situation is strongly sustained, as the foundations of prosperity are unaltered, and promise to continue indefinitely. It is apparent that stocks of goods in the hands of country merchants are very much depleted. This fact put with the knowledge that the farming and industrial classes generally are just now abundantly able to purchase, indicate conclusively that both demand and consumption through the spring must be large. Collections have been slow, but it is evident that the banks have been abundantly able to grant the credits required. While it is yet early to give judgment as to the general condition of winter wheat, it is safe to say, from our advices, that winter wheat has not been seriously injured. The uncertain quantity as to the wheat situation is the extent to which spring-wheat sowing will be reduced, owing to the backwardness of the spring. The severe weather has been seriously felt by the railroads in a large decrease of earnings, owing to the expense attending the clearing of snow and ice from the tracks, and inability to receive and move merchandise promptly. Regarding live-stock interests, our Denver correspondent telegraphs that the losses on cattle will be under 10 per cent., and that one-fifth of the sheep are gone. This is by no means as bad as has been feared.

"There Were Tears on His Cheeks."

"Lord bless you! but I had never given him a second look. I knew that he was a Norwegian, slow but solid, hardly able to speak a word of English, and I never cared whether he had a relative on earth. Perhaps it looks a bit hard-hearted in me, but I am driven from morning till night, and I must drive the men under me. When I want a hod-carrier I look for muscle, and when I have found muscle I don't look further for sentiment."

"How did the accident happen?"

"He stepped off the scaffold."

"And is badly hurt?"

"Yes, though I think he will pull through. Any man might have blundered as he did, but since I have learned how it was with him I've felt womanish in my heart."

"How was it?"

"Well, he had just got his hod filled with bricks down there when two or three of his countrymen came along and told him that his baby boy was dead. They had just come from his house on Russell street to bring him the news. He came up on the scaffold with his hod, probably intending to notify me of his affliction. His eyes must have been full of tears, and as he stepped out he missed his distance and went to the ground. There were tears on his cheeks when we picked him up, and the only word he uttered was to speak his dead boy's name. I had looked upon him only as an old Norwegian, but I found that he was a husband and father, a man with love and faith, a father who went home at night to coo with his baby and kiss the wife who had left all behind to follow him over the sea, and I tell you I feel like asking his forgiveness and doing all I can to soften the grief which has come upon his humble home."—Exchange.

Elephant Dentistry.

One of the Indian elephants some time since had the misfortune to wrench off a portion of its trunk which had got caught in a noose of rope, and the largest African specimen, whose huge proportions are well known to the frequenters of the Gardens, met with an accident by which its tusks were broken off; the stumps subsequently grew into the cheeks, causing it excruciating pain, and necessitating and immediate remedy. The intrepid Superintendent undertook to perform the delicate operation and relieve the poor beast. Having prepared a gigantic hook-shaped lancet he bandaged the creature's eyes and proceeded to his task. It was an anxious moment, for there was absolutely nothing to prevent the animal killing his medical attendants upon the spot, and to rely upon the common sense and good nature of a creature weighing many tons and suffering from facial abscesses and neuralgia, argues, to say the least of it, the possession of considerable nerve. But Mr. Bartlett did not hesitate, and climbing up within reach of his patient he lanced the swollen cheek. His courage was rewarded, for the beast at once perceived that the proceedings were for his good, and submitted quietly. The next morning when they came to operate upon the other side, the elephant turned his cheek without being bidden, and endured the second incision without a groan.—Saturday Review.

The Steel Horse.

Persons who ride or drive above Fifty-ninth street cannot fail to note that within a year there has been a sudden and marked increase in the number of bicycles on the road, and residents on any well-paved road in the same part of the city can testify that "the steel horse," as the bicycle has come to be called in England, is often on the road as early in the morning as horses less tough of fiber. The popularity which bicycling has suddenly reached in New York is as gratifying to many who never bestrode the ever-saddled courser as to the most earnest devotees of the new sport, for anything that will offer the young men of our city a new inducement to spend part of their time at vigorous exercise out of doors is of general benefit to the community. The steel horse has its limitations; not by these, but by its possibilities, it should be judged. It is shapely, swift and safe. It never throws its rider, although the rider sometimes throws the horse. It never stumbles, balks, bucks or kicks; never takes the bit in its teeth and attempts to run away; it has not the vice so dear to all other horses, of casting a shoe at exactly the wrong time, and it can make its best time and distance without being blown or running the risk of foundering. It can be turned loose anywhere immediately after use. No special stalls nor any disagreeable and expensive retinue of stable-boys are necessary to its safe-keeping, and the owner is never likely to be greeted in the morning with the information that his courser has died during the night. Such an array of special merits should be enough to commend anything to the favorable notice of spirited young men. Even men who are not young could make their days cheerier and gain a promise of additional days in which to be cheery, by making frequent use of the steel horse.—New York Herald.

A Big Load of Wood.

The Rev. Dr. Wellington was the old Templeton minister from early in the eighteen hundreds, and Col. Leonard Stone was one of his parishioners. It was the custom to supplement the minister's moderate salary with presents from the products of the farms, and especially with wood. Now Col. Leonard, one day in January, 1822, was drawing to the parsonage some of his nice hardwood. It was a good ox-load—two cords or so. As he was going across the common with it his brother, Col. Ephraim, caught sight of him from the store, and was surprised at such a great load.

"Hello!" says he, "why don't you take your minister a load of wood while you're about it?"

"Now, look here," says Col. Leonard, "I've been sawing out lumber down't the mill, and there's any quantity of slabs. I'll give the minister as big a load as you can take!"

Col. Ephraim was a man for fun. He instigated the townspeople to take hold with him and accept his brother's challenge. First, they made the sled. Long trees were cut for the runners. These were made thirty-odd feet long and set eight feet apart. The body of the sled projected two feet over the runner on each side. Thus the sled would hold twelve regular cords at one layer. There were two tongues, one in front of each runner.

On the appointed day the men and the oxen from all over town came to the meeting place. The sled was taken to the saw-mill and backed up against the great pile. On went the slabs with a will, Col. Leonard stood by, laughing, cheering, urging them along. When they had got on as much as they thought would do, they hitched up the team. One hundred and sixty oxen, four abreast, found it easy enough to pull. They had to go around through Baldwinville, because there was not room at the Otter river bridge for the sled to turn in. When they had got onto the level ground above Baldwinville, they stopped and unhitched. Then with their every-day sleds they went back to the mill to bring more slabs and pile them on the big load. This they kept up till there were no more slabs. Forty cords lay piled up on that sled. And the evening and the morning were the first day.

The next morning came the rest of the journey "up in town." The school children were let out to see the great sight go by. One of them, to whose home it was going, says it looked as big as a house. It lay unloaded for quite a while out by the parsonage, and people came from near and from far to see. It kept Mr. Wellington in slabs for years to come.

When the great sled was taken to pieces, some of the timbers were used in building Mr. Winch's barn, and may be seen there in the framework until this day.—Boston Advertiser.

One Hundred and Sixteen Years Old.

About thirty-five years ago Michael Hare died near Waterford, in this county, at the remarkable age of one hundred and sixteen years. He was buried in what was called the "old graveyard" in Waterford borough. His remains have been removed of late and deposited in the new cemetery, and the good people of Waterford are now about raising funds to erect a suitable monument to the memory of probably the oldest person that has ever died in this State.—Erie (Penn.) Herald.

Michael Hare was probably one of the best authenticated cases of extreme longevity on record. He was an Irishman, and a British soldier at Braddock's defeat in 1775; served under Wayne in the revolutionary army at Stony Point in 1779, and was then one of the oldest men in his regiment; and was with St. Clair when the Indians defeated him in Ohio in 1791. He was in jail at Erie for drunkenness and disorderly conduct after he was one hundred years old. He was one of three lives named in a life-lease of land in Ireland. Consequently legal attestation of his being still alive had to be made and transmitted to Ireland every year. Thus the proof of his astonishing longevity is a nearly or quite perfect chain.—Buffalo Express.

Terrors of the Simoom.

The "simoom," or poison wind, of Arabia is a serious affair to the travelers caught in it. The center of the column of wind is composed of a poisonous gas, to breathe which is death. Round this center there eddy violent gusts of heated and impregnated air, like that of a furnace. It approaches slowly, amid the whirl of air currents that precedes it for some distance. During its presence the only chance of preserving life is found in covering the face with a cloth, and lying prone on the sand, inhaling what little pure air may be found next the earth. Meanwhile, the feeling of the chest is that of suffocation, and that in the limbs as if molten iron was being poured over them. Camels instinctively bury their nozzles in the sand; but horses do not possess the same preservatory instincts, and they perish in consequence.

Heavenly Bliss.

"Angels, my dear children," said a Galveston Sunday-school teacher, meditatively, "are disembodied spirits."

"Does that mean they don't have any bodies?" asked Johnny.

"Angels have no bodies," replied the teacher, emphatically.

"And will pa and ma be there, too?"

"Certainly."

"Then they won't have no use for me there if I haven't got a body for them to spank," and he took to munching an apple he had picked up on a fruit stand when the proprietor was looking the other way.—Galveston News.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

Croup.—Take a knife or grater and shave off in small particles about a teaspoonful of alum, mix it with twice the quantity of sugar, to make it palatable, and administer it as quickly as possible. Almost instant relief will follow.

Whooping Cough.—The inhalation of air charged with ammonia vapors, as a remedy for whooping-cough, has been tried in France with success. One of the methods of application employed is boiling ammonia in the room where the patient is.

Cough Sirup.—Four ounces of the best gum arabic dissolved in one pint of boiling water, with sugar, lemon juice and balsam tolu added; the whole or one-half daily taken before retiring will soothe throat and stomach irritations and relieve a cough.

Headache Cure.—Apply peppermint to the frontal bone, or forehead (never rubbing it), and fan it. Repeat this three or four times, and then apply cologne, and fan again. If the headache is caused by a foul stomach, then swallow a small portion of hot water and peppermint.

A Cure for Diphtheria.—A South African paper gives the following simple remedy for curing that distressing and commonly fatal malady diphtheria. It is vouched for as being efficient in the most obstinate cases, provided that it is applied in time. A spoonful of flowers of sulphur is well stirred in a wineglassful of water. This mixture is used as a gargle, and afterward swallowed. Brimstone is known to be abhorred by every kind of fungoid growth, and this remedy, which it may here be added has been long known to medical men in Great Britain, may have something in it.

Lip Contagion.—A young lady writes way from California to ask if it is possible for one person to acquire blood poison from another through kissing, or by drinking from the same cup. Certainly. Contagious diseases have been conveyed in those ways too often to permit of any doubt of it, and every one ought to know it. Disease is not likely to be conveyed from lip to lip in kissing, unless the person diseased has a sore or abrasion of the mucous membrane, but the latter may be so slight as not to be noticeable. The practice of allowing indiscriminate kissing of children is not safe. Between those who are not very well acquainted, a nod of the head or shake of the hand is enough. If one must drink from a public cup it is well to place its rim against the skin below the lip rather than against the more receptive mucus membrane.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

How to Ventilate a Bedroom without Chill.—With a proper supply of windows, and a proper supply of fuel in open fireplaces, fresh air is comparatively easy to secure when your patient is in bed. Never be afraid of open windows then; people do not catch cold in bed. This is a popular fallacy. With proper bedclothes and hot bottles, if necessary, you can always keep a patient warm in bed, and well ventilate him at the same time. But a careless nurse will stop up every cranny, and keep a hot-house heat when her patient is in bed, and, if he is able to get up, leave him to do so, without any precaution against chill. The time when people are most liable to take cold is when they first get up, after the twofold exhaustion of dressing and of having had the skin relaxed by many hours, perhaps days, in bed. Then the same temperature which refreshes the patient in bed may be fatal to the patient just risen.

Queer Epitaph.

In the churchyard of Homersfield, Suffolk, England, is the gravestone of Robert Crytott, who died Nov. 17, 1810. It bears the following epitaph:

As I walked by myself I talked to myself,
I thus myself said unto me:
"Look to thyself and take care of thyself,
For nobody cares for thee."
So I turned to myself and I answered myself,
In the self-same reverie,
"Look to thyself or not to thyself,
The self-same thing it will be."

A professor asked his class: "What is the aurora?" A student, hesitating, replied: "Professor, I did know, but I have forgotten." "That is sad, very sad," rejoined the professor; "the only man in the world that ever knew has forgotten it."

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, APRIL 7, 1881.

IF the new Czar of Russia turns out badly it won't be because the American newspapers don't tell him how he ought to run his Government.

IT has generally been supposed that Robert T. Lincoln is the youngest man who ever held a seat in the Cabinet; but Alexander Hamilton was Secretary of the Treasury at 32.

GERMANY now ranks third in population of the great countries of the world. The recent census shows a population of 45,194,172. Russia and the United States stand first and second, and France fourth.

THE man who sued a theater manager at St. Louis because the best seats for a certain performance, though advertised to be put on sale at an hour when he was there to buy, had already been put into the hands of speculators, has gained a verdict of $500.

A MAN at Plainfield, Ind., desired to leave his traveling bag and overcoat while he walked to a place twenty miles distant. He put them in a field, unprotected from thieves except by the sign, "Small-pox—beware!" and found them untouched when he returned.

AT the Executive Mansion, in Washington, there is a post similar to that of an exchange reader in a daily newspaper office. This place is filled by Mr. Morton, who served under President Hayes. He goes through 200 or 300 papers a day, cuts out everything he thinks the President ought to see, arranges his clippings in topical scrap-books, and takes the books in once a day for the President's inspection. By this system a President can, if he gives sufficient time to the matter, keep almost as well posted on public opinion as the chief editor of a great daily.

PROF. MARTINS, a well-known writer on international law, publishes an article in the St. Petersburg Golos, urging international co-operation against conspiracy. He says that if Russia could seal up her territory against plots emanating from Paris, Geneva and London she could soon settle accounts with the Nihilists. The conservative press of Russia urges, as measures of reprisal against Switzerland, a rupture of diplomatic relations, the expulsion of the Swiss from Russia, a prohibitory tariff against Swiss merchants, and encouragement to Germany to annex Switzerland.

NEAR Steuben, Me., a woodman went out alone in the woods with his ax on his shoulder. A huge black bear came upon him and gave chase. It was a hot race, and ended in the bear getting near enough to clap his fore foot on the man's shoe. The man tripped and fell, and, in falling, turned with marvelous dexterity and dealt the bear a terrific blow between his eyes, sinking the ax into his brain. Another blow finished him, and the man's life was saved. The bear was a splendid fellow, weighing 400 pounds. Two cruel-looking gashes on the head testified to the sharpness of the ax which the woodman had so skillfully wielded.

THE late Senator Sharon, of California, did not put in an appearance at any period of the extra session of Congress, which commenced on March 18, 1879, and ended on July 1, of that year; and, by order of the Secretary of the Senate, his pay for that entire period was retained, and covered back into the treasury. It seems that Mr. Sharon made no remonstrance, and accepted the decision of the Secretary without remark, although it is generally believed that, had he made the point, there was no authority under which his pay could have been withheld. This, it is believed, is the only case where the pay of a Senator or member has been withheld on account of absence.

PAT EBERT, a notorious desperado, arrived in Rolla, Mo., about a month ago, from Kansas, ostensibly looking for a location to open a saloon, taking up a lodging in a boarding house near the National Bank of Rolla. His suspicious conduct attracted the attention of the officers of the bank, who called to their aid the City Marshal. Upon investigation it was discovered that the burglar had gained access to a vacant building adjoining the bank, and for three nights had been unmolested in his desperate efforts to tunnel the vault. On the fourth night, just as he had made an entrance to the vault, the Marshal and posse, from a signal given by the cashier, who was secreted in the bank, surrounded the building and attempted his capture alive, but Ebert, who preferred death to arrest, with a dagger in his hand made a desperate effort to escape, and was shot down in his tracks. He lived one hour after being shot, but would reveal nothing. The only words he uttered were: "You've got me, boys."

ONE thing that we can depend upon for this year, and that is the pesky and pestilential locust. He is coming, and his coming threatens to be as terrible as an army with banners. There are two broods of locusts; one appearing every seventeen years, the other every thirteen years. By an appalling coincidence both broods are to appear together this year. Prof. Riley, of Washington, who has made a study of the locusts, locates them for this year. He says: "The seventeen-year locusts will be particularly plentiful in Marquette and Green Lake counties, in Wisconsin, and may also appear in the western part of North Carolina, in Northern Ohio, and a few in Lancaster county, Pa., and Westchester county, N. Y. They will also be abundant in the neighborhood of Wheeling, and will probably extend down into Maryland, Virginia and the District. The thirteen-year brood will, in all probability, appear in Southern Illinois, throughout Missouri, with the exception of the northwest corner, in Louisiana, Arkansas, Indian Territory, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, and North and South Carolina."

DIED from congestion of the brain, caused by jumping the rope, was the cause of the death certified to by the family physician in the case of Rachel Ducewyda, aged 5 years and 6 months, who was buried in New York the other day. Little Rachel was one of seven children. She was a bright, pretty child, and a great favorite with her companions. She was very fond of jumping the rope. A little girl who played much with her said "Rachel would always jump as long as she could. Sometimes she would jump as many as 100, and then she would have to sit down, she would be so tired. She always wanted to come in as often as any of us was jumping. We used to try to get her to sit down and look at us, but she would not rest as long as she could jump." Another of Rachel's little companions said: "She used to be very fond of jumping what we called 'pepper, salt, mustard, cider, vinegar;' that's when we begin to jump slow, and keep jumping faster till we get to 'vinegar,' when you have to jump as fast as you can." The attending physician said: "I have no doubt that the child died from over exertion in jumping the rope. She was a healthy child, and had met with no accidents. It is a very common thing for children to injure themselves by jumping too much. It often leads to heart disease, especially where there is a predisposition to it. Many little boys injure themselves in their attempts at walking-matches, riding the bicycle and other feats of endurance."

The Planet Neptune.

Neptune, though ninety-eight times as large as the earth, is never seen by the naked eye, on account of his exceeding distance, his path lying on the outmost verge of the solar system, nearly 2,800,000,000 miles from the sun. He is, however, an interesting telescopic object, and a few evenings since we had a delightful view of our far-away brother. The evening is faultless for star-gazing—the instrument excellent. As the telescope is turned toward the point in the point in the heavens where this planet pursues his slow course, we look through its great eye and a star seems to leap into existence. It has a round disc, is of a pale blue color, and close to it is a tiny point of light. The pale blue star is Neptune, the point of light is his one solitary satellite. The most eagle-eyed observers have found no markings on his disc, nor added to the number of his satellites.

Neptune was not really introduced into the system till 1846. His existence was suspected on account of disturbances in the movements of Uranus; even his position in the heavens was calculated before he was seen.

Le Verrier was one of the two wise men who worked out the problem, and it was he who told Dr. Galle that if he pointed his telescope toward a designated spot in the heavens he would find a new planet. He did not fail to act upon the suggestion, and there, within a degree of the calculated place, was Neptune.

We shall none of us be inclined to change our residence to this distant plant. The sun to the Neptunians appears only a little larger than Venus when brightest, and gives only one thousandth part of the light and heat the earth receives. Uranus, Saturn and Jupiter shine in the Neptunian sky as stars of the sixth magnitude, but the other planets are invisible; the earth, of such importance in the estimation of those who dwell upon its surface, is entirely blotted from the sky, though astronomers there may be groping for it, as we are for planets within the orbit of Mercury. If time is counted there as it is on the earth, it will take 165 of our years to equal one in Neptune, five generations of men passing away while this slow-moving planet makes one circuit round the sun.—Youth's Companion.

Worth, the Man-Milliner.

A lady, having looked upon the monarch of mantua-makers, writes thus: "Worth is not all that fancy pictured to my mind's eye before I saw him. In fact, I found him nothing more than a shrewd, business-like looking man, with a head so like the portraits of Oliver Goldsmith that doubtless the resemblance has often been commented upon." Worth is getting along in years, and the anxieties of his profession are beginning to tell upon him. His life has been a hard one. He has gone into the great stronghold of the French—that of women's dress—and beaten them. He is an Englishman, and was for a long time shopman at Swan & Edgar's, in London. He has two sons, both Frenchmen to the backbone; neither of them, however, wish to follow their father's profession, but have chosen a military life, which plainly shows their want of "taste," according to their father's idea.

THE REPUBLICAN SENATE.

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

It consists of Mahone & Co. It has been made Republican, not by the votes of the people of the States, not by the votes of the Legislatures of the States, but by so infamous a bargain and sale that the decent Republican journals of the United States are all compelled, for shame, to apologize for the infamy. Thirty-seven Republican Senators of the United States are partners in this guilt, and constitute the "Co." of the firm of Mahone & Co. Never before in the history of the United States Senate did its members of any political faith separately and solidly engage in so bald, open and disgraceful a scheme of corruption as that with which these thirty-seven Senators have defiled themselves. The effects of this corrupt, predatory transaction can not fail to be demoralizing to our politics and to our public sentiment. Ward politicians in our great cities sometimes buy and sell; but it was not expected that thirty-seven Republican United States Senators would sink to a level in political methods with the ward politicians of Philadelphia, for example, till recently a great Republican stronghold; nor was it expected that a Virginia Democrat, who could be elected to the Senate of the United States, could be bought like an ox or an ass. It is creditable to the New York Times that, among other decent Republican journals, it feels the necessity of apologizing for this low behavior on the part of the Republican Senators. The firm of Mahone & Co. begins business in disgrace. The terms of the partnership are those of iniquity, and are those which might probably be fitly executed in a den of thieves, but which ill become the highest legislative temple of the Union.

This partnership will not commend itself to the approval of the candid, intelligent men of the country. We do not believe that good can come of it to either of the partners in the iniquity. We cannot but think that Americans will presently tire of these methods far up in our Federal politics. We do not believe that a partnership between one traitor and thirty-seven corruptionists will have a business career long and successful. Its gains will be ill-gotten. We do not believe that public opinion in this country has been so far demoralized and lowered in tone by the Presidential theft of four years ago as to look with complacency upon all manner of political villainy. But, unquestionably, the most deplorable feature in the theft of the Presidency and in this corrupt procuring of the spoils of the Senate is the poisonous effect of such methods upon public sentiment. They are dangerous precedents. They lower the ideals of public virtue. They taint the minds of thousands of young men, of boys just budding into voters. The evil effects of such precedents are measureless. They tend to teach the rising generation, and the coming generations, that politics in this great republic must mean theft, or treachery, or purchase.

The behavior of the Democratic Senators in this matter is creditable to themselves and the great organization which they represent in the Senate, and will compel the admiration and approval of fairminded men throughout the country. They stooped to no dishonor. They have been generous, magnanimous, not greedy for spoils, and they have maintained their dignity and self-respect, if they have lost the emoluments which belong to the majority in the Senate. It is announced that the President of the United States endeavored to make fragrant the infamy of Mahone & Co. by sending flowers to the Virginia partner; but the behavior of the Democratic Senators has been made fragrant by their honorable, self-respectful bearing. The Democrats in the Senate have not yet resorted to filibustering and obstructing devices to secure petty ends, or to prevent the action of the Senate upon important public questions. It has been easily in their power at least to prevent the Republicans from organizing the Senate. Mahone & Co. do not constitute a quorum of the Senate, and, by refusing to vote, the Democrats could have prevented a quorum indefinitely, blocked the public business, and retained the present Senate organization till death, or resignations, or new elections, should change the political complexion of that body. On three recent occasions the Republicans of the Senate have committed this offense—twice near the close of the Forty-sixth Congress, and now, to prevent the organization of the Senate by the Democrats, who were in a clear majority. The Republican Senators threatened by this filibustering process to prevent a Democratic organization of the Senate till, by fresh arrivals and by the purchase of Mahone, they could organize it themselves. They insisted that Democratic Senators should pair with vacant Republican seats in the Senate, with men not yet elected to the Senate, and endeavored to make the country believe that if Democrats would not pair with Republicans not yet members of the Senate the Democratic party was a desperate, revolutionary, spoils-grabbing party. As one Democratic Senator maintained in the debate, pairing has become a great evil and great hindrance to the public business. But if members of the Senate must pair with men who are not members of the Senate, pairing has certainly gone too far. We cannot but believe that the calm verdict of the country in this matter will be one of disapproval and condemnation of the course of Mahone & Co., and that the behavior of the Democratic Senators in a critical and tempting hour will win the thoughtful commendation of the land.

KELLOGG AND AFTERWARD.

The people of the country, remarks a contemporary, do not appreciate how conservative, patriotic and magnanimous has been the course of the Democratic United States Senators in the last Congress and in this session of the Senate. The Republican press, which has so much of the ear of the country, perverts the facts, falsifies the record, and imitates the robber who runs shouting "Stop thief!" Let us look back a little.

In the Forty-sixth Congress the seat held in the Senate by William Pitt Kellogg, of Louisiana, was contested. The Democrats had a majority of eight in the Senate, and could do what they pleased. It was as apparent then, as now, that after the 4th of March the Republicans could take possession of the Senate organization by the easy purchase of Mahone, and the casting vote of the Vice President. It was in the power of the Democrats in the Senate by unseating Kellogg to make the vote of the Vice President unavailable, and the purchase of the traitor, Mahone, an empty, useless thing. There was no Democratic Senator unaware of the possible and probable contingency which has now arisen, and by which the officers and committees of the Senate are to pass into Republican hands. Here was a great temptation. The temptation was greater because the case against Kellogg was so strong as to soothe the average political conscience, if it had any hesitancy in voting to unseat him. It was maintained and shown that the State Government of Louisiana, at the time of Kellogg's alleged election, was fraudulently in power, inaugurated and sustained by force and fraud, by false returns of illegal Returning Boards; that the Legislature which elected Kellogg was never elected; that it never had a quorum; that its members were bribed; that it fell of its own inherent lifelessness, leaving no trace of its existence save Kellogg's alleged election. We use almost the language of a Senator who voted to retain Kellogg in his seat. What, under such circumstances, in such a case, and under such a temptation, was the action of a Democratic Senate? It refused to unseat Mr. Kellogg. Why? Because the case of Mr. Kellogg had once before been under the advisement of the Senate, a body that never dies, and had been carefully considered, and the Senate had found that Mr. Kellogg was entitled to his seat. A Democratic Senate said that the decision was of such dignity and high authority that it should not be reversed save under circumstances which placed such reversal without the borders of partisan spirit and beyond suspicion of partisan promptings. Democratic Senators had such respect for the Senate as to pay deference to the decision of a Republican Senate. A Democratic Senate then could have made sure the possession of the Senate organization now. The country ought to understand, if it does not, that the behavior of the Democrats in the Senate in this matter was conscientious, patriotic, dignified, respectful to the body which they then controlled, and unavaricious for spoils. The country does not need to be told that Republican Senators, under similar circumstances, would have tossed Kellogg out of the Senate chamber with as few qualms of conscience as were seen in their purchase of Mahone and in their repeated obstruction of public business by filibustering to accomplish their ends in spoils and politics.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

FRIDAY, March 25.—SENATE.—Senator Langdon introduced a bill to establish three Appellate Courts in as many districts of the State, these courts to hear appeals from Circuit, Superior and Criminal Courts, except appeals by defendants and the State in felony cases, and appeals from Superior Courts having a general term. The court in each district shall consist of three Judges, to be chosen at the next general election, one to serve two years, one three years and one four years, the term thereafter to be for four years. The bill is to take effect upon its passage, the Governor to appoint the Judges. An especial feature of the bill is a provision for the cumulative-voting feature upon what is known as the "Illinois plan." Electors may cast two or three votes for one man if they desire. The Indianapolis Police Judge bill was amended so as to leave the appointment of such officer discretionary with the City Council. The House resolution relative to relaying the corner-stone of the new State House consumed several hours. An amendment finally prevailed, directing the Commissioners to erect a tablet commemorating Indiana's part in the war of the rebellion. The Revision Committee was directed to report a bill providing for holding general elections on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November. Amendments were made in the Public Offices bill requiring all county offices to open at 8 a. m., and requiring records to keep a Mechanics' Lien bill. The bond of notaries public was reduced from $2,000 to $1,000.

HOUSE.—The House adopted an amendment to the civil code, allowing Judges in property trials to grant changes of venue at discretion. A bill was introduced permitting railway corporations to consolidate lines in this State upon a vote of three-fourths of the stockholders interested. A concurrent resolution was adopted directing the Trustees of the Institute for Feeble Minded Children to dismiss the present Superintendent, Dr. B. F. Ibach, as per report of the committee. The Senate bill passed abolishing the Superior Court in Cass county. A bill was introduced imposing heavy penalties for adulterating milk. The bill passed conferring upon City Judges when elected the judicial powers now exercised by Mayors of cities, also authorizing Circuit Judges to appoint Commissioners to select the panel of grand and petit jurors; limiting litigants before Peace Justices to one change of venue; and authorizing the mortgage of the State fair grounds, and appropriating $4,000 per annum for payment of interest on the debt. About 100 sections of the civil code were passed upon. An Apportionment bill is being prepared on the basis of the recent census. It is understood no change will be made in the Senatorial districts, but the lower house will be fixed so as to insure fifty-one Republican Representatives, with six doubtful, the remainder Democratic.

SATURDAY, March 26.—SENATE.—The Senate passed the bill authorizing the Bishop of the Episcopal Church to transfer property of the churches held by him in trust directly to the churches themselves, and adopted an amendment to the Public Officers' bill allowing all county, township and municipal officers to interrogate the Attorney General. By the casting-vote of the Lieutenant Governor it reduced the notary bond from $2,000 to $1,000 for the benefit of female notaries. The Governor sent to the Senate the name of Thomas Wilson, Jr., of Daviess county, for Coal-Mine Inspector.

HOUSE.—The House received the report of the Committee upon Stationery Expenses during the regular session, showing a total expense of $397.28. The bill appropriating $4,000 to reimburse persons for losses sustained by the burning of the Orphans' Home at Knightstown four years ago came to a vote, but failed for want of a constitutional majority. Other bills of minor importance were passed.

MONDAY, March 28.—SENATE.—The Senate frittered away the morning session without a quorum, and absorbed the principal part of the afternoon in discussing the section of the officers and offices bill relative to legal advertising. The minority report, recommending that insurance statements be printed as now provided by law, was concurred in after a sharp debate. Bills were introduced: For the refunding of money erroneously paid County Treasurers; appropriating money to carry on appeals in divers will suits; providing for the registry of voters, and to prevent fraudulent practices at elections. The bill for the taxation of telegraph and telephone companies was laid upon the table, and the bill limiting the railway transportation of passengers to 3 cents per mile was indefinitely postponed. The Compromise Medical bill was called up, but, owing to lack of a quorum, the motion that the Senate do not concur went over until to-morrow. The bill providing for constructing a sewer for the Female Reformatory and Deaf and Dumb Asylum, the State to pay half the expense and the city of Indianapolis the other, was passed.

HOUSE.—The House met at 2 p. m., and worked without a quorum on the Civil Code bill, which was read a third time. The dry routine work was relieved toward evening by the presentation of a Speaker's chair to the Speaker, Dr. Edwins, of Monroe, making the tender on behalf of the donors.

TUESDAY, March 29.—SENATE.—The Senate referred the House bill embracing a codification of all the laws concerning common schools to the Educational Committee, first reading the bill by sections. The House General Appropriation bill occupied the remainder of the day and night sessions, with the exception of passing the Officers and Offices act through third reading. Amendments were made to the Appropriation bill increasing the salary of the Adjutant General, State Auditor and Printing Superintendent to $1,500 per annum. The nomination of Thomas Wilson, Jr., for Mine Inspector was confirmed.

HOUSE.—The House worked famously in the transaction of necessary business. There were two lively subjects under consideration. The Compulsory Education bill failed to pass for want of a constitutional majority—46 to 39. Two reports were had from the conference committee on the proposed Prohibition act, one recommending its passage. This report was adopted—53 to 31. A concurrent resolution was offered proposing to amend the constitution by striking out the provision requiring the Supreme Court to give a statement in writing, in every decision of every question arising, in the records. The bill defining the duties of Clerks and Recorders in the settlement of decendents' estates failed for want of a constitutional majority. The bill relating to liens on water craft passed. The Coal-Oil bill was amended so as to permit the appointment of Deputy Inspectors in any locality, after which the bill passed by 57 to 29. The Civil-Code bill and the bills amending the special charter of Concordia College, Fort Wayne, authorizing the Protestant Episcopal church of this State to raise a fund for the support of a Bishop, and for the collection of judgments for fines and forfeitures, were passed. A bill was introduced providing for a Registry law.

SENATE.—The Senate refused to concur in the House amendments to the Practice act, and a conference committee was appointed. The Senate passed the bill relating to public offices and officers, but refused to concur in the House amendment to the Civil Code bill. The day was passed considering the General Appropriation bill. The Insane Asylum was allowed $345,000 for maintenance, $15,000 for repairs, and $12,000 for clothing. Prosecuting attorneys' salaries were raised to $700 per annum, not including fees. The House of Refuge was given $45,000, and Purdue University $20,000 per annum. All the amendments were engrossed. The codified bill on officers and offices was passed, 36 to 6, and Senators Viehe and Comstock were named as members of the joint conference on the Coal Oil and Civil Code bills.

HOUSE.—The House considered the resolution providing that the people shall vote upon a prohibition amendment to the constitution to be known as article 17, and it was finally adopted, 55 to 35. The 6-per-cent. interest bill failed for want of a constitutional majority, 41 to 26, and an effort to secure a recall and the enforced attendance of "dodgers" led to a spirited passage between Buskirk, of Monroe, father of the measure, and Gibson, of Clark, temporarily acting as Speaker. The report of the conference committee on the Practice act was concurred in. The State House corner-stone memorial business came up in the afternoon, and several hours were used in orations. The proposition to erect a soldiers' monument costing $750,000 was voted down, 46 to 38. Another proposition to erect a $300,000 column in the colonnade of the State House was referred. Three code bills relative to highways, divorces, and enumeration of voters were passed. So also the bill authorizing the expenditure of the remaining 3-per-cent. funds for repairs of roads and allowing a special tax in Indianapolis for sewer purposes.

THURSDAY, March 31.—SENATE.—The Senate passed bills legalizing the incorporation of Geneva; requiring Commissioners to furnish Judges with room during vacations; appropriating $6,000 for the removal of a sand-bar in Calumet river; authorizing railroad companies to own and control telegraph lines; providing for the registration of dogs; authorizing the incorporation of telephone exchanges defining the Thirty-first judicial circuit, and relating to redemption of land sold on execution. Bills were introduced, requiring County Treasurers to pay to State Treasurer all interest collected for the county, and defining Cass county as the Twenty-ninth judicial circuit. The Thirty-first judicial circuit was made to consist of Lake, Porter, Stark, and Pulaski counties. Several bills failed for want of a constitutional majority. The Senate refused to accept the House substitute for the Yancey Medical bill, and Senators Yancey and Woollen were designated as a conference committee. The Probate bill was made the special order for to-morrow. The new Dog law requires that all dogs shall be ornamented within a given time, which led Bens to present a series of resolutions instructing the committee to report a bill for the incorporation of dog-collar factories. Adopted.

HOUSE.—The House passed the bill ordering an enumeration of males over 21 years of age in 1883, and every six years thereafter, and the bill in aid of the triangulation of the State now in progress by United States surveyors. The 6-Per-Cent. Interest bill again failed for want of a constitutional majority, so also the bill appointing five commissioners to assist the Supreme Court. The bill passed separating the Bureau of Statistics from the Geological Department and providing for the appointment of a State Geologist at a salary of $1,800 per annum. So also the bill concerning husband and wife, wherein the latter if bound as principal on her official bond is debarred from becoming surety for any one, makes her liable for improvements on property, and gives her recourse against her husband when he deserts her, is an habitual drunkard, has been convicted of felony or has broken the marriage covenant. The Gravel-road bill, among other things providing a tax of 15 cents on the $100 appraisement for purchasing and keeping in repair free roads, passed. The committee investigating the management of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum made majority and minority reports.

"IS THAT marble?" said a gentleman, pointing to a bust of Kentucky's great statesman. "No, sir; that's Clay," quietly replied the dealer.

THE democrats of Cincinnati elected Wm. Means mayor by over 2,500 majority.

WE make a note of the present severe weather for the use of the future oldest inhabitant. The past week has been very cold, as well as very stormy. The snow here has been four or five inches deep, and the mercury has been as low as 16 degrees above zero. At other points in this state, and in Ohio, reports show that the snow fell to depths varying from eight to twenty inches. As the weather is at present, several days will be required to melt off the snow now on the ground.

OHIO papers are now publishing the statement of insurance companies in the same manner as many wished to have it done in this state. Here we have usually given the work to the two leading papers in Indianapolis, the Sentinel and Journal, but an effort has been made in the legislature this winter to have the country papers publish these statements. We have not given the subject much attention, but it does seem as if a published statement to be at all valuable, should not be confined to two papers, and those two both in one city. A company may be doing the bulk of its business in the north end of the state and not one in a thousand of its patrons would see the statement of its condition as published in the Sentinel and Journal.

THE Morey letter has almost been abandoned by those republican leaders who so confidently claimed they knew where to find the writer. They asserted that they could show that Philp was its author, but have not proved it, and are about to withdraw the indictment against him. They have been soliciting subscriptions to defray the expense of the investigation, but leading republicans do not seem to respond very heartily. Mr. Hewitt, chairman of the democratic national committee, however, comes forward with the very liberal offer of $100 to be used in clearing up the mystery. Mr. Hewitt, however, does not seem to believe the republican leaders are in earnest, and the tone of his letter goes to show that he still believes that Garfield was the author. It certainly does seem as if the bottom facts could have been reached before this. If the letter was a forgery, the perpetrator should be punished. If not a forgery, the people have an interest in knowing it

Union City has organized a novel insurance company. It is to provide a fund for the dowry of such marriageable ladies as join the association and contribute to its fund. In this way its members, upon their marriage, find themselves in possession of one or two thousand dollars in cash. The idea is a new one, but if properly managed ought to be a success.

There is still a terrible uncertainty as to the extent of suffering in the remoter parts of the west, caused by the severe winter. In some parts of Minnesota and Dakota but little can be learned as to the condition of those not living near railroads, and the roads themselves impassable for a large portion of the winter. It is feared that when spring opens the suffering and loss of life and property will be greater than now known.

The Goshen Democrat says of a tree in Branch county, Michigan, near Bronson: The tree is what is called Swamp White Oak. It measures 29 feet around the lower end, 5 feet from the ground, and consequently is over 9 feet in diameter. It holds its size well up to the limbs, and is fully 60 feet from the base to the first limb.

At a recent Sweedish wedding in Wisconsin, they attended to the beer-drinking before the marriage ceremony was looked after. They all forgot about the less-important business of the evening, and didn't know the difference till next day. Then the bride insisted that the matter be finished. So a few more kegs of beer were secured, and that evening the entire ceremony was performed. You can't fool a Wisconsin girl, even if the snow is eleven feet deep.

From the Hicksville papers we learn that Miss Savilla Kring is holding a revival meetings in the Evangelical church, she is very earnest in her appeals, is quite an elocutionist, and bids fair to accomplish much good in Hicksville, though as she has been recently afflicted with sore throat, there is danger of overtaxing her powers. The church is crowded nightly and her remarks are making an impression upon professors as well as outsiders.

Old Abe, the Wisconsin war eagle, died recently in his room in the basement of the capitol, at Madison, Wisconsin. Old Abe had no reason to be ashamed of his record, for, besides serving his country in the field, has made over $80,000 for various charitable institutions, which secured him. The contributions were made in the way of purchasing his photographs, paying admission fees, etc. Abe was in twenty odd battles, and an improved farm in Illinois was once offered for him.

The Chicago papers speak of the latest attempts to use petroleum as fuel in steam engines. Super-heated steam and crude petroleum are brought into contact by pipes and atomizers. When they are thus intimately brought into contact, the combined product burns with great rapidity, and produces intense heat. Those who have given the subject attention, believe the plan can be used on locomotives, and all steam-producing engines, greatly reducing the expense of fuel.

Lagrange Standard says: Jacob S. Brown received a letter from Mr. Paul, foreman of the surveying party here recently, who said he was then surveying a new line from Pioneer, Ohio, to Angola, and thought he would enter Steuben county about two miles south of the former survey. This shows that the surveyors are still pegging away at finding a line for the new Vanderbilt road. We are still further informed that the surveying party reached Angola last Friday, and that they are driving grade stakes, also that George W. McConnell, of Angola, has received orders to buy ties for the road. The present line runs about one mile south of Angola.

Lagrange Standard says: A blacksmith by name of W. E. Snoden, invited a widow lady with whom he boarded, to take a ride with him to the residence of a friend. Unconscious of any danger, she accepted the invitation, and went with him, but instead of going to the place agreed upon he drove over the Michigan line, and thereupon, without further preliminaries, drew a pistol, and informed the lady she could take her choice, marry him or be ruthlessly murdered there all alone. It was something like Hobson's choice, so she gave her consent, and they were married. Upon reaching home again, she secured the services of an attorney to see what could be done under such unpleasant circumstances. As there was no law covering abduction with matrimonial intents, she had him arrested and lodged in jail for carrying a concealed weapon, and will institute proceedings for a divorce.

The following interesting accident is reported from Mitchell, in this state: A tramp was buried at the water-tank, in the south part of town, during the extreme cold in December, 1880. Since that day till the present day, the sexton has noticed a small black-and-tan dog watching by the grave of his master, for the dog was with the tramp when found. The dog would growl at the old sexton when approached, but to-day he had so far approached to starvation as to be helpless, when the old man carried the poor brute to the house, and when food was placed to his mouth he was able to swallow. As soon as the dog is restored to strength sufficient, he will be returned to the grave of his master, furnished with a comfortable kennel, and the people will see that he is well fed and cared for. It is believed by the sexton that during the three months, lacking three days, the dog has not been away from the grave or eaten a bite.

IS GRANT a pauper? is the question now going the rounds of the press. From the following note it would seem that he is not so poor as is claimed by some of his friends, but it seems to be the habit with him to take anything and everything in the shape of a present, no matter by whom it is offered:

> "As to Grant's poverty," says the Brooklyn Eagle, "it is just as well to have it understood distinctly that, if he be really in a state of genteel pauperism, the fault is his own; unless, indeed, it be held that it is a serious hardship to be forced to live on less than the income of a Gould or a Vanderbilt. If Grant has squandered his income he is himself to blame, and ought to suffer the consequences. It happens, however, that he is not exactly on the brink of starvation. A few months ago he said he had an assured income of $7,000 per annum. Is there anything heartrending in the condition of the American citizen who has to live upon $7,000 a year? The professed friends of Grant are doing him no good by falsely advertising him as a pauper, forever holding out hat and hand for nickels, and if Grant had a particle of robust Americanism in him he would put a stop to the humiliating, degrading and nauseating business. Grant is not poor. He is not old nor infirm, but he is mercenary. He willingly submits to offensive notoriety, if it brings him money."

A Card.

Having arranged our business affairs with all parties concerned, so as to conduct the same in our individual name, the firm hitherto known as Willis & Co., of Auburn, Indiana, will, from this date forward, be M. B. Willis, who will conduct the business as heretofore, and will be responsible for the same, and thankful for the liberal patronage of the past, we shall endeavor, by fair and honest dealings, to merit the same to a fuller extent in the future, as our stock will be kept complete at all times, and we invite your attention to the same before purchasing elsewhere.

Respectfully, M. B. WILLIS.

THE EMPIRE HARDWARE

THE BEST SHOVELS and SPADES IN THE MARKET!

PATENT PLAIN BACK SOLID STEEL SHOVELS.

These Shovels Combine the Best Features of Both the Socket and Strap Goods.

The Blades and upper straps are made from a single solid piece of steel, without rivet or weld, the upper strap forming a half socket at its junction with the blade, giving greatly increased strength at its joint over the best ordinary shovels. Call when you want a first-class shovel or spade.

We also handle the celebrated Auburn, N. Y. Steel Goods, Forks, Hoes, Rakes, Etc. They are number 1 in every particular, and second to none in the market. When you want a good Fork, Hoe or Rake, call for the Auburn N. Y. goods and get the best; none their equal. We also have the celebrated Millard Scythes, the Boss of the field, and every scythe warranted. The celebrated John Deere Cultivator comes next. "The King of the Field." Call when you want a number one cultivator.

THE BURCH PLOW next on the list. The plow that every farmer wants. No other plow will do the same work; no plow will work as well in both hard and soft ground; no other plow holds as easy, runs as steadily or cleans the furrow out as nicely; no other plow is as cheap, taking in consideration all that pertains to a good plow.

HARDWARE, an immense quantity, from a paper tack to a thresher engine at reduced prices, to make room for other goods. Now is the time to buy and take advantage of the enormous low prices at which we are now offering.

A GOOD CLOTHE-WRINGER, all white rubber, for $3.00; TINWARE at wholesale prices; PUMPS at cost to make room for other goods.

THE MARSHALSHIP.

Shall we all Gather at the Caucus?

The Democratic caucus will meet this month and go through the usual form of ballot to determine who shall run for marshal. This office seems to be the most desirable one on account of the salary connected with it and each applicant will use every honorable endeaver to secure the nomination. We believe that there are three aspirants, namely: Francis Picker, Joe Ruffenberger and Albert Umber. These gentlemen are all worthy and are also in every way capable of discharging duties thereof. But there are several points to consider. Of course it is not exactly the duty of a newspaper to pick out any particular individual and use its influence wholly for him, without any compensation whatever; while on the other hand we would like to see the most deserving have the office. However, we leave the matter with the voters or the town, knowing fulwell that their judgement will be used for the good of the people and the community in general.

Not Amputated.

The rumor that was afloat, the fore part of the week, that John Bunch had his leg amputated is not the facts of the matter. His limb is just the same length that it always was—5ft., 12 inches. But without joking, John has had a very sore knee. While he and Bro. Dugan were sawing a log, the handle accidently slipped out of Bunch's hand and one of the teeth lit upon his knee cap. The weather being bad he took cold in it and for several weeks has been confined to the house. John has suffered day and night; he's been nursed, petted and the good people of Stamets town have spared no time nor money to make things as pleasant as possible for him. He is now convalescent, however, and will soon be prepared to kneel and thank the Giver of all good things that he don't have to wear a cork leg—and then cork by the rod is expensive, too.

Another Snow Story.

No doubt but that all the boys, and girls, too, would like to hear from Pete Eldridge, and know of his success, whereabouts, etc. Well, Pete is at Edgerton, Wisconsin, and has a situation on a newspaper, called the Tobacco Reporter. He likes the city, and also his "posish." But to the snow story: It began snowing in the evening, and, on the following morning, there were ten feet of snow. No railroad trains have been seen for several days, and the roads have sustained great damages. Other property was destroyed, and stock injured and killed. If there are any more snow storms down there during the summer, we hope Pete will let us know.

The Hop.

Last Friday evening our young people held the last dance of the season, at Ensley's hall, and a splendid time was had. There was enough participated to make the occasion enjoyable, and the calf-skin boot and side-lace shoe waltzed around with the rapidity of the balance-wheel of a threshing machine, until a reasonable hour when all went home well pleased. Edgerly's orchestra furnished the music.

Bounced.

We are sorry to state that Judge Picker, who has been employed at the Junction as target-keeper for the past five years, received his discharge last Friday. We are sorry to learn this, as the judge has served the company a long time, and certainly understands the business.

SMALL DOSES.

To be Taken Before or After Meals.

—Wheat market dull.

—Sort out your field corn.

—Lots of fish in the market.

—M. B. Willis has a new sign.

—School closes in three weeks.

—Hank Yesbera has a new out-fit.

—Our wood pile—oh, how gaunt.

—Mr. Slaybaugh has a new clerk.

—Keep mum on the weather subject.

—Tree molasses brings one dollar a gallon.

—The stave-factory was not running Monday.

—Charley Groscop has his team out on pasture.

—This kind of weather does not suit the street venders.

—A few loads of wood would not come amiss just now.

—And now the bridge contractors are slowly waking up.

—Billy Stimley clerks for Sherm. Hollister now and then.

—Wouldn't the Judge make a good Marshal? "Hew bet."

—John Robbins and Frank Copper enjoyed the dance hugely.

—"Old Faithful" gets in town each day with a load of wood.

—The Presbyterian Sunday school elected officers last Sunday.

—Mr. Hollopeter has hung up one crutch. Time will conquer.

—This is a solid paper; that is there are no leads between the lines.

—The city hacks look as though a little water would'nt hurt 'em.

—Canon & Murphy are repairing several rooms in the court-house.

—Coal is scarce. This is a nice time of the year to talk about coal.

—If you want your face shaved clean get in Charley Pommert's chair.

—Doc. Groscop has appointed himself guardian of the estate of Hank Lesh.

—Last Saturday was a busy day, notwithstanding the weather and bad roads.

—Shearer & Wilson have the frame erected for an addition to their planing-mill.

—Now the Assessor calls on a fellow and inquires into his matters in general.

—J. C. Somers' family has moved into the Lanning property, in the north end of town.

—What will we do when Penshot Corners have no more college locals in the Record?

—Charley Klotz does his delivering with a hand-cart. Rather do it than curry horses.

—D. D. Snyder is selling buggies now. What Dave will go into next, is a conundrum.

—Col. W. J. Austin, of the Boot Up side Down, has arove with a large stock of goods.

—Miss Rosa Shaffer is teaching Sadie Hare's Sunday-school class, during her stay in Michigan.

—Wonder if the "medical society" will all meet on the "right hand" when Gabriel toots?

—Monday and Tuesday the mercury showed eighteen degrees with snow four or five inches deep.

—Tom. Jordon, of Corunna, will go to Garrett next week and join the "camel-back" army.

—J. D. Beard, of Smithfield, has been appointed administrator of the estate of E. W. Beard, deceased.

—Isaac Roth has a new horse. It has the appearance of one of Jockey Brown's corn-fed steeds.

—Republican candidates for Marshal shiver already. They stand a slim show, poor fellows.

—Its a prety hard matter for a reporter to write articles for parties, &c. when he don't get an invite.

—An interesting little party of invited friends were entertained last Saturday evening, by Miss Flora Hoffman.

—Some of the machinery at the Hub and Spoke factory broke Monday which necessitated a few hours delay.

—Two of Wash. Teeter's boys have been attending our schools this winter. Wash. is bound to give 'em an "odercation."

—To be up with the demand of the times, we have ordered and received some new type. Better work than ever now.

—The first dance that Elza Shaffer has missed since he has been big enough to hop, was the one given last Friday evening.

—Mr. Myers, of Defiance, Ohio, will establish a dentist office in Mrs. Hare's room, lately vacated by Miss Alice McKay.

—There was a concert given at the M. E. church last Sabbath evening, in behalf of the missionary society of this place.

—Mel. Tarney has got to be quite a bird stuffer. We don't mean after they are prepared and cooked, but a real taxidermist.

—The girls are terribly out of humor owing to the bad weather and sloppy sidewalks, and have named their pullback, "pull-up."

Shad. Rodenbaugh is driving 'bus at Lancing, Mich. Put Shad on an omnibus and he gets a pretty fair view of the county.

—The marshal wishes us to say to all owners of hogs now running at large, that they must shut them up next week. If they don't, he will.

—Charley Jones says a fellow can't turn 'round unless "they" put it in the COURIER. How does Charley know—he don't take the paper.

—A. J. Carmer hurt himself again last week, while unloading a log at Mitchell's saw-mill. It will not prove very severe, however.

—Chris. Baker, that jolly hotel man at the Junction, has traded horses again. Chris. wouldn't make a bad Gypsy if he had enough experience.

Valedictory.

Last Sunday forenoon, the Rev. H. J. Norris delivered his farewell sermon, at the Methodist church, in this city. Mr. Norris will go to conference this week, and will not likely remain here longer to watch over the flock that has been under his charge so long. The reverend gentleman, has won the respect and good will of our people for his many good qualities of head and heart. They will long cherish a kindly rememberance of him.

—The Hot Springs Star, of Tuesday this week, says: "The base ball season has begun," and in another place that "we are eating greens." O, for a little hot springs up here. The ground has not been entirely free from snow since the 28th day of October, and for the past week snow has fallen every day. To-day is the 5th of April and we notice sleds upon the streets. The boys think more of skating than playing base ball.

—Miss Arabella Root, the celebrated singer, assisted by Prof. W. B. Williams, elocutionist, and Miss May Elliott, pianist, will give an entertainment at Ensley's hall, Thursday evening, April 7. Miss Root is a pupil of the well known singer, Garcia, the master who taught Jenny Lind. This is of itself, a sufficient recommendation that the entertainment will be a rare one. Mr. Williams is also highly spoken of as a humorist and imitator.

—The Hot Springs Daily Star comes to us with Tom. C. Mays as editor and proprietor. We are glad to learn of Tom's success. We have noticed that the paper has steadily improved since Mr. Mays first went there, and with Tom in the editorial chair and Jack Little at the head of the job rooms the Hot Spings people can console themselves with the fact that "there will be something goin' on 'bout dar."

The Steuben Republican announced last week that it intended to let up on the "Junius-Beight," controversy. This will, no doubt, be a great disappointment(?) to the people of northern Indiana. Those fellows better read the second and third verses of the fifteenth chapter of Job.

—Chris. Baldock makes a specialty of training dogs. If you would like to have your canine taught to roll over, stand on his left ear and howl without being told, give him a call. His method can't be beat and charges are reasonable.

—The present administration is determined to administer the government of strictly honest principles, and are, therefore, extremely anxious to know whether widow Reeder's bible has yet been seen. Let no guilty man escape.

—Gypsy Blaney, whose other name is John, will drop the teaming business this summer and go back to his first love—"slinging mud." John is a thoroughbred in this capacity, and has a number of jobs to start on.

—Easter comes one week from next Sunday, and the average town boy will make it a point to look up all the louse hen's nests that are not presided over by a sharp eye and a double barreled shot-gun. That's eggsactly so.

—On Monday of this week, an inquisition was held over a young man named Casebeer, who has been in the county-house for some time. He was declared insane, and will be taken to the asylum in a few days.

—How. Shaffer and wife, of Bryan, Ohio, were down to see their father and mother, Mr. & Mrs. James Latson, last week, and How. do you like to be at the head of a family anyway, Mr. Shaffer?

—Anthony Swineford and the contractors, Whitmar Bros., have some trouble in regard to the erection of a barn, belonging to the former, and legal dispensers will settle the difficulties.

—Peter H. Brandon, better known as Pete, has struck a new scheme (an idea that never bit him before) and will, when the roads get a little muddier, start out in the huckster business.

—County farm consolidated report: No. of males, 12; No. females, 11; total 23. Inventory of personal property amounts to the sum of $3,433.33. The institution is in good condition, —The marshal informs us that he will begin scraping the streets next week, providing the weather will permit. We have to make some allowances for the weather, surely.

—There are no less than 2,800 dogs within the coporation of this town, and we'll wager our best hat that the Assessor will not find one half as many.

—Those who attended Miss Root's entertainment in Waterloo, speak very highly of the entire programme, and say it is the best they have attended for years.

—Dr. T. G. Matheny has been troubled for a couple of weeks with a lame knee, which Mr Rheumatism attacked unaware to the Doctor. He is all right now.

—One of Joe Rectenwalt's children was buried at this place, last Friday. We believe that Mr. Rectenwalt lives in the vicinity of Garrett.

—Mr. Rummel, "big ingin" at the county farm, does not stop for the bad roads. His teams are hauling the usual fertilizer daily.

—We are told that there are not enough brick masons in the county to do the work that will be contracted for this summer.

—Will our young fellows, a la peacock brigade, ever forget that the school marms were here on examination day.

—James Anderson made a flying trip to Pleasant Lake, last Saturday, traded horses and returned home happy.

—The festive frog begins to yelp.—Butler Record.

That's either a whopper, or else Butler is a mighty healthy place for frogs.

—It was laughable to see Doc. Ryan bite his coat collar, and play with the curtain strings in a down town residence, Sunday.

—J. L. Davis, the Pioneer hardward man, is invoicing his stock and making some attractive improvements upon his store-room.

—Kahn & Co. have changed their invitation.

A ROMANTIC MARRIAGE

The Widows' Children Beat the Widows.

A WATERLOO VICTORY.

In the quiet town of Waterloo, there dwelleth two widows, who are neighbors, viz: The widow Yant and the widow Lent. The widow Yant has an only son, called George A., whom the boys call "Burt," and the widow Lent has (or had, for Burt has got her now) an only daughter, called Celia. The widow's son and the widow's daughter had a great hankering for each others society. The widow Lent was displeased thereat, and made Celia a proposition to visit the Academie of the Lady of the sacred Heart, near the city of Ft. Wayne, which Celia unsuspectingly accepted, and they started thither a week ago last Monday, and, after they tarried there a few hours, the widow proposed to leave Celia in care of the lady superior of the academie, at which, Celia was exceedingly wroth, and administered such a chastisement to the lady superior as to effect her release. Then the widow proposed to Celia to go to Chicago, in the land of Illinois, and Celia consented, and the twain wended their way thither, but some way or other, Celia managed to notify the widow Yant's son, who also proceeded to Chicago, in the land of Illinois, and came to Celia's rescue and married her, and brought her home with him on the fast train on Monday evening, and the evening and the morning were the seventh day, and they all rested, and everything is now quiet on the Potomac.

Waterloo.

Mrs. O. T. Clark is still quite sick.

Mrs. John Leas is slowly improving.

Isaac Kelley, of Smithfield, is quite sick at this writing.

Dr. Darby has gone to Hot Springs, Ark, for his health.

Hi Leib says that April fool box he got did not fool him much.

Mrs Rice of Canton, Ohio, is visiting her sister, Mrs. John Leas.

Charlie Bassett took another trip to Hicksville, Ohio, this week.

Charles Kelley is afflicted with rheumatism in his left arm and side.

The little daughter of J. S. Bowers is lying dangerousl ill of sore throat.

Orson Edge is in Ann Arbor, where he has gone to have his lame ankle treated.

Alf. Kelley brought as nice a car load of potatoes to Waterloo, as we have seen.

The members of the smoking club are vigilant lest some of them violate the rules.

J. A. Boozer, in his usual "modest style" presented the COURIER office with a nice, new map.

John Koons took a trip to Garrett the other day. He reports every thing as thriving over there.

John Peterman has moved back to town. His friends will be glad to learn that he comes to stay.

A. J. Beard of Smithfield, has sold his farm to Wm. Hefty, and purchased the farm of A. E. Farrington.

There will be a Dutch dance at Haines' Hall on Easter Monday, April 18th, 1881. Music by Edgerly's band. A general invitation is extended.

B. Rothschild has returned from his trip to Chicago, where he had been to sort up their already large stock of dry goods. B. means business.

Mrs. Frank Hoover who has been staying with her parents here since the fire at Pleasant Lake, expects to return to that place soon and resume housekeeping

A consultation of the oldest inhabitants" should now be held, in order to settle the little difficulty between this first day of April and its predecessors.

Rev Kring of Canton, Ohio, is visiting his son-in-law, Rev. C. C. Beyrer.

Dell Clutter has returned to Hillsdale where he has been attending college.

Alfred Kelley is making a large quantity of excellent maple molasses. Ab. is getting to be the leading manufacturer of this delicious article in that section of the country.

Rev. Beyrer baptised several parties in the creek near town last Sunday. We would rather have some fellow give us $329 than stick us in the creek in such weather.

We have positive information that our butcher Frank Swartz is a good stepper as long as he has hold of the rear end of his buggy, but when he lets go he is not so sure footed.

Ike Mannheimer who recently went to Ann Arbor to have his eye treated for cataract, will probably lose his eye. A successful operation was performed, but it is claimed he did not take proper care of the eye while it was healing.

Mrs. Lamport and Miss Josie Thomas who have charge of the two primary departments will give a school entertainment Saturday evening of this week, at Waterman's Hall. The proceeds will be used in paying for the organ. Every one should assist in a cause so worthy. Admission 15 cents; children, 10 cents.

Rev Lacey and Beyrer preached their farwell sermons last Sunday. Whether they will be returned or not remains to be seen. Preachers are a good deal like a horse, in one respect. Wherever the stationing committee sees fit to hitch them up they must either work or balk.

—A private letter from John C. Somers, dated Tombstone, Arizona, March 30, 1881, to T. C. Elson, informs us that he is alive and well. The country, he says, can't be beat for climate. He sleeps in a tent, and says that the roads are dry and dusty, the mines are nearly all taken up, some of which pay while others do not. Wages four dollars a day and board eight dollars a week and lodge yourself. Lumber of an inferior quality from fifty to sixty dollars per thousand. He reports good society and good schools.

—A grand exhibition of beautiful paintings, accompanied by a lecture illustrating "Milton's Paradise Lost," will be given for the benefit of the Lutheran and Methodist sabbath-schools, at the M. E. church next Saturday evening, April 9, by the Lenker Bros., a couple of worthy young men about to enter the ministry, from Wittenburg college, Ohio. We hope for the benefit of the schools, that our citizens will give it attention.

—Parlee Stimely and Joseph Ebenezer Beugnot are now breathing the pure air and looking at the sights of Melhure City, Baker county, Oregon.

—Jacob Garrison, of Waterloo, made us a pleasant visit Tuesday. That being his birthday, he paid up his account with the COURIER. He is now 83 years old, but bears his years remarkably well.

Hymenial.

The wedding last Saturday evening at the restaurant parlors of our genial friend, Sherman Hollister, was a very brilliant affair. The contracting parties were Prof. Ralph W. Cobb, of Berlin Heights, Ohio, and Miss Sadie Hollister, of Auburn, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Hollister. The ceremony was performed by Rev. H. J. Norris, of Auburn. As to the supper, all we can say is that it was simply elegant. There were forty couples present, including quite a number of relatives from a distance. The parlors resounded with merriment, but amidst it all there were hearts that were sad. Those were the hearts of father and mother who were called up to give away in marriage their only child whom they idolized.

Among those from a distance were Mrs. Florence Green, of Huron, Ohio, youngest sister of Mr. Hollister, Mr. and Mrs. James Criser, West Unity, Ohio, Mrs. Jerome Showalter, of Decatur, Ind., Mr. J. S. Megginson, of Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Mr. J. S. Megginson and Miss Nellie Wheelock acted as groomsman and bridesmaid. After the ceremony was performed the happy couple were the recipients of a number of valuable and useful presents, among which were the following: Table-linen by A. S. Leas and lady, and John Baxter and lady; china tea-set by the bride's parents; silver castor by Mr. and Mrs. Wheelock and daughter Nellie; work-basket and invalid slippers by Miss Alice McKay; worsted mat by Miss Louie Henry; toilet-set by Miss Lottie Ford; six table napkins by Miss Mary Schrader; copy of Goldsmith's poems by J. S. Megginson, of Council Bluffs, Iowa; jewelry box, made of precious stones taken from the Rocky mountains, and valued at $200, by Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Walker, of Huntington, W. Va., uncle and aunt of the bride; copy of Milton's poems by Eddie and Vanna Cobb, of Berlin Heights. The following parties presented an elegant silver set: A. Robbins and wife, J. J. Van Auken and wife, J. L. Davis and wife, D. Y. Husselman and wife, C. S. Sears and wife, C. C. Shaffer and wife, J. A. Potter and wife, W. H. Kiblinger and wife, W. H. McQuiston and wife, E. D. Hartman and wife, R. Elson and wife, J. C. Henry and wife, F. G. Matheny and wife, W. J. Austin and wife, James Gilland and wife, Dr. J. B. Rasebeer and wife, Rev. H. J. Norris and wife, M. Houston and wife, Dr. J. H. Ford and wife, G. H. Yesbera, F. F. Leas, F. C. Davis, Fred. Yesbera, Elza Shaffer, G. L. Lanning, F. K. Davenport, W. E. Shaffer, Chas. Emanuel, Dr. V. A. Humphrey, B. Lowrey, Miss Male Cleveland, Miss Mollie Matheny, Mrs. M. Birdsall, Miss Frankie Ford, Miss B. A. Canon, Mrs. L. Osgood.

Hightoned.

Our legal friend W. H. Dills, esq., has renovated his office, partitioned off rooms for a general office, for a library and for private consultation. He has now one of the finest law studios in the city and invites everyone to "walk into his parlor." Mr. Dills is possessed of considerable style and dignity of manhood and has left nothing undone. He is located in Cool's building, second floor, on Seventh street. His son Frank is reading law with him.

Painting and Kalsomining.

We wish to say to the citizens of Auburn and the surrounding country who want work done in our line, such as painting, graining, kalsomining, whitewashing and paper-hanging, that we are prepared to do the same on short notice and at low rates. TO AN OLD COAT.

Poor coat, well loved for many reasons,
Since both of us grow old, be true;
This hand has brushed you for ten seasons,
E'en Socrates no more could do.
Whilst Time your thin and white-seamed stuff
Keeps on attacking without end,
Wisely, like me, his blows rebuff;
And never let us part, old friend.

That birthday fete, when first I wore you,
I mind well—memory yet is strong—
My friends around to honor bore you,
And poured their welcome forth in song.
Your shabby plight—of which I'm vain—
Hinders them not an arm to lend,
They'd freely feast us now again;
So never let us part, old friend.

You're patched behind, an ancient rending;
That, too, recalls a past delight;
One night to run from Jane pretending,
I felt her soft hand clutch me tight.
Torn were you, and that frightful tear
It took my Jane two days to mend,
While I was held her captive there;
So never let us part, old friend.

Have you been steeped in musk and amber,
Which fops sniff, looking in the glass?
Or pushed along an ante-chamber,
For swells to sneer at as we pass?
Throughout all France by faction rent,
Ribbons and stars fell strife can send—
A field-flower is your ornament;
So never let us part, old friend.

Fear no more days of idle ranging,
When our two fates become as one,
Of pleasure with plain interchanging,
Of intermingled rain and sun.
For the last time I soon shall doff
My clothes, just wait! and we will wend
Together, gently going off;
So never let us part, old friend.

THE YANKEE SCHOOLMASTER.

On "Miller's Hill" a farm-house; a lowland structure built of wood; whose clap-boards, weather-worn and gray, were falling into slow decay; whose mossy wooden lane-troughs swung from rusty irons rudely hung; whose curling shingles here and there betrayed the need of good repair; whose ancient chimney, capped with stone, with lichens partly overgrown above the sagging roof, looked down upon the spires of Brandon town.

An old gray barn was built near by, with heavy girths and scaffolds high, and solid sills and massive beams, and through the cracks and open seams the slanting sunshine used to play in golden gleams upon the hay, where oft, with many a shout, the children jumped and played about at hide and seek, or looked with care for hidden nests in corners there. Where oft at morn they used to hear the cackling hen and chanticleer, where, by the broad floor 'neath the mows, were cribs and stanchions for the cows, and strong plank stalls where horses stood to eat their hay from racks of wood, and, in a corner stowed away, a fanning-mill and old red sleigh. Where jolly farm-boys husked at night the golden corn by candle-light, and hung their lanterns by the bay on pitchforks thrust into the hay, where, sheltered from the autumn rain, with thundering flails they threshed the grain.

Each year the hum of honey-bees was heard amid the apple tree, the lilacs bloomed, the locusts fair with their sweet fragrance filled the air; the stubble fields were plowed and sown; the warm rain fell; the bright sun shone; the robins sang; the green grass grew; the roses blossomed in the dew; the tall red hollyhock once more bloomed brightly by the farm-house door; the sun-flower bent its gaudy head; the cattle in the pasture fed, the crickets chirped in meadows near, sounds were wafted to the ear o'er waving fields of tasseled corn, of clattering scythe and dinner horn. The reapers reaped their golden sheaves; the swallows left the stuccoed eaves; the apples in the autumn breeze grew ripe and mellow on the trees; the leaves were swept about the air; the fields were brown, the woodlands bare; the snow-flakes fell; the air grew chill; the sleigh-bells rang on "Miller's Hill."

The winter sky was overcast, the snow and sleet were falling fast. 'Twas Christmas eve; the air was cool; the children hurried home from school, with laughter loud and outcries shrill they reached the farm-house on the hill, they came across the kitchen floor, nor stopped to shut the entry door, all striving first the news to tell, exclaimed, in concert, with a yell: "The teacher's comin' here to stay; he's up the road a little way; he stopped to talk with Susan Stow, an' we ran home to let you know."

The mother stopped her spinning-wheel, and put away her creaking reel, swept up the dusty hearth with care, rolled down her sleeves and brushed her hair, smoothed out her rumpled gingham gown, and in her rocking-chair sat down; then, striving hard to look her best, she calmly waited for her guest.

Her ruddy, round, and fleshy face was bordered by a cap of lace; her nose was nearly hid from view by her plump cheeks of healthy hue; her eyes were bright, her hair was thin, she had a heavy double chin; her husband's arms, when both embraced, could barely circumscribe her waist.

Of all large women nine in ten will most admire the little men, and little men—why none may tell—will love large women quite as well. They woo, they wed, the man through life is quite o'ershadowed by the wife.

Soon, parting from his rustic flame, the tardy young schoolmaster came. His eyes were blue, his features fair, his chin o'ergrown with downy hair; behind his ears his locks of brown were smoothly brushed and plastered down; his bony limbs were large and long; his well-trained muscles firm and strong; the tall, stout boys that years before had thrown their master through the door his rod regarded with dismay, and seldom dared to disobey. The pride and hope of Hubbardton was tall Lycurgus Littlejohn, who had, his fellow-townsmen said: "A heap o' larnin' in his head." (Three terms in Midlebury College had given him his "heap" of knowledge.)

He often used to sit between the fair young girls of sweet sixteen and kindly help them "do their sums." They brought him fruit and sugar plums; they had their girlhood hopes and fears; his words were music in their ears; each smile he gave them had a charm; each frown would fill them with alarm. What envious looks at Susan Stow, his favorite scholar they would throw.

Her eyes and hair were dark as night, her skin was soft, and smooth, and white; a peach-like bloom her cheeks overspread; her lips like cherries, ripe and red. What wonder he could not conceal the glad, sweet thrill he use to feel through all his palpitating frame when to his desk she coyly came and, looking up with eyes of love, like some sly, timid little dove, would softly ask him to expound some knotty problem she had found? What being in the world below seemed half as sweet as Susan Stow? Her eyes would flash and, in return, his face would flush and strangely burn, and, when he tried to calculate some long, hard "sum" upon her slate, the figures danced before his sight like little gobblins, gay and white, and, when at night, with cheerful face, he started for his boarding place, what wonder that he came so slow in walking home with Susan Stow?

The woman crossed the kitchen floor to meet Lycurgus at the door, and, with a scrutinizing stare, she said: "Walk in an' take a chair, an' be to home while you are here. Come, Busby, take his things, my dear."

Forth from his corner, by the fire, the husband came at her desire. His head was bald, save here and there, stray little tufts of grizzled hair; his shoulders stooped, his form was thin, his knees were bent, his toes turned in; he wore a long blue flannel frock, gray trousers, and a satin stock; a cotton collar, tall and queer, was rudely rumpled around each ear; his face was mild, his smile was bland, as forth he put his ponderous hand, and said: "I think I see you well, I hope you'll stay a leetle spell; we're plain folks here I'd have you know, and don't go in for pride nor show." Then, after stepping on the cat, he took the teacher's coat and hat; he hung them on a rusty nail, and, picking up his milking pail, he slowly shuffled out of doors and went to do the evening chores.

Close by the firelight's cheerful glare Lycurgus drew the easy-chair. The savory steam of chickens slain came from the black pot on the crane. The kettle's merry song he heard; upon the hearth the gray cat purred; while, by the chimney-corner snug, the house dog dozed upon the rug. Among the chimney-piece of wood an idle row of flat-irons stood, two candlesticks in bright array, a pair of snuffers and a tray. The time-worn clock ticked slowly on; it struck the hours forever gone. "Forever gone," it seems to say—"Forever gone," from day to day, in its tall case of sombre hue—'twas fifty years since it was new. Between the windows, small and high, the looking-glass was hung, near by; a brazen bird with wings outspread, perched on the scroll-work overhead; beneath, a shelf, the common home of family Bible, brush, and comb; above, from iron hooks were hung long frames, with apples thickly strung, and, fixed upon the wall to dry, were wreaths of pumpkin kept for pie.

Forth from the buttry, to the fire, came Aunt Rebecca McIntyre, a swallow spinster, somewhat old, whose mellow age was seldom told; her hair was gray, her nose was thin, it nearly touched her toothless chin. Life's weary work and constant care had worn a face that once was fair.

Each Sabbath morn, from spring to spring, within the choir she used to sing, in ancient bonnet, cloak, and gown, the oldest relics in the town; beside the chorister she stood, and always did the best she could, and, while with tuning-fork, he led, she marked his movements with her head, her nasal voice rose sharp and queer above the deep-toned viol near.

She took the black pot from the crane, removed the kettle from the chain, and made the tea and chicken-broth, drew out the table, spread the cloth; then, from the table, bright and new, brought the best china edged with blue.

The chores were done, the feast was spread; all took their seats and grace was said. They ate the savory chicken stew, so juicy and so well cooked through; before them, rich round dumplings swam, on steaming plates, with cold boiled ham, with feathery biscuit, warm and light, with currant jam and honey, white and crowning all a good supply of yellow, meatly pumpkin-pie. Where such a bounteous feast is found, who would not teach and "board around?"

The supper done, the father took from off its shelf, the sacred Book, and read of one who stilled the sea one stormy night in Galilee; then, kneeling down before his chair, he asked the heavenly Shepherd's care.

Soon from the group, with drowsy heads, the children started for their beds; took off the little shoes they wore, and left them on the kitchen floor; then, bidding all a fond "good night," with pattering feet, they passed from sight.

Dear little feet, how soon they stray from the old farm-house far away; how soon they leave the family fold to walk the shining streets of gold, where every hope is real and sure; where every heart is kind and pure; where every dream is bright and fair,—O! may we meet our loved ones there!

The farmer left his cozy seat, with clattering slippers on his feet, went to the cellar where he drew a mug of cider, sweet and new, and from his broad bins brought the best and ripest apples for his guest. Then, by the warm fire's ruddy light, they lingered until late at night, strange legends told, and tales that made them all feel nervous and afraid.

But "Aunt Rebecca" watched in vain the curling smoke above the crane; she nodded, dozed, began to snore, she dropped her knitting on the floor, awoke, her eyelids heavier grew, arose and silently withdrew.

Along the creaking stairs she crept, to the lone chamber where she slept, and close the window-curtains drew, to screen herself from outward view. She stopped the key-hole of the door, she set the candle on the floor, looked 'neath the valance—half afraid to find a man in ambuscade; then sitting down, aside with care she laid her garments on a chair, slipped on her ghostly robe of white, took off her shoes, blew out the light, then, in the darkness, from her head removed her wig and went to bed, curled up, with chilly sobs and sighs, and quivering shut her drowsy eyes.

Poor single souls who sleep alone, the night wind hath a dismal tone to your lone ears—you start with fear at every midnight sound you hear, when late at night with weary heads you creep into your weary beds. The nights seem long, your lips turn blue, your feet grow cold—you know they do!

She slept at last; she heard once more the ripple break upon the shore; again she sat upon the strand, and some one clasped her fair young hand, and words were whispered in her ear that long ago she loved to hear, and, starting up, she cried in glee: "I knew you would come back to me." She woke. Alas! no love was there. Her thin arms clasped the vacant air. 'Twas but a dream. She lived alone. Without she heard the night wind moan, while on the window-panes the snow was wildly beating. From below the smothered sound of voices came when still with Busby's social dame. Their guest sat by the fading fire and watched its fleeting flame expire while she listened, but no word they uttered could be clearly heard; but soon a recollection came that sent a shudder through her frame—the sausage to be fried at morn, the breakfast table to adorn, was in the bedroom where their guest would soon betake himself to rest. The clock struck ten, she softly said, "I'll get it ere he goes to bed."

The spare bed stood within a room as chill and humid as a tomb; 'twas never aired, 'twas seldom swept; in its damp corners spiders crept; they built their bridges through the air, and no rude broom disturbed them there. The rain, that fell on roof decayed, dripped through the chinks that time had made, and on the whitewashed walls ran down in wondrous frescoes tinged with brown; the window-panes, with frost o'erspread, were warmer than that icy bed. Cold was the matting on the floor; cold blew the breeze beneath the door; cold were the straight-backed chairs of wood; cold was the oaken stand that stood on spindling legs that looked as chill as lone, bare pines on some bleak hill; high rose that bed o'er things below, like some tall iceberg capped with snow. Here every highly honored guest, when bedtime came, retired to "rest."

Within its large and moldy press hung Mrs. Busby's best silk dress; her Sunday bonnet, shoes, and shawl, on rusty nails against the wall, by Mr. Busby's suit of blue, that at his wedding had been new. Here on a peg his best cravat reposed within his old fur hat; here, shut from sight of human eyes, were rows of mince and apple pies, with rolls of sausage and head-cheese, stored on the shelves and left to freeze.

From out her cot the maiden crept, slipped on her shoes and softly stepped along the hall and through the gloom until she reached the chilly room. Unseen she crossed the icy floor, unheard unlocked the closet door, snatched from the shelf, in a firm hold, a bag of sausage, stiff and cold, then turning quickly, sought to beat a sudden, safe, and sure retreat. Too late! A light gleamed on the wall, and sound of footsteps filled the hall, then to the room came boldly on the stalwart form of Littlejohn! She backward stepped and stood aghast, then closed the door and held it fast.

With chattering teeth and trembling frame across the floor Lycurgus came. He placed the candle in his hand upon the spindling oaken stand. Then closed the door, and, with a frown, within a cold chair settled down. He threw his boots upon the floor, and, rising, tried the closet door; but Aunt Rebecca, in affright, clung to the latch with all her might. To look within Lycurgus failed, he turned away and thought it nailed! Then, pulling down the snowy spread, he put his warm brick in the bed, took off his clothes, and slipped between the sheets of ice, so white and clean, blew out the light, and, with a sneeze, close to his chin he brought his knees, beneath the clothes he drew his nose, and tried in vain to find repose; while "Aunt Rebecca," from the wall, took down the Sunday gown and shawl, she wrapped them round her freezing form, and blushed, to keep her visage warm.

The paper curtains, loosely hung upon the windows, rustling swung, while through each quivering, narrow frame of frosty panes a dim light came that made the furniture appear like dusky phantoms crouching near. Lycurgus listened in the storm and hugged his brick to keep him warm, but colder grew the humid bed, the clothes congealed around his head; to feel at ease in vain he tried; he tossed and turned from side to side; each time he moved, beneath his weight the bedstead creaked like some farm-gate. His brick grew cold, he could not sleep, a strange sensation seemed to creep upon him, while across the floor he closely watched the closet-door.

Was he but dreaming? No! his eyes beheld, with wonder and surprise, what man had never seen before—there was a movement at the door. It slowly turned and to his sight came, through the dim, uncertain light a hideous hand, that in its clasp some awful object seemed to grasp, a crouching form, with frightful head, seemed slowly coming towards the bed. He heard the rusty hinges creak, he could not stir, he could not speak, he could not turn his head away; he shut his eyes and tried to pray; upon his brow of palid hue the cold sweat stood like drops of dew; at last he shrieked, aloud and shrill—the door swung back and all was still.

That midnight cry, from room to room, resounded loudly through the gloom. The farmer and his wife at rest, within their warm and cozy nest, awoke and sprung, in strange attire, forth from their bed loud shouting—"fire!" But, finding neither smoke nor flame, soon stumbling up the stairs they came. In cotton bedquilts quaintly dressed, they heard a deep groan from their guest, and, full of wonder and affright, pushed in the door and struck a light.

Deep down within the feather bed Lycurgus had withdrawn his head, and, out of sight, lay quaking there, with throbbing breast and bristling hair. They questioned him, but he was still; he shook as if he had a chill, the courage was completely gone from tall Lycurgus Littlejohn.

What human language can express, the modest maiden's dire distress, while standing still behind the screen, a sad spectator of the scene? What pen or pencil can portray her mute despair and deep dismay? A while she stood, and through the door she peeped across the bed-room floor; the way was clear, and like a vise she grasped the sausage, cold as ice, sprang from the closet, and from sight she glided like a gleam of light, away without a look or word, she flew like an affrighted bird; without a moment of delay, the mystery cleared itself away!

Again the snow gleams on the ground, again the sleigh-bells gayly sound, again on "Miller's Hill" we hear the shouts of children loud and clear; but in the barn is heard no more the flapping flail upon the floor. The house is down, its inmates gone, and tall Lycurgus Littlejohn is now an old man, worn with care, with stooping form and silver hair. He married dark-eyed Susan Stow, and they were happy, years ago.

When, in the merry winter-time, their children's children round him climb, he tells them of his fearful fright, on that far distant winter night; and, after they are put to bed, when by the fire with nodding head he sits and sinks to slumbers deep, and quakes and shivers in his sleep, alas! he is but dreaming still of that spare bed on "Miller's Hill."—Eugene J. Hall, in Chicago Tribune.

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.

Coal-scuttles are now manufactured of rubber.

An elephant drinks about forty-five gallons of water a day.

The people of Ceylon worship the tooth of an elephant; those of Malabar the tooth of a monkey.

It is calculated that sixty tons of steel are annually consumed in the manufacture of steel pens.

Bees have very little power of communicating with each other. F. Miller gives curious instances of the inability of the bees to invent for themselves a natural language.

A quantity of flour was exposed by a French experimenter to a pressure of 300 tons, reducing it to one-fourth its original bulk. A portion of it was then placed in cans and sealed, the same being done with some unpressed flour. A year afterward the cans were opened, when the unpressed flour was found to be spoiled, while the pressed was in excellent preservation.

A spider's web affords an excellent barometer. An old sportsman of Coldwater, Mich., claims that one preserved in his house has proved almost invariably correct. When rain and wind are expected, the spider shortens the threads which suspend the web. When reefs are let out, fine weather may be certain, but if the spider remains inert, rain will probably follow within a short time.

Twelve years after the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth there was not a plow in the vicinity of Boston, and the farmers broke up the land with hoes or other hand implements. In 1637 there were but thirty-seven plows in the whole State, and at a later period it was the custom for one owning a plow to do nearly if not all the plowing for a town. The town often paid a bounty to one who would buy and keep a plow in repair and do the work in this way.

The swiftest bird, probably, is the eagle of the sea, or frigate-bird, often measuring sixteen feet from tip to tip. It hovers at an elevation of 10,000 feet when a storm sweeps over the ocean. If it wishes to travel, says a French naturalist, it can almost annihilate space. It can breakfast in Africa and dine in America. This bird reposes on its great motionless wings, literally "sleeping on the bosom of the air."

There are in our land 25,520,582 males and 24,632,284 females. The natives number 43,475,506, and the foreign born, 6,677,360. There are 43,404,877 white and 6,577,151 colored persons. Beside those on reservations under Government care there are 65,122 Indians and half-breeds. The "myriads of Chinese" number 105,463, and there are 2,550 other Asiatics. For every 100,000 males there are 96,519 famales against 97,801 in 1870.

Croton Aqueduct, by which New York city is supplied with water, was at the time of its completion, and in fact still is, regarded as one of the wonders of the world. Its length is 38½ miles, and it is built most of this distance of brick, stone and cement, inclosed over and under, 6 feet 3 inches wide at the bottom, 7 feet 8 inches at the top, and 8 feet 5 inches high. It is carried over Harlem river on a magnificent bridge, 1,460 feet long, and 114 feet above high-water mark.

The Transvaal, South Africa.

Transvaal (that is "across the Vaal,") lies between latitude 22 degrees 27 minutes S, and longitude 27 degrees 31 minutes E. Its northern boundary is the Oori or Limpopo River, which here runs from west to east; the eastern is formed by the continuation of the Drachenberg Mountains; the southern is the Vaal River, and the western and undefined line separating it from the country of the Betjuanas. The total area is 114,360 square miles, and the population—according to the official returns of 1877—is 800,000, probably a rough estimate, from which little can be known as to the fighting strength of the people who have defied the power of the British Empire. Potschefstroom, the seat of Government, is by land 960 miles northeast of Cape Town. The region is described as a vast plateau, sloping to the north, supported by the coast line of mountains, which, presenting a bold mural buttress, or escarpment, to the low country at their feet, stretch away on their western flank into immense undulating plains. At right angles to the coast range another belt of very high lands, called the Magaliesberg, runs east and west, forming a water shed between the Vaal and Limpopo rivers. The southern face of this range also presents long and undulating plains, generally well watered and wooded, and abounding in large game. To the north, approaching the Limpopo, high parallel chains of hills appear, through the openings in which flow small streams. The average height of the plateau inhabited by Europeans is from 4,000 to 5,000 feet, but many of the mountain peaks reach an elevation of 9,000 or 10,000 feet, and a part of the year are covered with snow. The climate is generally healthy, though in the northern sections the heat is intense, and during the summer months hot winds and heavy thunder storms prevail. The worst feature is, perhaps, a fly called tsetse, the bite of which is fatal to horses and oxen, thereby rendering travel very difficult, if not impossible, at certain seasons. The Boers, though originally pure Dutch, are now very considerably mixed by intermarriages with European refugees and emigrants from Cape Colony and Natal, as well as the natives. Still the Dutch characteristics largely predominate, and while the standard of education is said to be low, the people know enough to govern themselves and hate the foreign yoke. In religion they are protestants of the strongest Calvinistic persuasion, and the Bible and hymn book are almost their only literature.

In a valiant suffering for others, not in a slothful making others suffer for us, did nobleness ever lie. The chief of men is he who stands in the van of men, fronting the peril which frightens back all others, which, if it be not vanquished, will devour the others. Every noble crown is, and on earth will forever be, a crown of thorns.—Carlyle.

I thought I was the slave he sold,
And you—you bought me with your gold
To kneel before your throne."
"You're easily sold," smiled sweet Miss May,
"For when I heard the fellow say
You're 'Going, going, gone,'
I thought, alas! he little knows
He's selling one who never goes,
And"—Mr. Jones had flown.

The last words of a dying photographer, "Now keep very still." Those of a dying ferryman, "I'm going over the river." Those of a dying barber, "I'm going to curl up and dye." Those of a moribund cobbler, "'Tis awl up. My sole's safe at last." Those of a murderer about to be hung, "This suspense will kill me."

One of our militia soldiers owns that he does not want any gore. Somebody asked him: "Now, Captain, what would you do if you were in the presence of the enemy?" "That all depends on the enemy. If the enemy were to run, and there were not many of them, I'd make it hot for them, but if the enemy wouldn't run, then I would. One of us has to get up and dust, anyhow, you know."—Galveston News.

A tramp, while under the influence of beer, applied to a citizen for a temporary loan. "I am not in the habit of investing money in such enterprises, but here is a quarter for you," said the citizen, "but be careful you don't spend it for whisky." The tramp stowed away the quarter, and a tear of gratitude glistened in his eye as he said: "You're a brick, but I want you to understand that it is none of your blank business what I buy with my money. It's my money now, and I'll just buy what I blank please with it. I wish you would not meddle with my private affairs."

Remedy for Lockjaw.—Let any one who has an attack of lockjaw take a small quantity of turpentine, warm it, and pour it on the wound, no matter where the wound is, and relief will follow in less than a minute. Nothing better can be applied to a severe cut or bruise than cold turpentine; it will give certain relief almost instantly. Turpentine is also a sovereign remedy for croup. Saturate a piece of flannel on the throat and chest, and in every severe case three or four drops on a lump of sugar may be taken inwardly. Every family should have a bottle on hand.

HYPNOTISM.

Some Highly Interesting Experiments.

Dr. William S. Hammond, the celebrated New York surgeon, not long ago delivered a lecture on "Hypnotism" before several hundred medical students in that city. The lecturer brought forward Mr. Howley and sat him in a chair fronting the audience. He then held before the gentleman's eyes a small glass ball, and after a little delay the subject seemed to be completely absorbed in the contemplation of it. Turning again to the students, Dr. Hammond said: "You see I begin in the way serpents charm birds. The serpents fasten their steely eyes on those of the birds and fascinate the poor things until they fall an easy prey. Now you will see in a minute how this young man will follow the ball wherever it goes." And so he did. Whichever way Dr. Hammond moved the ball the young man went after it. Nothing stopped him. Chairs, tables, doctors, stood in his way, but he stumbled over them or by them, and kept on after the ball with his eyes riveted on it as if his very life depended on his getting as near it as possible. Suddenly Dr. Hammond hid it and told him it was gone. He stopped, dazed, and looked as if he had lost something very precious. While he was in this state he was handed a bottle of soda water and told it was a young lady. He took the bottle in his arms and immediately began to make love to it. He caressed it and said tenderly, "Will you have me? Do. I love you dearly. Oh, do have me." As he walked up and down Dr. Hammond took a lance and stuck the blade into the flesh of the young man's hand, telling him it was a bouquet, and the young man admired the imaginary flowers, showing no symptoms of pain. Suddenly he was told that the bottle was an old woman, 75 years of age, and he quickly dropped it, exclaiming, "I don't want to have anything to do with her." He ate lemon for strawberry, and asked for more; stripped off his coat and made a dash for a man he was told had called him a liar; waltzed, sang, cried, smelt water and said it was "beautiful cologne," and proved himself an utterly pliant subject.

The next subject was Mr. David Wright, who accepted a book for a bird and sang the "Sweet By and By" to it. When told it had escaped through the hall he made a rush for it among the students as if they had not been present. He made frantic efforts to climb a pillar and was furiously pursuing the bird when called back. He preached as an orthodox clergyman, then as a colored minister, changing his accent and his manner as quickly as the order was given to him, and did a number of other things, much to the amusement and astonishment of the audience. The next subject, a Mr. Wilson, acted Macbeth, reading the vision scene with good effect; preached, told funny stories, said he was Col. Bob Ingersoll, repeating parts of that gentleman's lectures; got drunk on water, rolled in agony when told he was sick at the stomach, and created much merriment as a clown in a circus. Mr. Pritchitt, the last gentleman, stripped off all his clothes with lightning rapidity when told he was infested with rats. He delivered a lecture on electricity when told he was Benjamin Franklin. He stripped to fight at an imaginary insult, rode a chair for a horse with the same seriousness and intensity he would a live equine. He became an organ grinder, a ballet dancer, a violinist and numerous other characters. Dr. Hammond touched his nose with a cork and he roared with pain. The next instant he danced with delight at being assured that it was on again and in good condition. Dr. Hammond told him that his clothes were on fire, and he pulled them off, rushing almost nude to the opposite side of the amphitheater. Dr. Hammond frequently put his fingers on the left temple of the different subjects and instantly arrested their power of speech; then he would touch the right temple and the subject resumed his discourse.

Stock-Raising in the West.

The freedom to pasture cattle on excellent grazing land, together with an accessible market, are the main reasons why at present stock-farming is particularly profitable. The first of these conditions is precarious, and it is evident that in ten years there will not be much good free range left east of the Missouri river. When immigration to that extent shall have shut him off from free pasturage, the stock man can either sell his farm at probably four times its present value, and move to Dakota or Montana, or else turn his attention to fattening stock on grain for other parties.

For instance, as a practical case, there is a cattle man of Council Bluffs who is said to own 100,000 head of cattle in Idaho. He has a range of sixty square miles of land not worth a cent to the acre for agriculture, yet affording excellent pasture for cattle. He has ten men employed at wages varying from $24 to $40 per month to look after the stock. These men require 200 ponies to handle the cattle. An overseer is hired at $1,200 a year. During the winter, however, four men can do all the work required, which is mainly breaking the ice in the streams that the cattle may have water. Streams serve as the great checks upon the cattle straying away, for they never will go far from water. In the spring of the year the cattle men of the plains have a grand "round up" (as it is called), the stock is picked out by means of the brand, and those cattle that are meant for the Eastern market are started for Omaha. They travel about ten miles a day, and generally take the whole season in the journey from the winter ground to the Missouri bottom. At Omaha the cattle are put on the train and shipped nominally to Chicago, but really to different points along the road, to be handed over to farmers for fattening. Mr. Stewart delivered over 1,900 head to farmers last fall, and of these only eight were lost during the winter. The parties who receive the cattle agree to fatten them at the rate of 5 cents for every extra pound of weight they add to the animal. This seems small at first sight, but when cattle put on 250 extra pounds during a winter, and where two hogs are fed from the refuse of each ox, the farmer finds that the result to him is equivalent to selling his corn at 100 per cent. profit. The large cattle-raisers, of course, have their inspectors, who travel from farm to farm to look after their property, and gather it together in the spring for shipment to Chicago, where they are either slaughtered or shipped to Europe. The cattle men have a great advantage over mere farmers, in that they are to a great extent independent of railways. If they are badly treated by one corporation, they have a simple remedy in driving their stock a few miles to the next road.—Harper's Magazine.

NOTHING ON EARTH SO GOOD.

[From the Worcester (Mass.) Spy.]

Certainly a strong opinion, said one of our reporters to whom the following was detailed by Mr. Henry Kaschop, with Mr. Geo. E. Miller, 418 Main St., this city: I suffered so badly with rheumatism in my leg, last winter, that I was unable to attend to my work, being completely helpless. I heard of St. Jacobs Oil and bought a bottle, after using which I felt greatly relieved. With the use of the second bottle I was completely cured. In my estimation there is nothing on earth so good for rheumatism as St. Jacobs Oil. It acts like a charm.

The Waiting Philosopher.

Some people think it one of the hardest strains on human nature to be obliged to wait at a country depot for the train. A philosopher takes real pleasure in hanging around a depot for three hours. During the first fifteen minutes he reads all the railroad cards hanging in the waiting-room. If he is near-sighted or a poor reader he can put in half an hour at this. Every depot in this broad land has a front door. The scenery from a depot front door is always grand. There is the track each way; there is the water-tank; there is often a small grocery on the corner opposite, with two small boys licking their lips before the jar of candy in the window. It is often the case that a depot is surrounded by houses. Here is a great chance to speculate. If there are, say, twelve houses in sight, the philosopher can wonder how many are under mortgage, what percentage of husbands have missed the top-stair in going down cellar; how many mothers-in-law make home happy, and so on, for an hour and a half.

There is always a dog, a small boy, and a lame man around a depot. A philosopher will make advances to the dog and manage to tie his hind legs together and start him off with a yell. He will win the small boy's confidence with a smile, and give him a cent to stand on his head. He will get up a reunion with the old man and draw him out. The old man got hurt by tumbling into a ditch when he was drunk, but a sharp man can start the conversation so that he will claim to have received the hurt while climbing Lookout mountain a rod ahead of Joe Hooker.

Two hours and a half thus slip by on the wings of lightning. While the fussy fat man with the carpet-sack has gone to sleep in despair, the philosopher has been having a bully time. The other half hour is a mere nothing. The philosopher puts that in by asking the telegraph operator how long it took him to learn; by taking five or six drinks from the water-cooler; by walking up and down the platform, and counting the birds on the telegraph-wires; or by walking two or three miles down the track to meet the train and ask the conductor if his family are as well as usual. There is no earthly reason why any waiting passenger shouldn't take solid comfort around a depot.—Wall Street Daily News.

HAVING been cured by St. Jacobs Oil, I recommend the same to all sufferers with Rheumatism, says Mr. L. Shiffman, 2804 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Costume in Nevada.

Her dress was of a highly-wrought fabric of old pinchbeck gold, frosted over with Paris-green can-spangles, and brocaded with mahogany sawdust. There was an exquisite overskirt, shirred with hempen yarn of a unique pattern, and elegantly caught up with a costly zinc-plate suspender buckle.

A wreath of natural shoemakers' wax hung in ravishing waves from the waist, while loops of molasses candy heightened the candal appendages of the basque-decoat. The train was massive and decollete. It was gorgeously resplendant with a row of richly embroidered shells-de-oyster, sprinkled with assorted grains of costly coal-de-ashe. Surmounting all was a rich Oriental mantle of bag-decordage, which was pinioned at the right shoulder of the fair wearer with a shingle-de-nail, on which was a leviathan carved dome, wrought entirely of rare pieces of gum-de-spruce.

The fair wearer of all this magnificent apparel wore a tin star, buried in a perfect torrent of red-hot black-coal hair, while she glided through the mazes of the dance like a gazelle with its right arm in a sling. When she brought her pretty little Cinderella slipper down upon the marble tiles of the festive hall, the rafters in the building shook with silver laughter, while crockery in the cellar, like enchanted fairies, leaped up and kissed the floor underneath. When excited and full of enthusiasm, this lovely Venus opened her mouth, revealing two massive rows of pearl that reminded the enchanted beholder of trains of white-washed cars gliding on wings of love through Hoosac's magnificent tunnel. Her musical laugh sent a thrill of delight across the mass of surging, worshiping humanity, like the trickling of cold milk punch down the back of a man who has just filled his boots with chocolate ice-cream.—Carson Gazette.

NIGHT BEFORE THE MOWING.

All shimmering in the morning shine,
And diamonded with dew,
And quivering in the scented wind
That thrills its green heart through;
The little field, the smiling field,
With all its flowers a-blowing!
How happy looks the golden field,
The day before the mowing!

Outspread 'neath the departing light,
Twilight still void of stars,
Save where, low westering, Venus hides
From the red eye of Mars;
How quiet lies the silent field
With all its beauties glowing;
Just stirring—like a child asleep—
The night before the mowing!

Sharp steel, inevitable hand,
Cut keen, cut kind! Our field
We know full well must be laid low
Before its wealth it yield;
Labor and mirth and plenty blest
Its blameless death bestowing;
And yet we weep, and yet we weep,
The night before the mowing.

THE DEAD CITIES.

Pompeii and Herculaneum Described in an Interesting Manner.

[Letter in the Baltimore American.]

In the year of our Lord 79 Vesuvius had an uncommon eruption, which suddenly and very completely buried out of sight the cities of Pompeii and Herculaneum; and they remained so buried for sixteen hundred years—until early in the last century, when their sites were accidentally discovered. After much patient labor and at an enormous expense, about one-third part of these dead and buried cities has been dug up; and the excavations are still going on. Vast treasures of gold and silver, rare statuary, paintings, and household utensils were recovered in good condition, and many of these are now preserved, as I have said, in the National Museum at Naples. The paved streets have been cleared of rubbish, and compare favorably with those of the cities of to-day. The houses are open to inspection, and one can easily gather from them a good idea of the manner of life among the people who were buried into eternity with such frightful celerity eighteen hundred years ago.

There is a large museum just within the main gate of Pompeii, in which are stored vast numbers of articles recovered from the uncovered houses. These are bottles, vases, plates, cups, lamps, money-boxes, jars, door-locks, bolts, bells, eggs, nuts, pieces of bread, dried fruit, glasses, towels, candlesticks, ladles, scales, needles, baskets, funnels, etc. But, among all these familiar things, I was most impressed with an iron safe—an actual iron safe—identical in pattern with those knobbed articles that only a few years ago were considered the best safes in the world for banking-houses and counting-rooms. And yet dozens of persons have within fifty years taken out patents for newly-invented safes.

I saw also a lot of fish-hooks of the identical pattern now so eagerly prized by anglers—the veritable Limerick hook. Is the world progressing? And then there are prostrate figures of men and women—one of the latter evidently on the point of becoming a mother—skeletons of horses, cats, dogs, and rats. And there are many skulls—one of them still retaining some of its hair. All these dreadful trophies snatched from the jaws of death serve to illustrate the terrors of the dreadful night when fire and brimstone rained upon the devoted cities and wrapped them in the darkness of death and desolation.

If I may judge from paintings and sculptures on the walls of many rooms, and from translations of numerous inscriptions on door-posts, the people of Pompeii were not strictly virtuous in every respect, for there is everywhere evidence that they had reached a remarkably high or low degree of licentiousness, as well as of luxury. Almost every house had its fountain, its hot and cold bath, its spacious yard or garden, its statuary and pictures, and excellent culinary arrangements. But now it is a silent city. Its houses are tenantless, and its streets are trodden only by the feet of curious tourists. All is desolation—still beautiful and wondrously attractive, but dead, very dead. Despite its paintings and its statues, and its glorious sunshine, it was to me but a pathetic suggestion of woe and despair. I would not care to live in a dead city, and if I did, I could find one nearer home.

Workingmen.

Before you begin your heavy spring work after a winter of relaxation, your system needs cleansing and strengthening to prevent an attack of Ague, Bilious or Spring Fever, or some other spring sickness that will unfit you for a season's work. They Drank Him Up.

In the neighborhood of Marseilles, not long ago, was discovered an ancient Roman burying-ground, containing, among other interesting graves, that of Consul Caius Septimus, wherein a quantity of antique weapons and coins were found, and, moreover, an amphora—the inscription upon which was all but illegible—containing a small quantity of a thick, reddish liquor. The amphora, emptied of its contents, was submitted to the inspection of an eminent archæologist, who, after bestowing extraordinary pains on the deciphering of the mutilated characters engraven upon its surface, declared it to be his opinion that they indicated the presence of genuine Falernian within the vessel, adding that Caius Septimus, a jovial consul of considerable repute as a judge of good wine, had obviously ordered that a flask of the best vintage in his cellar should be buried with him. The scientific gentleman who had discovered the consul's grave and taken possession of its contents, upon learning the true character of the liquid relic in question, at once started for Paris with his Falernian in a glass decanter, and, there arrived, invited a dozen of his friends, members of the Academy of Inscriptions, to a dinner at one of the leading restaurants. At desert he produced the "consul's wine," carefully poured it into four tiny liqueur glasses, and handed it round to his guests, exhorting them to drink it, reverently and upstanding, to the immortal memory of Caius Septimus. The glasses had scarcely been emptied when a telegram was brought in by the head-waiter on a salver, and laid before the founder of the feast. He opened and glanced at it, and then, letting it fall to the floor, fled from the room, with a cry of terrible agony. One of the startled Academicians picked up the message and read it aloud. It ran as follows: "Marseilles, 7 p. m. Don't drink contents of amphora. Not Falernian at all. Have deciphered inscription on foot, which previously escaped my notice. Red liquid is body of Consul Caius, liquified by special embalming process." But the friendly warning came too late. The archæologist and his Academical colleagues had drank up the consul to his last drop.

CARLYLE once asked an Edinburgh student what he was studying for. The youth replied that he had not quite made up his mind. There was a sudden lightning flash of the old Scotchman's eye, a sudden pulling down of the shaggy eyebrows, and the stern face grew sterner as he said: "The man without a purpose is like the ship without a rudder; a waif, a nothing, a no-man. Have a purpose in life, if it is only to kill and divide and sell oxen well, but have a purpose; and having it, throw such strength of mind and musle into your work as God has given you."

The Great Bell of St. Paul's.

St. Paul's has always possessed, and still owns, a great bell. From time immemorial the citizens claimed the eastern part of the churchyard as the place of assembly for their folk-motes. "In the great steeple there situate (which, we may remark, was an isolated structure), was their common bell, which being there rung, all the inhabitants might then hear and come together." Thus Stow Dugdale supposes this building to have stood where is now St. Paul's School. So far back as the 15th of Edward I. (1286) mention is made, in a quo warranto, of the custom of ringing a bell in this tower as one existing long ere that date. Henry VIII. lost tower, spire, and bell at a game of hazard to Sir Miles Partridge, who quickly overthrew his winnings and melted the bell. For not far short of two centuries St. Paul's had no great bell. That which it now possesses was the gift of William III. It was originally cast in the reign of Edward I., and was hung at the gate of Westminster Hall, to notify the hour to the Judges. It was afterwards called "Edward of Westminster," and subsequently "Westminster Tom." William gave it to the Cathedral of St. Paul, whither it was brought on New-Year's Day, 1699. Since then it has been twice recast, each time with an addition of metal. It weighs more than two cwt. over five tons. It is ten feet in diameter and ten inches in thickness of metal. The tone is very fine in the musical note A, concert pitch. The hour is struck by a large hammer, and falls on the outside rim of the bell by its own weight. The bell is only tolled—that is to say, the clapper is only used—on the death of one of the royal family, or of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, the Dean of St. Paul's or the Lord Mayor.—London City Press.

If you are a man of letters toiling over your midnight work, to restore brain nerve and waste, use Hop B.

If you are young and suffering from any indiscretion or dissipation; if you are married or single, old or young, suffering from poor health or languishing on a bed of sickness, rely on Hop Bitters.

Whoever you are, wherever you are, whenever you feel that your system needs cleansing, toning or stimulating, without intoxicating, take Hop Bitters.

Thousands die annually from some form of Kidney disease that might have been prevented by a timely use of Hop Bitters.

Have you dyspepsia, kidney or urinary complaint, disease of the stomach, bowels, blood, liver or nerves? You will be cured if you use Hop Bitters.

If you are simply weak and low spirited, try it! It may save your life. It has saved hundreds.

D. I. C. is an absolute and irresistible cure for drunkenness, use of opium, tobacco, or narcotics.

Sold by druggists. Send for Circular.

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.

(This engraving represents the Lungs in a healthy state.)
WHAT THE DOCTORS SAY!
DR. FLETCHER, of Lexington, Missouri, says: "I recommend your 'Balsam' in preference to any other medicine for coughs and colds."
DR. A. C. JOHNSON, of Mt. Vernon, Ill., writes of some wonderful cures of Consumption in his place by the use of "Allen's Lung Balsam."
DR. J. B. TURNER, Blountsville, Ala., a practicing physician of twenty-five years, writes: "It is the best preparation for Consumption in the world."
For all Diseases of the Throat, Lungs and Pulmonary Organs, it will be found a most excellent Remedy.
AS AN EXPECTORANT IT HAS NO EQUAL.

The Best Field
FOR EMIGRANTS.
AN IMMENSE AREA OF RAILROAD AND GOVERNMENT LANDS, OF GREAT FERTILITY, WITHIN EASY REACH OF PERMANENT MARKET, AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES, is now offered for sale in EASTERN OREGON and EASTERN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
These lands form part of the great GRAIN BELT of the Pacific Slope, and are within an average distance of 250 to 300 miles from Portland, where steamships and sailing vessels are directly loaded FOR ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.
GRAIN AT PORTLAND, OREGON, COMMANDS A PRICE EQUAL TO THAT OBTAINED IN CHICAGO.
The early completion of the Northern Pacific R. R. is now assured, and guarantees to settlers cheap and quick transportation and good markets both East and West. The opening of this new overland line to the Pacific, together with the construction of the network of 700 miles of railroad by the O. R. & N. Co. in the valleys of the great Columbia and its principal tributaries, renders certain a rapid increase in the value of the lands now open to purchase and pre-emption. There is every indication of an enormous movement of population to the Columbia River region in the immediate future.
LANDS SHOW an AVERAGE YIELD of 40 BUSHELS OF WHEAT PER ACRE. No Failure of Crops ever known.
RAILROAD LANDS offered at the uniform rate of $2.50 an Acre.

For Two Generations
The good and staunch old stand-by, MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT, has done more to assuage pain, relieve suffering, and save the lives of men and beasts than all other liniments put together. Why? Because the Mustang penetrates through skin and flesh to the very bone, driving out all pain and soreness and morbid secretions, and restoring the afflicted part to sound and supple health.

W. P. MYERS, Principal.

Report of Jackson township school, district No. 1, for the term ending March 25: Scholars not absent during the term of one hundred days: Marion Cramer, Nelson Cramer, Freeman Cramer, Lizzie Carper, Philip Carper, Laura Carper, Alda Carper, Wm. Draggon, Dessa Owens, Hannah Brown, Salome Brown and George Osburn. Number of scholars, 35; average daily attendance, 33.

I here again will, as teacher, return my sincere thanks to patrons of the district for their many aids in making the school pleasant, and agreeable and a place where their children might desire to be. Also, I would not forget the scholars, no never, who have been under my care for the past five winters, and with whom it does seem hard to part, but will say, remember me, and may heaven's choicest blessings be upon you, is your humble servant's prayer.

C. H. BROWN, Teacher.

Report of district No. 6, Butler township, for the month and term ending March 25, 1881 The following were regular in attendance during the month: Willie Fitch, Ollie Fitch, Charles Rugman, Alfred Lane, Frankie Pence, Cary Pence, Lydia McKinley, Alex McKinley, Ella Myers, Katie Hensinger and Opha Miller. The following were regular during the term: Willie Fitch, Ollie Fitch.

I desire to return my sincere thanks to the patrons of the school for their many favors and hospitalities shown me during the term. To me, and I trust to all, it has been a very pleasant and profitable one. Yours,

ED. E. MITCHELL, Teacher.

Report of the Auburn Junction school for the winter term, closing March 23, 1881: Number of pupils enrolled, 34; average daily attendance, 25; per cent. of attendance, 74. Had it not been for the measles being brought into the school, the attendance would have been excellent. The school is to be commended for industry and good deportment, and has merited much praise. I wish to return my sincere thanks to the pupils and people of the Junction, for their kindness toward me during the winter.

J. H. MERICA, Teacher.

CROWN
IS THE BEST

It is the result of 20 years' experience and experiments in Sewing Machines. It combines the good points of all present and former makes, and is not a "one man" or "one idea" machine, as others are. It avoids the defects of others, and possesses new and valuable features and conveniences. It is large, light-running, noiseless, handsome, convenient, durable, and simple. Warranted and kept in repair free for 5 years. Circulars with full description sent free on request. It is surely the best. A trial will prove it. Don't fail to see it before you buy. While several parties were in conversation about the large amount of snow that has fallen here during the winter, an old, seedy looking man stepped forward and after asking for a chew of tobacco, ejaculated: "You fellows don't know anything about snow storms, you don't. I've seen twenty foot of snow on the level the sixth day of August, I have." What! came in chorus from the party "Its a fact, gentlemen, and if I had Bill Jones and lots 'o the old boys down here they'd tell you the same thing." "Was it in the mountains," one asked. "Narry a mountain." "Near the North Pole?" queried another. "Not there." "Well, sir, will you please explain to us," put in the third one. It was in old Steuben Co., in the year 1850, where I've holed many a red man, and killed hundreds of bear. I'm on my way back there boys, to spend the ballance of winter." Silence reigned. The fellow was evidently like "Carley Ross"—didn't know where he was.

Two Roses.

[The Republic.]

I send two roses to my fair—
A red one and a white—
And if she loves me, she will wear
The pure white rose to-night;
But if my love deny me grace,
To bid my hope be dead,
In her sweet bosom will she place
The fatal one—the red.

* * * * * *

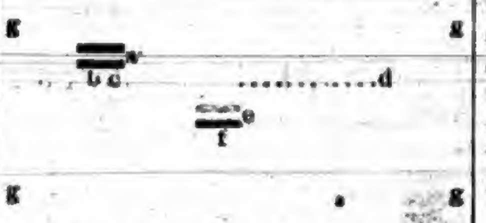
In hope and fear the day I spend;
Each moment slowly goes,
For all my future doth depend
Upon a simple rose.
"Oh, that the night would come," I sigh,
Then wish 'twere only noon,
For me, if hope be doomed to die,
The night will come too soon.

* * * * * *

She comes! and with her comes a breath
Of roses on the air,
And be it life or be it death,
I look upon my fair.
I see the white rose on her breast,
The red rose on her cheek;
What need of words to tell the rest,
So plain these roses speak!

The Nice Young Man Who was Ambushed by a Syringe.

A Rockland young man, until quite recently, was courting a fat girl, at the north end, and progressed very favorably with his suit. One evening last week, he dressed up in his best clothes, combed his hair carefully, and started out to make his tri-weekly visit to his fair one, who was waiting in the parlor with fond expectation in her heart and a cold in her head, superinduced by the fluctuating weather. This was, as you might say, a prologue to the tragedy. It appears, moreover, that the fat girl's father—who is worth many thousand dollars in good sensible bonds, and, as a consequence, is an object of the young man's tender regard—had for several nights been the victim of some unknown miscreant who had raided on his hen pen with disastrous effect. Sick of such foolishness, he had prepared a ghastly retribution for the fowl villains, and to this end had filled a big garden syringe with about a gallon of ancient beef brine, seasoned with garlic and flavored with assafœtida, and was lying in ambush behind a box, where he could sweep every approach to the hennery. The young man, who is pretty well acquainted with the whole family, thought he would surprise his girl by entering the house unexpectedly by the back way. This is the situation:



a is the hennery; b is the old man and c is the syringe; d is the young man lightly turning to thoughts of love as well as the corner of the fence; e is the house itself, painted brown, and f is the fat girl sitting by the piano and singing: "Father, dear father, come home;" gggg is the gathering darkness.

Gaily up the back yard the young man comes. Silently in ambush the old man lies. Cheerily the fat girl warbles. Quiet, but awful, is the syringe. In the uncertain light of an early evening the old man sees a figure stealthily drawing near his guarded pen. With bated breath he awaits the onslaught. The syringe sounded its dreadful "wh-s-s-p," and its deadly contents flew through the air like a wild and mad avenger. A yell that tore the azure robe of night, fairly knocked the fat girl off the piano stool, and curdled the old man's blood, followed the discharge, and when the neighbors ran in, under the impression that the Grant boom had burst right in the neighborhood, they found the unfortunate young man pawing madly around on the ground, and screaming out awful Mexican words, terrible to hear, while the old man hovered over the scene with the syringe in his hands, looking like an animated figure escaped from an allegory. Sympathizing arms bore the young man into the house, after the owners had stopped their nostrils with cotton, and it required the combined efforts of the fat girl and eight friends to bring him to, and it was some hours before he was able to inquire if the meteor hit anybody else when it struck. That night, beneath the darksome shade of a cyprus tree, whose branches the moon vainly strove to pierce, an old man's tottering form rested upon a spade, and silently viewed the new-made grave. He had just buried the syringe.—[Exchange.

The saddest case on record comes from Illinois. A schoolmistress was dead in love with a fellow but couldn't marry because she wanted to go off in real romantic style; she wanted to elope and couldn't because she had nobody to elope from. Parents for Illinois orphans should be provided by the legislature.

McPHERSON'S GRAVE.

A Visit to the Spot Where a Brave Commander Lies.

[Atlanta correspondence N. Y. Tribune.]

We left Atlanta by a broad, muddy, clay road, went northeastward almost to the sight of Sherman's headquarters during the seige, and then turned into a road eastward leading over a poor-wooded ridge to a thicket of small oak and sparse pine, about three miles from Atlanta. By this latter road McPherson galloped to his command and to his death. The enemy, about 80,000 strong, had turned his right, and were driving his men, a parcel of whom were standing under a bunch of pines up a woods road and on a knoll. They had shot down the veteran confederate, General Walker, a great loss to the enemy, but the powerful gray line of battle swept ahead enveloping them, and while McPherson was fresh from his gallop in their midst the deadly ball came straight to the great young spirit. The tide of battle swept on, and, returning again before the Union onset and shout of vengeance, his corpse was recovered by his soldiery, yet almost warm. The woods path upon which he rode is marked by a signboard, 'McPherson's Lane." From the point of entering it Atlanta is visible on another hill, with a cluster of spires.

We rode up the rooty and white clay lane to the spot, nearly a mile back, where at a partial clearing, or rather, silence in the woods, there is a cross lane, and at the intersection rise some dozen half-grown pines, some to the height of sixty feet, talking together like the dead man's soul, hovering there among his spirit comrades.

Here fell McPherson, the Hoche of the great war; an Ohio boy, raised at Clyde, near the shores of Lake Erie, the son, I think, of a country blacksmith. His memory and modesty are respected by friend and foe. Sherman said the day he died: "I thought that McPherson would have finished up the war after Grant and I were killed or dismissed. He was coming along so steady and strong that he looked to me to be the heir of our labors, and perhaps president of the country."

A large cannon, painted black, with a cannon ball closing its top, is mortised into a sill of granite cut with the word "McPherson." A black iron railing, made of musket barrels capped with spears, and about twelve feet square encloses it. The large trees are still scarred with balls. Down the lane to the right came the marksman's ball, and genius and devotion fell in the woods, forever helpless, forever speechless.

A Good Dog Story.

A correspondent of the "Spectator" writes that this story of a dog's sagacity may be relied upon as true: During the meeting of the British Association at Glasgow, a friend of mine had occasion to go one day from that place to Greenock on business. Hearing, on his arrival, that the person he wished to see was out, but expected shortly to return home, he determined to take a stroll about the town, to which he was a stranger. In the course of his walk he turned into a baker's shop and bought a bun. As he stood at the door of the shop eating his bun, a large dog came up to him and begged for a share, which he got and seemed to enjoy, coming back for piece after piece. "Does the dog belong to you?" my friend asked of the shop woman. "No," she answered, "but he spends most of his time here, and begs half pennies from people who pass.' "Half-pennies! What good can they do him?" "Oh, he knows very well what to do with them; he comes into the shop and buys cakes.'

This seemed rather a remarkable instance of cleverness even for the cleverest of animals; so, by way of testing its reality, my friend went out of the shop into the street, where he was immediately accosted by the dog, who begged for something with all the eloquence of which a dog is capable. He offered him a half-penny and was rather surprised to see him accept it readily and walk with the air of a regular customer into the shop, where he put his fore paws on the counter and held out the half-penny toward the attendant. The young woman produced a bun, but that did not suit the dog, and he held his money fast. "A," said she, "I know what he wants," and took down from a shelf a plate of short-bread. This was right; the dog paid his half-penny, took his short-bread and ate it with decorous satisfaction. When he had quite finished he left the shop, and my friend, much amused, followed him, and when he again begged, found another half-penny for him, and saw the whole process gone through a second time.

This dog clearly had learned by some means the use of money, and not merely that it would buy something to eat, but that it would buy several things, among which he could exercise a right of choice. What is perhaps most remarkable, is that his proceedings were entirely independent, and for his own benefit, not that of any teacher or master.

Bits of Greek Wit.

Cleomenes, on being offered some fighting-cocks, recommended to him as "fighting to the death," said: "Give me rather the cocks that will kill them; they are the better birds."

Dionysius the elder, though he punished malefactors severely, was rather lenient to garroters. "They stop people," he said, "from going about the town of Syracuse drunk after dinner."

One Pampelus, being asked his opinion of the Bœotians, who were gluttons, replied: "Their conversation is just what that of pots would be if they had a voice—namely, how much each holds."

Philoxenus was sent to the stone quarries by Dionysius for contempt of his verses. Being recalled, he was invited again to hear them. After listening patiently for a time, he got up to go. "Whither now?" asked Dionysius. "To the quarries," said he.

A Stone Baby.

Mr. W. C. Renfrew, of Russellville, Arkansas, the proprietor of the Indian stone baby, has been stopping for the past week in this city, having brought his baby with him, with which to puzzle the scientists of Washington. This stone baby was dug up by some laboring men near the Eureka Springs in October, 1880. It was four feet below the surface of the ground, and when discovered, was enveloped in a composition of blue clay, calcareous marl and free lime, a portion of which has not yet been removed from the image. It is twenty-six inches in length and weighs eighty-five pounds. The body is of very hard blue limestone, and is so nicely cut as not to show marks of the instrument used. The learned men of the Smithsonian have examined it and are puzzled, never having seen any thing like it before. Mr. Renfrew left to day for Philadelphia to lay it before the Academy of Science there. It appears to have been made by a people higher in the scale of civilization than the North American Indians.

Patent Train Dispatcher.

An invention of an automatic train dishpatcher, recently patented by a Frenchman named Jas. G. Chasse, of Quebec, Canada, bids fair to create a sensation in railroad circles. Without going into scientific terms, the invention consists of a common wire stretched the length of the track, a little to one side of it and a short distance above the cab. This wire is swept by a metalic fan while the train is in motion, thus keeping up a communication along the line. In each cab is a gong and a dry battery with a ground wire running to the axles of the locomotive, while at a distance of every mile, the rails are grounded with a ground wire. In every depot are two gongs, which automatically ring when a train approaches within three miles in either direction. Two trains approaching each other also break the circuit, causing the bells in each cab to ring an alarm. The trial test of this invention was made yesterday at Chillicothe, in the presence of the master mechanic of the Marietta & Cincinnati railroad and several members of the Cincinnati press. The above named company have fitted up engine No. 76, and stretched a wire for the occasion. During the run, sometimes at the rate of thirty miles an hour, the communication was unbroken. Mr. Evans, the master mechanic of the Marietta & Cincinnati, and Charles Zimmer, engineer of the same company, and who have, by the way, done much to render the experiment a success, were loud in their praises of the invention, and unhesitatingly pronounced it successful, far beyond their expectations. Unless something unforeseen occurs, it is bound, from the present outlook, to come into general use, and also be the means of great saving of life and property in the future, and greatly lessening the probability of collisions.—[Cincinnati Enquirer.

Don't Get The Chills.

If you are subject to Ague, you must be sure to keep your liver, bowels and kidneys in good free condition. When so, you will be safe from all attacks. The remedy to use is Kidney-Wort. It is the best preventative of all malarial diseases that you can take. See advertisement in another column.

The Reason Why.

The tonic effect of Kidney-Wort is produced by its cleansing and purifying action on the blood. Where there is a gravelly deposit in the urine, or milky ropy urine from disordered kidneys, it cures without fail. Constipation and piles yield readily to its cathartic and healing power. Put up in dry vegetable form or liquid (very concentrated), either acts promptly and sure.—[Troy Budget

The Greatest Blessing.

A simple, pure, harmless remedy that cures every time, and prevents disease by keeping the blood pure, stomach regular, kidneys and liver active, is the greatest blessing ever conferred on man. Hop Bitters is that remedy, and its proprietors are being blessed by thousands who have been saved and cured by it. Will you try it? See another column.

KIDNEY-WORT

This Great Remedy in either Liquid or Dry Form acts at the same time on the Diseases of the Liver, Bowels and Kidneys,

This combined action gives it wonderful power to cure all diseases.

WHY ARE WE SICK?

Because we allow these great organs to become clogged or torpid, and poisonous humors are therefore forced into the blood that should be expelled naturally.

KIDNEY-WORT WILL CURE

BILIOUSNESS, PILES, CONSTIPATION, KIDNEY COMPLAINTS, URINARY DISEASES, FEMALE WEAKNESSES, AND NERVOUS DISORDERS, by causing free action of these organs and restoring their power to throw off disease.

Why Suffer Bilious pains and aches!
Why tormented with Piles, Constipation!
Why frightened over disordered Kidneys!
Why endure nervous or sick headaches!
Why have sleepless nights!

Use KIDNEY-WORT and rejoice in health.

It is put up in Dry Vegetable Form, in tin cans one package of which makes six quarts of medicine.

Also in Liquid Form, very Concentrated, for the convenience of those that cannot readily prepare it. It acts with equal efficiency in either form.

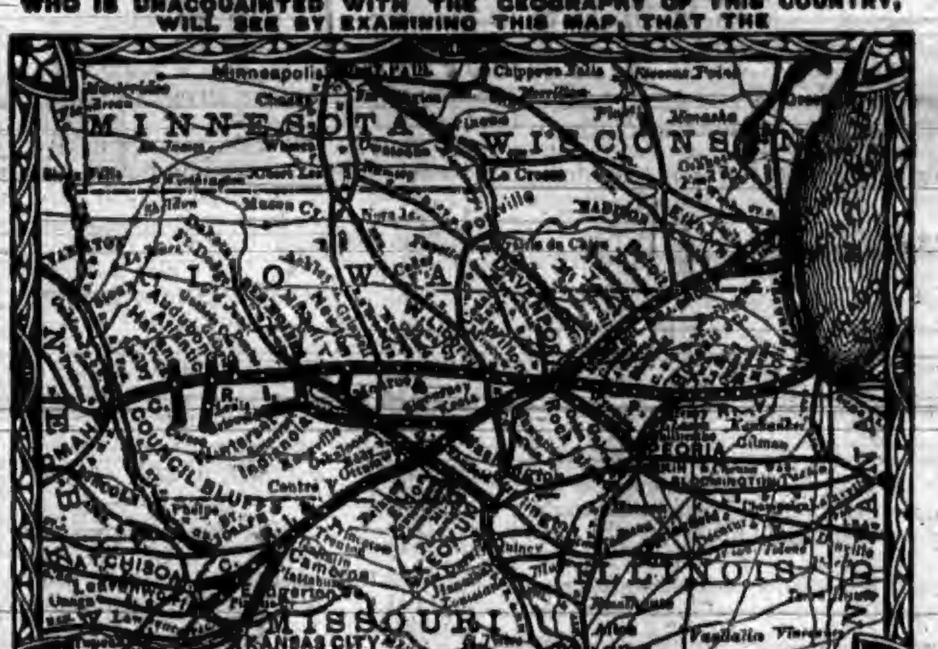
A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE



CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y

Is The Great Connecting Link between the East and the West!

Its main line runs from Chicago to Council Bluffs, passing through Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, West Liberty, Iowa City, Marengo, Brooklyn, Grinnell, Des Moines (the capital of Iowa), Stuart, Atlantic, and Avoca; with branches from Bureau Junction to Peoria; Wilton Junction to Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Eldon, Belknap, Centreville, Princeton, Trenton, Gallatin, Cameron, Leavenworth, Atchison, and Kansas City; Washington to Sigourney, Oskaloosa, and Knoxville; Keokuk to Farmington, Bonaparte, Bentonsport, Independent, Eldon, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Oskaloosa, Pella, Monroe, and Des Moines; Mt. Zion to Keosauqua; Newton to Monroe; Des Moines to Indianola and Winterset; Atlantic to Griswold and Audubon; and Avoca to Harlan and Carson. This is positively the only Railroad, which owns, and operates a through line from Chicago into the State of Kansas.

Through Express Passenger Trains, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, are run each way daily between CHICAGO and PEORIA, KANSAS CITY, COUNCIL BLUFFS, LEAVENWORTH and ATCHISON. Through cars are also run between Milwaukee and Kansas City, via the "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line."

The "Great Rock Island" is magnificently equipped. Its road bed is simply perfect, and its track is laid with steel rails.

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

The principal R. R. connections of this great Through Line are as follows:

At CHICAGO, with all diverging lines for the East and South.
At ENGLEWOOD, with the L.S. & M.S., and P., Ft. W. & C. R. R'ds.
At WASHINGTON HEIGHTS, with P., C. & St. L. R. R.
At LA SALLE, with Ill. Cent. R. R.
At PEORIA, with P. P. & J.; P. D. & E.; I. B. & W.; Ill. Mid.; and T. P. & W. Rds.
At ROCK ISLAND, with "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line," and Rock Isl'd & Peo. Rds.
At DAVENPORT, with the Davenport Division C. M. & St. P. R. R.
At WEST LIBERTY, with the B. C. R. & N. R. R.
At GRINNELL, with Central Iowa R. R.
At DES MOINES, with D. M. & F. D. R. R.
At COUNCIL BLUFFS, with Union Pacific R. R.
At OMAHA, with B. & Mo. R. R. R. (in Neb.)
At COLUMBUS JUNCTION, with B. C. R. & N. R. R.
At OTTUMWA, with Central Iowa R. R.; W., St. L. & Pac., and C. B. and Q. R. Rds.
At KEOKUK, with Tol., Peo. & War.; Wab., St. Louis & Pac., and St. L., Keo. & N. W. R. Rds.
At CAMERON, with H. St. J. R. R.
At ATCHISON, with Atch., Topeka & Santa Fe; Atch. & Neb., and Cen. Br. U. P. R. Rds.
At LEAVENWORTH, with Union Pac. and Kan. Cent. R. Rds.
At KANSAS CITY, with all lines for the West and Southwest.

PULLMAN PALACE CARS are run through to PEORIA, DES MOINES, COUNCIL BLUFFS, KANSAS CITY, ATCHISON, and LEAVENWORTH.

Tickets via this Line, known as the "Great Rock Island Route," are sold by all Ticket Agents in the United States and Canada.

POLITICAL AGRICULTURE.

Il y a fagot et fagot.—Molière.

The farmer through the freshly-furrowed land
Strode to and fro; and at each step his hand
Took from a sack and scattered on the plain
Handfuls, to left and right, of wheaten grain.
"What is he doing?" asked a child, whom there
His tutor had led forth to breathe the air
Between two lessons of arithmetic.
"Just what thou see'st him do," the tutor, sick
Of the child's frequent questions, peevishly
Replied to this one—"sowing his field." "Why?"
"That he may reap." "What?" "Corn," the tutor said,
"To make for thee, child, black, unbuttered bread
When thou hast misbehaved thyself." The child,
Somewhat abashed, but still unreconciled
To silent ignorance, paused, blushed, and then
"Is sowing difficult?" he asked again.
To which last question, vainly more than once
Reiterated, not the least response
The tutor deigned.

Some days afterward,
Playing alone about the garden-sward,
This child upon the gravel, with a stake
Plucked from the shrubbery, contrived to make Small mimic furrows; having filled (for lack Of any other more appropriate sack)
With finest sand his little pillow-case,
A stolen prize; and, strewing o'er each trace
Graved in the gravel by his tiny spud,
Handfuls of sand he sowed 'twixt heaps of mud.
"What art thou doing, Paul? A pretty mess!
Spoiling my gravel-walks!" In grave distress
The child to whom this chiding voice appealed
Cried, sobbing: "Father, let me sow my field!"
"From such a field," the father, laughing, said,
"What dost thou hope to reap, Paul?" "Dry black bread,"
The child replied. The father laughed again.
"My little Paul, thou sow'st thy field in vain;
By sowing sand expect not to reap corn."
The boy hung down his head, with face forlorn;
"But I had nothing else to sow," said he.

The father fell into a reverie.
He was a statesman; or men called him so.
The field of Time with fruitful seed to sow
Was his profession. He had labored late
And early in the service of the state.
Between the office and the Parliament
His days and nights industriously spent
Had left the deep furrows wherein Time sowed cares
On his own forehead. Nothing but gray hairs,
Grave habits, barren honor, joyless strife,
Grew in the faded field of his own life,
And, for the first time in that life, this day,
Pained by the sight of his own child at play,
The pensive father asked himself: "Alack!
What have I in the bottom of my sack?"

LIFE AMONG THE MORMONS.

A lady who has lived many years in the Mormon Territory gave a New York Sun reporter the benefit of her observations while in Salt Lake City and other places in Utah. She said:

"A Gentile myself, I never lost curiosity regarding the peculiar institution. Off and on I have lived twenty years among the Mormons. I like the people and I like their religion, for polygamy is a religion with them. I do not, of course, like this form of their belief. They are a cheerful, jolly set of folks, their worship more nearly resembling that of the Methodists than any religion known to us. They do not scare you out of your senses with threats of eternal damnation and hell fire. Even in church, if anything funny is said, you are at liberty to laugh, and are not considered to have offended the proprieties. They are generous, open-handed and whole-souled, as a general thing, and nowhere on earth—for I have traveled far and observed much, and know whereof I speak—do women uphold each other so much as the Mormon women do. They have a sympathy and a charity for each other that women elsewhere would do well to emulate.

"Although woman work in the Territory, their work is seldom of a character to increase wealth, and, as each wife must have her separate rooms or house and a stipulated allowance to live upon, it can readily be seen that polygamy was an ingenious device to keep men from amassing wealth. I remember well a case in point. The editor of a certain paper was allowed to live in peace and happiness with his only wife until the growing influence of the journal and the emoluments therefrom attracted Brigham's attention. The editor was informed one day that he had too long neglected the religious rites of the church—that he must take another wife. The editor did not want to, and, as may be supposed, neither was his wife anxious that he should. But there was no resisting Brigham. It must be done. The wife and the husband were tenderly attached. They desired to keep their means for the education and future maintenance of their only son, but their private wishes availed nothing. A young girl was selected as the second wife, and a wing was built to their house. The wife fell sick with grieving and with jealous torture. As she lay for weeks on her bed she could hear the hammering going on, and listened with the same feelings that a condemned man hears the erection of the scaffold on which he is to be executed. But being a true Mormon, and believing like her husband that he was only performing a religious duty, she prayed for resignation and submission. She succeeded so well that she was able to attend the wedding, and give the bride away, as it were, but after that matters did not work well. Although the first wife tried hard to keep the peace, the second wife was a virago, and jealous of the love that the husband had evidently not transferred.

"For some time the two wives lived, one in one wing of the house, the other in the other. They would meet in the back yard, common to both, but without speaking. After the birth of a son to the second wife, her temper, because she could not entirely supplant the first wife, became so unbearable that the unlucky editor implored Young to grant him a divorce. After that the second wife went to what is popularly known as the bad. The husband induced her to give the child into the keeping of the first wife. The two boys have been reared as brothers, and no other wife has since disturbed the harmony of the little household.

"One singular thing in Mormon families is the perfect good feeling which invariably exists among the children. They never quarrel, as step-sisters and brothers do in the States, for they are early taught that their rights are equal and respect them, their common father taking care to show no more favoritism among his children than among his wives. I was often amused at these same Mormon children. They would come in and say: 'Mother, Polly So-and-so is going to be married to Mr. What's-his name. She's going in fifth, or ninth, or eleventh,' as the case might be.

"Another thing that struck me as strange was that all Brigham's daughters are lovely and most pronounced blondes, with golden-tinted hair, heavenly-blue eyes, and cream-and-roses complexions, all tall, well-built girls, while their various mothers were of all shapes, all sizes and complexions, and had every shade of hair and eyes.

"The Mormons believe that those who do not practice polygamy are wrong, and not they; and they, especially the women, are fond of inveighing against the immorality of the States—the flirtation and worse of Gentile wives, and the unfaithfulness of Gentile husbands. I have often had them say to me: 'How selfish are you Gentile wives! You get married to one man. You find him a good husband, a good provider, and a good father. You know that the women in the world outnumber the men, so that there are no longer men enough to go round, and yet you will not share that good provider with another woman, although you know he would make her as happy as he has you, and so many a poor woman has to go without any husband at all, because you are too selfish to divide him up.'

"Neither falsehood nor concealment is necessary to a Mormon. Number 1 is taken into his confidence from the beginning, and her consent respectfully requested to every subsequent marriage is a formality never dispensed with. Until she is too old to hold her own at all, she is the head and ruler of the bevy of wives. Every wife is given so much and no more of the husband's time and money, thus preventing jealousy and dispute. He spends a week with one, a week with another, or less time if his wives be many. If he takes a fancy to remain longer than the allotted time woe be to him, for all the other wives rise up as one united injured woman, and make it lively for him. You see, it may not always be practicable for one wife to make a husband toe the mark, but a dozen, more or less, find it no trouble whatever.

"I was in Salt Lake City during the whole Ann Eliza episode. I have since heard her lecture, and was amused at the way she distorted facts. She was a thorough Mormon, ambitious and intriguing for power. She wanted the glory of being one of Brigham's wives, supposing that as she was young and prepossessing she could win his oft-won heart and reign supreme over his vast estates and many wives. She therefore made him proposals—strictly honorable, I am bound to say, since she divorced her husband to do so—but, after having been sealed to countless women, and having led to the altar eighteen blushing brides, to wed the fair Eliza did not have for Brigham the charm of novelty. Besides he was enamored of Amelia, and was wooing her.

"They have a sort of confessional, in the sacred precincts of which they may safely confide their desire to marry a certain man, who is thereupon informed of the wish by the pious go-between, and the gentleman can hardly refuse. Of all men Brigham was bound to practice what he preached, and, as Ann Eliza would not take no for an answer—and "no" he did say to her I know for a certainty—she became the nineteenth wife. At this time all the remnants of love the poor old man had to give were lavished on Amelia, who had not wanted him, but had been talked into the matter by her relatives. He made Eliza's honeymoon as brief as possible, and hurried to Amelia. Eliza says in her lecture that she was banished to a wretched little place in the country, or words to that effect. The truth is that, like all the rest of his wives, she was given a choice of residence. She selected a pretty, little, well-stocked farm about four miles from Salt Lake City. There's not a lady in New York but would be pleased to own such a place.

"Ann Eliza made a great complaint of never having anything to wear but a calico dress. I never saw her in any but a silk of the best make and material. In Utah, as elsewhere, ladies wear calico when about their work. There are no drones in the great Mormon hive. Eliza struggled hard for the office of queen bee, but there is no such sinecure. She was so nettled at Brigham's infrequent and quite ceremonious calls that she took a dislike to her farm, and thought that if she were to get within the city limits she would get more chance at him, so she teased and tortured him until he gave her a house in town. It was a very comfortable, commodious dwelling, very roomy, and well adapted for a boarding house.

"By this time the Gentiles had overrun the Mormon fastnesses, and where the American goes there the boarding house follows. The nineteenth wife could not become the power behind the throne, so she resolved to open a boarding house. Brigham thought it beneath the dignity of his wife, infinitesimally speaking, to keep a boarding house, but she pestered him so he consented. He had married her to get rid of her, and, not succeeding, he thought the boarding house would quiet her. She took in some Gentiles who backed her in open rebellion, wrote her lecture, and started her lecturing. This was the inner life of Brigham and Eliza. Could she have stepped into Amelia's place, she would have done as that very long-headed lady has done, and the world would never have heard either her wrongs or her lecture.

"As a general thing women are wooed in Utah the same as elsewhere. At the same time there is a class of girls who cast about and pick up a husband for themselves. When I say a husband I mean a husband, for they prefer to see how a man treats his wife and the style in which he supports her before they marry him. They don't care to experiment with a single man. They select a man of wealth, and by means of the confessional of which I have spoken, or otherwise, it is made known to him that he must marry a certain girl. It is only just to the Mormon women at large to say that this sort of girl is in the minority. Polygamy compels her to remain respectable in spite of herself, for nowhere is a lapse from virtue more condemned than among the Mormons, and the infidelity of a wife is punished by the loss of caste and complete social banishment. A woman can only be married to one man at a time. Divorce is within easy reach, but to the husband de facto and pro tem. she must remain true. A case occurred within my knowledge which, though painful, had its amusing side.

"A man had a wife. Both believed polygamy was right, but when the husband put it into practice and brought home a younger and handsomer bride, the first wife found it hard to bear. There are certain things very galling about this Mormon custom. The first wife is expected to treat the new-comer as a welcome guest, and if not in good circumstances she must resign her sleeping-apartment to her—there's no humiliation spared the supplanted wife. She must not only get down from her throne, but she must place her rival upon it; all of which the wife did of whom I tell you. She set her teeth so hard that no murmur escaped them, and became what Mormon women all think the Lord intended they should be, martyrs. The second wife was a pretty, addle-pated little creature, who had only married Mr. Black for the sake of a home, without caring for him in the least, while the first wife loved him devotedly. All went quietly for a time, till Mr. Black attained the grand object of a Mormon's ambition. He was given what they call a mission; that is, he was sent abroad to proselyte. In his absence the two wives lived together, and the second wife attracted the attention of an inferior man.

"The first wife was all amiability to the second wife, especially when the inferior gentleman called. She discreetly withdrew, and never seemed aware that the two had fallen madly in love with each other. So matters went on until the return of the mutual husband. Wife No. 2 found a confession obligatory. The husband could not have been more astonished if the heavens had fallen, and raved more about a wife's shame and a husband's honor than Othello himself. What was to be done? A husband's honor must not be tarnished, a wife's faithlessness must be avenged. With a grim smile wife No. 1 saw wife No. 2 driven from home disgraced; for, though the outraged husband speedily divorced her, the inferior gentleman refused to make an honest woman of one who had publicly been pronounced the reverse, and, driven from pillar to post, the poor creature became an outcast, and so continued until her child became a beautiful and sturdy boy. Taking him by the hand one day she went to wife No. 1, and implored her to take him and rear him properly; 'but do not separate us,' she said; 'give me shelter too, and I will be your servant, your willing, uncomplaining slave, until death.' And so they all live together, the mother in the kitchen, the son in the parlor, hardly daring to speak to each other, the divorced wife the hard-driven menial of the woman whose equal she once was, and the husband, though tolerating her presence for humanity's sake, never permitting her to speak to him.

"At almost the first dinner I was invited to in Salt Lake City I was introduced to a gentleman. We will call him Jones. I was also introduced to two ladies named Jones, but it did not occur to me until I was told afterward that they were both married to him. One was passe, proud and stately in bearing and appearance. The other was young, very pretty, and seemed to shrink at the sound of the other's voice. She flew to obey her commands, which consisted of orders to wait on Mr. Jones. 'Emma,' she would say, 'hand George this, hand George that; get George's hat, get George's cane; fetch George's gloves, etc.'

"As I have said before, the first wife is mistress of all the others, and they are forced to obey her as abjectly as slaves. Emma was the second wife of Jones, and the wife ruled her with a rod of iron. There was no tyranny she did not inflict upon her, no mean, merciless grinding under foot that she did not exercise. Jones left them to fight it out. So hideous was the first wife's treatment of the second that she finally went crazy, and had to be confined in an asylum. Mrs. Jones the first urbanely gave Mr. Jones permission to bring home any number of young and pretty wives, but at latest dates he had not availed himself of her kindness.

"Fighting it out reminds me of a young fellow who had a pretty young wife, but soon began to pay his addresses to a young lady. He took the latter on a little excursion, on which, as it happened, his wife had gone. They met, and, as the wife had no intimation of what he was contemplating, she began to make a scene, just as a Gentile wife would. He hurried both ladies into a room in a rustic hotel on the pretext of talking it over quietly. As soon as he got them there he slipped out, locked them in, and gave orders below that no one should let them out or pay any attention to their cries for assistance. The day went on, and the husband enjoyed himself, but the women fought and stormed and went into hysterics and fainted and recovered and finally got awfully hungry. In vain they shouted and begged to be released. Then they wept and made up, and when the husband came and demanded through the keyhole if they were good friends and would like something to eat, they both said 'Yes' meekly to all his questions. Then he unlocked the door, and they went and had a cozy little dinner together, and when he married the young lady they were all happy ever after.

"While old men invariably select young women as wives, they often make a concession to a daughter and marry her mother at the same time, so as not to separate them, and a young man will often take a mother and grandmother along with the daughter. Literally, in Utah men frequently marry a whole family. A wife getting old is often glad to have her husband marry a daughter by another husband, so that the original wife may not be ousted from her privileges and a comfortable home.

"It is a custom out there to call a woman after her husband's first name, in order to distinguish her. For instance, the wife of John Young is called Libbie John, and not Mrs. John Young.

"The first emigrant women were grossly ignorant. Those born in Utah in the present generation are educated and refined, quite capable of thinking and acting for themselves. What with the newspapers brought into the Territory, the railroads tempting them to travel, and bringing in hosts of strangers, the Mormon women of to-day have facilities for enlightenment equal to those in New York city. The young girls generally are refusing to accept polygamists as husbands, and wives are beginning to appeal to the law to punish their bigamous partners. The best class of men are willing to drop out of their religion its one repulsive feature, and would prefer to send to the seat of Government some man who is not a polygamist.

"If the Mormon people are not persecuted into an obstinate and prolonged continuance of polygamy it will die a natural death, and in thirty years hence there will not remain a vestige of it."

AUSTRALIA.

Some Interesting Facts About the Island-Continent.

[Letter from Melbourne.]

Victoria, of which Melbourne is the capital, is about the same size as England, or a State of moderate area in the Union. Forty-four years ago the colony or province was uninhabited by any folk except the aborigines. It now contains nearly 1,000,000 people, and the population of Melbourne numbers 250,000. This quickly-risen city has some resemblance to an American town and many features that are novel. Visitors are less struck with its architecture than with the width of the streets. In the city proper all the main thoroughfares are 99 feet wide, and they cross at right angles. On each side runs an open drain, and underground sewerage has not yet been adopted. Melbourne is visited seven or eight times in the summer by a scorching wind from the north, which dries up the surface moisture and carries off the germs of diseases that live on damp. The hot wind is peculiar to Southern and Central Australia. The interior of the island-continent is a vast expanse of plains, intersected by few ranges of mountains and traversed by few rivers. These plains support cattle and sheep in great abundance, but are subject to periodical drought. A dry season kills off the herbage and evaporates the lakes and chains of pools which in summer represent the river of the winter time. The winds that travel over the inland plains collect heat from the surface, and their temperature rises high above the dew-point. On their visit to the southern regions these warm, dry winds suck up the moisture and wither the herbage. To the native vegetation the hot wind does little injury. The leaves of the eucalyptus and acacia (the two predominant genera) are thick and stored with oil, and the roots are spread like net-work through the undersoil. The agriculturist does not mind the hot wind, for it comes at harvest time, when the crops are ripe; and the flocks of the grazier do not suffer unless the dry season lasts long, for sheep thrive on shrubs and herbs when the grass fails. It is remarkable how long the flocks can resist a drought on the inland plains. Even when the surface looks quite bare they are able to find food, and can get on well so long as the holes retain water. About once in six or eight years a drought occurs over the vast interior, and sheep perish in thousands. It is the uncertainty of the seasons that renders the ventures of the grazier precarious, and accounts for the remarkable success of some men and the misfortune of others. In spite, however, of periodic scarcity, the great industry of Australia is the wool industry, and it annually brings in millions of pounds sterling to the community.

The traveler who has seen Paris, the suburbs of London and the chief American cities misses the street cars. There are no street railroads in Melbourne, and all passenger traffic is carried on in omnibuses and wagonettes.

Victoria is well provided with railway communication. Over 1,000 miles of line are open, and Parliament has just authorized the construction of an additional 400 miles, at a cost of $70,000,000. Locomotives built in Philadelphia now run on the main lines, and the American type of engine is preferred to the English for passenger traffic.

Each of the five colonies or provinces into which the continent of Australia is divided is as independent of its neighbors as if they were all so many European republics and kingdoms. Each makes its own laws and has its own tariff. Owing to the comparative thinness of the population—for what are 2,000,000 people on a continent 3,000 miles long and 2,000 miles wide?—and to the distances between the capital cities, no scheme of federation is yet practicable. It has often been talked about—the colonies have even conferred together on the subject—but there is no immediate prospect of the establishment of an Australian dominion or union. Geographical difficulties and want of concord on the subject of tariffs keep the colonies asunder.

The most creditable thing in Victoria is the education system, which is free, secular and compulsory. It is conducted entirely by the Government, and has been in operation for eight years. The cost of the system is $2,500,000 per annum—a good deal for a population of less than 1,000,000 to pay for the education of 200,000 individual children, between the ages of 6 and 15.

Australians are great holiday-takers, and each year the prosperous bushmen allow themselves a fortnight or three-weeks' enjoyment in Melbourne. November is the middle spring season of the year, when flowers are gay, the turf soft and green, and the days bright but cool. At midsummer the grass becomes brown. Australian laborers only work eight hours a day, and there are thirteen recognized public holidays in the course of the year. It is the custom beside to take a week or fortnight at Christmas and another week at Easter.

Stories of Andrew Jackson.

When Jackson was President, Jimmy O'Neill, the Irish doorkeeper of the White House, was a marked character. He had his foibles, which often offended the fastidiousness of the President's nephew and Secretary, Maj. Donelson, who caused his dismissal on an average of about once a week. But on appeal to the higher court the verdict was always reversed by the good nature of the good old General. Once, however, Jimmy was guilty of some flagrant offense, and, being summoned before the President himself, was thus addressed: "Jimmy, I have borne with you for years in spite of all complaints; but this goes beyond my powers of endurance." "And do you believe the story?" asked Jimmy. "Certainly," answered the General: "I have just heard it from two Senators." "Faith," retorted Jimmy, "if I believed all that twenty Senators say about you, it's little I'd think you was fit to be President." "Pshaw, Jimmy," concluded the General, "clear out, and go back to your duty, but be more careful hereafter." Jimmy not only retained his place to the close of Jackson's Presidential term, but accompanied him back to the Hermitage, and was with him to the day of his death.

Gen. Jackson had very little love or taste for poetry, his favorite author being Dr. Isaac Watts, from whose "Psalms and Hymns" he used to make his selections for the inscriptions in the ladies' albums which were once so fashionable, when they were sent him with a request for his autograph.

It is said that while President he never drank any ardent spirits. This was corroborated by his negro servant, who said that "Massa Jackson no drink rum, but den he drink his coffee strong enough to kill de debbil."—Cincinnati Gazette.

Life of the Czar of Russia.

The following brief sketch of the Czar's life is taken from Chambers' Encyclopedia:

Alexander II., Emperor of Russia, was born April 29, 1818. He was carefully educated by his father, Nicholas, who professed himself delighted with the manifestations of true Roman spirit in his son. At sixteen he was declared of age, and made Commandant of the Lancers of the Guard Hetman of the Cossacks, First Aid-de-Camp of the Emperor, and subject daily to a life of maneuvering, reviewing and military parade, which at last seriously injured his health. He then traveled through Germany to recruit his energies, and while there concluded a marriage with the Princess Maria, daughter of the Grand Duke of Darmstadt in 1841. He now vigorously applied himself to his studies as Chancellor of the University of Finland. By his dexterous and subtle manners he insinuated himself into the affections of the Finns, and weakened their love of independence. He founded a chair of the Finnish language and literature, patronized the Academy for the culture of Finnish literature, and defrayed the expenses of numerous remote expeditions undertaken by the savants, such as Cygnoeus, Wallin and Castren. In 1850 he visited Southern Russia, Nickolaieff, Sebastopol, Tiflis, Erivon, &c. It is said he witnessed with regret the attitude which his father assumed toward Europe, and that he altogether disapproved of the Crimean War. On his accession to the throne, March 2, 1855, he found himself in a critical position. He had two parties to conciliate at home—the old Muscovite party, blindly zealous for war, and the more peaceable and intelligent portion of the Nation, who possessed his personal sympathies. He pursued a course calculated to encourage both; spoke of adhering to the policy of his illustrious ancestors, and at the same time concluded peace. Since then he has shown a strong desire to purge the internal administration of its impurities. He has sharply rebuked the corruption of functionaries, and severely punished some as a warning to the rest. An honorable recognition has been given to public instruction, which he has freed from military influence where that absurdity existed, as in the law schools of St. Petersburg, and has placed it under his own direct and personal superintendence. His moderation has even stimulated the hopes of the Poles. By a ukase of May 27, 1856, he has granted to all Polish exiles who are willing to express repentance for the past, permission to return home; but, though desirous of preserving the nationality of Poland, he will not separate it from the Great Russian Family. The grand achievement of his reign, however, as yet is the emancipation of the Russian serfs in 1861, and of the Polish serfs in 1867. An attempt was made to assassinate him at Paris, June 6, 1867, when on a visit to Napoleon III.

The Art of Being a Bore.

"The other night at the opera ball I met one of our comediennes, who is generally recognized as among the most amiable in her profession, and especially fond of gayety.

"'Well, you have plenty of fun,' I observed.

"'Oh, so, so! the men, and especially the young men, are such bores.'

"In a single word the fair speaker had unconsciously defined the constitutional malady of this French people, which passes for the wittiest nation in the world, and is so in fact; but which occasionally expends a vast amount of wit for the purpose of appearing to be witless.

"I may seem to be uttering a paradox, a ludicrous contradiction, but the fact I speak of is simply the exaggerated result of our instinctive horror of all that is cold, sad and serious.

"So great is our horror of ennui that we defy it, for the same reason that savages worship what they most fear. This is why, in this insolent, skeptical, mocking, laughing France of ours it has become a profession to be a bore.

"Not a vulgar profession, but an excellent and incomparable one, without risk or peril, which opens all doors and is a safe conduct to all aspirations.

"Nevertheless, it must not be supposed that one can succeed the first time, or in one day in becoming a perfect bore. One is not born such under this sun of ours. One can only become so, just as one becomes an orator, after long and continued violence done to his own nature. Even with the true vocation and especial natural aptitude, one must patiently practice for years.

"For it will not suffice to be simply a bore; one must also be serious, very serious.

"A certain apprentice in diplomacy who was not greatly worried by his excess of brain-power once asked M. de Talleyrand for advice how to succeed in his career.

"'First of all,' replied Prince Benevent, 'never laugh!'

"'Thanks, Monseigneur—and then'—

"'And secondly—never laugh!'

"There is no use denying it, the whole secret lies in that. Fancy the influence a man must have who never laughs!"—Le Voltaire.

How a Lawsuit Was Won.

A Galveston man met a friend from the country on the street.

"How do you come on?" exclaimed the former. "When I last heard of you you had a lawsuit on hand with Tom Smith about a fine horse. How did that end?"

"I won it. I completely got away with Tom. You see the Justice was the most honest man in the world, so I wrote him a note asking him to accept the inclosed $5 bill."

"I should think the Judge would have ruled against you for trying to bribe him."

"So he would if I had not been careful to sign Tom Smith's name instead of my own."

How poor are they who have not patience.—Shakspeare.

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

An Article That Will Make the Bald and Gray Rejoice.

[From the Pittsburgh Commercial.]

Of all the compounds which the chemist's art have given to the world, for hundreds of years, for the purpose of restoring the hair to its natural growth and color, not one has been perfect. Many of the hair dressings of the day are excellent, but the great mass of the stuffs sold for promoting the growth and bringing back the original color are mere humbugs, while not a few are positively pernicious in their effects upon the scalp and the structure of the hair. All hair dyes are well known to chemists as more or less poisonous, because the change in color is artificial and does not depend upon a restoration of the functions of the scalp to their natural health and vigor. The falling out of the hair, the accumulations of dandruff, and the premature change in color are all evidences of a diseased condition of the scalp and the glands which nourish the hair. To arrest these causes the article used must possess medical as well as chemical virtues, and the change must begin under the scalp to be of permanent and lasting benefit. Such an article has been discovered, and, like many other wonderful discoveries, it is found to consist of elements almost in their natural state. Petroleum oil is the article which is made to work such extraordinary results; but is after the best refined article has been chemically treated, and completely deodorized, that it is in proper condition for the toilette and receives the names of Carboline. It was in far-off Russia that the effects of petroleum upon the hair were first observed; a Government officer having noticed that a partially bald-headed servant of his, when trimming the lamps, had a habit of wiping his oil-besmeared hands in his scanty locks, and the result was, in a few months, a much finer head of black, glossy hair than he ever had before. The oil was tried on horses and cattle that had lost their hair from the cattle plague, and the results were as rapid as they were marvelous. The manes and tails of horses, which had fallen out, were completely restored in a few weeks. These experiments were heralded to the world, but the knowledge was practically useless to the prematurely bald and gray, as no one in civilized society could tolerate the use of refined petroleum as a dressing for the hair. But the skill of one of our chemists has overcome the difficulty, and by a process known only to himself he has, after very elaborate and costly experiments, succeeded in perfecting Carboline, which renders it susceptible of being handled as daintily as the famous EAU DE COLOGNE. The experiments with the deodorized liquid, on the human hair and skin, were attended with the most astonishing results. A few applications, where the hair was thin and falling, gave remarkable tone and vigor to the scalp and the hair. Every particle of dandruff disappears on the first or second dressing, all cutaneous diseases of the skin and scalp are rapidly and permanently healed, and the liquid, so searching in its nature, seems to penetrate to the roots of the hair at once, and set up a radical change from the start. It is well known that the most beautiful colors are made from petroleum, and by some mysterious operation of nature the use of this article gradually imparts a beautiful light brown color to the hair, which, by continued use, deepens to a black. The color remains permanent for an indefinite length of time, and the change is so gradual that the most intimate friends can scarcely detect its progress. In a word, it is the most wonderful discovery of the age, and well calculated to make the prematurely bald and gray rejoice. The name Carboline has been given to the article.

The Duke of Connaught and the Irishman.

All classes in Ireland are fond of grandeur and circumstance, and the establishment of a royal residence there would have a most beneficial effect. During the stay of the Duke of Connaught in the country, he was, as usual, very affable, and won golden opinions among rich and poor. I was told that, one day when he was standing at the door of a hotel, a tatterdemalion came up to him, and with native assurance called out:

"Welcome to Ireland, your Royal Highness! I hope I see your Highness well."

"Quite well. I am much obliged to you," replied the Duke.

"And your royal mother, the Queen?" continued the man. "I hope she is also enjoying good health?"

"Yes, thank you," returned the Duke; "the Queen is very well."

"I am glad to hear it, your Royal Highness. And how are your royal brothers?"

"Get along there, fellow!" said one of the aides-de-camp, who happened to come up at that moment.

"What are you interfering with me for, sir?" retorted the tatterdemalion, much affronted. "Don't you see that I am houlding a conversation with his Royal Highness?"—London Society.

English Infantry.

The standard of height for the infantry of the line is now five feet six inches, and for chest measurement it is thirty-four inches; no recruit is accepted who does not fulfill these requirements, which are in excess of those in all, and are much higher than those in most Continental armies. Some, indeed, are in favor of lowering these standards, because in consequence of them we are forced to reject so many recruits whose chest-measurement is only thirty-three inches but whom, in every other respect, it would be desirable to enlist. Without in any way going back to the very low standards to which we have often had to resort in the days of long service, we could at any moment increase the number of our recruits very considerably by reducing our standard to that of Germany or of France. In 1873 there were in every 1,000 men in the army 412 under five feet seven inches, and 588 over that same height; in 1880 the numbers were 398 and 602 respectively. Surely these facts show a decided improvement in the physical strength of our soldiers, and afford a positive denial to all the wild statements which are so commonly bandied about as to the inferiority of the recruits who now enlist under the short-service system, compared with those we used to obtain formerly.—Sir Garnet Wolseley, in Nineteenth Century.

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.

THE number of bones in the human body is 240. The average number of teeth is 32.

THE velocity of the electric waves through the Atlantic cables is from 7,000 to 8,000 miles per second.

A MAGNET weighing two ounces sustains a weight of three pounds two ounces, or twenty-five times its own weight.

THE oxygen of the air aids and facilitates the germination of plants, and seeds buried so deeply in the ground as to be out of reach of the action of atmospheric air will exhibit no signs of life.

THE tiger does not naturally possess, but easily acquires, a love of human flesh. When he has once tasted it, the spell of man's supremacy is broken, and ever after that, it is said, he prefers it to any other.

THE director of the Bureau of Statistics at Vienna has made some interesting researches concerning the comparative longevity of women and men in Europe. He finds that out of 102,831 individuals who have passed the age 90 years, 60,303 are women, and only 42,528 are men. In Italy, 244 alleged centenarian women are found for 141 men of that age.

A HOLLOW tree in Southern California has been converted into a dwelling. Doors and windows have been put in, and floors built for eight stories, the entrance being made by means of a ladder. Outside the topmost room is a small balcony, shaded by the foliage of the tree. The occupant expects to get rich by having no plumber bills to pay.

VASCO NUNEZ DE BALBOA, a Spaniard of wonderful courage and adventure, smuggled himself on board a ship in a cask, in order to join an expedition to Darien, in 1510, commanded by Francisco de Encisco. He ultimately obtained a supreme command of the new colony, and in 1513 discovered the Pacific ocean from the top of a mountain on the Isthmus of Panama.

A WELL-KNOWN Paris scientist, Dr. Delaunay, has made the curious discovery that to ascertain the qualities of an applicant cook it is sufficient to give her a plate to clean or a sauce to make and watch how she moves her hand in either act. If she move it from left to right, or in the direction of the hands of a watch, you may trust her; if in the other way, she is certain to be stupid and incapable. Similarly the intelligence of people may be gauged by asking them to make a circle on paper with a pencil, and noting in which direction the hand is moved. The good students in a mathematical class draw circles from left to right. The inferiority of the softer sex (as well as of male dunces) is shown by their drawing from right to left; asylum patients and children do the same. In a word, centrifugal movements are a characteristic of intelligence and higher developments; centripetal are a mark of incomplete evolution. A person, as his faculties are developed, may come to draw circles the opposite way to what he did in youth. Dr. Delaunay has some further extraordinary conclusions as to the relative positions of races in the scale of development from the way they wind their watches and make their screws.

HAPPY FRIENDS.

[From the Jackson Daily Patriot.]

Rev. F. M. Winburne, pastor M. E. Church, Mexia, Texas, writes as follows: Several months since, I received a supply of St. Jacobs Oil. Retaining two bottles, I distributed the rest among friends. It is a most excellent remedy for pains and aches of various kinds, especially neuralgia and rheumatic affections.

Pork and Beans for One.

A lady on a Central railroad train, after depositing numerous bundles in the rack overhead the seat, hung her umbrella on the cord connecting with the air-brakes. A newsboy passing through the car noticed the suspended gingham, and politely informed the innocent owner that she must remove it.

"What's that string for if it ain't to hang things on?" inquired the old lady, as she dropped the umbrella into the seat.

The boy answered, in all earnestness, "It's to call a waiter when you're hungry," and passed on.

Some time after there was vigorous pulling of the air-brake cord, and the train came to a standstill. The conductor rushed up to the old lady, and in a tone of amazement exclaimed, "What's the matter?"

"Bring me a plate of pork and beans," drawled out the ancient female with the umbrella, not in the least aware that she had stopped the train.

An explanation followed, and the joking newsboy did not venture forth from the baggage car during the remainder of the trip.—Albany Journal.

[From the Clinton (Iowa) Herald.]

JAMES BUTLER, Esq., clerk of the Roxbury Carpet Co., Boston Mass., employing eight hundred hands, in a late communication concerning the admirable working of an article introduced into the factory, says: The famous Old German Remedy, St. Jacobs Oil, has effected several cures among our men, who have been badly hurt in working in the factory, and they pronounce it a success every time.

An Electric Fire Tell-Tale.

There are several devices for enabling the rise of temperature accompanying an outbreak of fire at a particular place in a building to ring an alarm-bell by means of an electric current. There is the mercurial thermometer, in which the mercury column, on expanding by the increased temperature, makes contact between two platinum electrodes fused into the tube, and completes the circuit; and there is an arrangement in which the bimetallic spring, fixed at one end, is free to curve under the unequal expansion of the two metals, and close a circuit in that way. A still simpler plan has been recently contrived by M. G. Dupre, in which the contents of the automatic keys are kept apart by a piece of suet or tallow, which on melting by the heat allows them to come together through the operation of a small weight attached to the uppermost contact bar. The tallow is not of course placed immediately between the contacts, for in that case the fat would act as an insulator, and prevent the flow of the current. The apparatus is readjusted after an alarm by charging it with fresh tallow.

Wanted—Good Story Writers.

The lack of good American story-writers is something which must have impressed every reader of fiction. As long as the spirit of romance lives in the human beast, stories will be read more than any other sort of literature. The monthly magazines, the innumerable weekly papers, furnish a gigantic mill for the consumption of stories, particularly short ones. Vivid, dramatic tales of a few columns long, that can be read at a single sitting, are those most in demand.

The editors of the story papers in this country have infinite trouble to supply the want. They rack their resources continually to find lively short stories. Their success is only indifferent with all their efforts. It is not that they do not have material enough to choose from, such as it is. Bushels of manuscript are sent them daily. More dreary than listening to a lecture on physiology is the task of reading them. As the hapless reader of the pack of trash sits down beside his barrel of manuscript, more or less, he is apt to mournfully ask himself what sin he has committed that this should be his punishment. Most have carefully prepared directions accompying them, telling him, in case he publishes the story, he may leave out the word "gracefully," in such a place, or omit line thirty-four on page 502, etc. He knows beforehand what the result will be. From all the chaff he will rarely be able to sift but one golden grain.

Our American stories lack an independent basis and standing of their own. There seems to be nothing, somehow, about which they can build up a substantial being. Whether the fault is in the country or in the writers, one can not say. Such stories as Americans essay usually are stiff and artificial, with no easy and natural movement about them. Two-thirds of them are imitations of Charles Dickens. They come in floods, especially about Christmas time. "Boz" never dreamed of the mischief he was working when he wrote, "Marley was dead to begin with—dead as a door-nail."

The worst faults of the American attempts at story-writing are two—first they are artificial, next they are crude. Those that do not pattern after Dickens go still further back. The favorite blood and thunder tales of certain well known weeklies are the exceedingly degenerate descendants of the tragedy and fiction of half a century ago. All are alike reproductions of something the writer has read before, feebly strained through a Yankee sieve. The fiction dabblers in this country who have made most money out of the business are those who have carried imagination beyond sea, and written about the loves and romances of high life in Europe, slung in lords and countesses by the omnibus load, when neither they nor their readers had ever seen a real Lord in their lives. Their literary style at times goes on stilts and at times falls into the vulgarest commonplace.

Advanced thinkers we have by the hundred thousand in the United States, enough to blow up the country. A gun could not be fired off at random without hitting one. But of men or women who can write a simple, unaffected, entertaining story three columns long, we have scarcely half a dozen. That, too, when our country is so big that, as we are fond of saying, the whole Empire of Austria could be lifted up and set down in a single State, Texas, and have room around the edges for a potatoe patch for the whole Nation.

It is certain we are enormous readers of novels. Why can we not write them?

We never have had a story-writer of the first-class in this country, scarcely indeed a clever writer of fiction of any sort.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Workingmen.

Before you begin your heavy spring work after a winter of relaxation, your system needs cleansing and strengthening to prevent an attack of Ague, Bilious or Spring Fever, or some other spring sickness that will unfit you for a season's work. You will save time, much sickness and great expense if you will use one bottle of Hop Bitters in your family this month.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

Wooden Boilers.

The almost incredible feat of making steam boilers of wood was accomplished seventy-six years ago in Philadelphia, where they were used to furnish steam to the pumps for pumping up the river water for the use of the city water-works. They, however, lasted only two years, when it became so difficult to keep them steam-tight that they were abandoned for iron boilers. How was it possible to heat water in wooden boilers? It was accomplished by having an iron fire-box twelve feet long, six feet wide, and two feet deep, placed inside a rectangular wooden chest, fourteen feet long and nine feet square, made of plank nearly half a foot thick, securely bolted together by iron rods passing through the planks. The iron fire-box had eight vertical flues of one foot in diameter, through which the water circulated, and around which the fire acted, and passed upward through an oval flue, first above the fire-box, carried from the back of the boiler to near the front and back again, when it passed out into the chimney. It was expected that these boilers would be very economical, on account of the non-conducting property of wood; and so they were to a certain extent, as the boilers did not need any protecting covering.

A Young Lady's "Testimonial."

A gushing young lady who purchased a bottle of Dr. Quacke's Health Bitters—none genuine unless the Doctor's name is blown on the wrapper—sent him the following testimonial:

"DEAR DOCTOR: I think your bitters are too awfully lovely! After taking half a bottle I could sleep until 9 o'clock in the morning, while ma was getting breakfast ready. My health is now too sweet for anything, and your delightful medicine is just too supremely nice," etc.—Norristown Herald.

Were it not for the occasional hot winds, and the character of the change that follows it, the climate of Melbourne would be absolutely delightful, for in winter the thermometer seldom registers less than 32 deg. Fahrenheit, and the summer heat (save on hot-wind days) ranges no higher than 80 deg. in the shade.

THE unprecedented demand for Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup has had the effect of bringing out numerous similar remedies; but the people are not so easily induced to make a trial of the new article when they value the old and reliable one.—Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

A Good Housewife.

The good housewife, when she is giving her house its spring renovating, should bear in mind that the dear inmates of her house are more precious than many houses, and that their systems need cleansing by purifying the blood, regulating the stomach and bowels to prevent and cure the diseases arising from spring malaria and miasma, and she must know that there is nothing that will do it so perfectly and surely as Hop Bitters, the purest and best of medicines.—Concord (N. H.) Patriot.

A Good Grindstone.

The American Builder thus sums up the qualities of a good grindstone: It should be strong, simple and clean; the trough expanded, to catch as much as possible of the drip-water and grit; a movable shield, securely hinged, to keep the water from splashing, and yet permit the stone to be used from either side; rests provided, upon which to rest tools and the rod for truing the stone, these rods being arranged to move toward the center as the stone wears smaller. The bearings should be generous in size, proper provision being made for oiling without washing the grit into the bearings with the oil, and the ends of the bearings being protected by some device which effectually prevents the entrance of the grit. The stone should be secured to the shaft by nuts and washers, and the washers fixed so that they cannot turn with the nuts as they are screwed up or unscrewed. In hanging the stone, great care should be taken to hang it true side-wise, not only for convenience in using, but because a stone that is not true sidewise can never be kept true edgewise.

Arming His Adversary.

James Brown was at a social dance given by Yellow Jacket Hose Company in the old Capitol saloon building, got drunk, and became noisy. Town Marshal Kennedy told him to keep still, or he would arrest him. Brown said: "If I was heeled you couldn't take me." Kennedy pulled his pistol out of his pocket and handed it to Brown, saying: "Now you're heeled, what are you going to do? You are afraid to shoot." Brown had scarcely taken the pistol in his hands before he fired, mortally wounding Kennedy.—Virginia (Nev.) Chronicle.

Diplomatic Dwellings in Washington.

A correspondent of the Baltimore Sun says: "Connecticut avenue seems to be the favorite location for residences for the diplomatic corps. A few years ago the British Government erected a magnificent building, containing about seventy apartments, for the use of its ambassador, on this avenue, at the intersection of N street. It is the only Government which owns its own legation building in Washington, but other Governments are contemplating following the example of Great Britain, and either purchasing or erecting buildings for their embassies. A number of other Governments have, however, rented buildings on Connecticut avenue for the use of their representatives. The Chinese Legation occupy the splendid mansion of ex-Governor Shepherd, on the corner of Connecticut avenue and K street. The Russian Minister occupies a residence just on the north. The French Legation are on one corner, and in the same block are the Austrian, Turkish, and Italian Legations."

DR. BITTLE, in a lecture to his metaphysics class, was once speaking of the shrewdness of children's replies, their perplexing questions, etc., and said to us: "You just try asking some child why the sun doesn't rise in the west." When opportunity favored, I tried the experiment. I said to a bright little girl: "Who made the sun?" "God." "Where did He make it rise?" "In the east." "Well, can you tell me why He didn't make it rise in the west?" "He wanted that place for it to set at," was the ready reply.

NEW YORK CITY is making the experiment of a mounted police. Over twenty men have been employed for several years, and with the most satisfactory results. The horses are trained to assist in catching runaway teams, overhauling thieves, and to carry their riders rapidly to the nearest station where a fire alarm is to be given. The service has proved so valuable that it is to be increased.

CAPTAIN BOYCOTT, the Irish landlord whose peculiar way of dealing with his tenants gave rise to the new expression, "boycotting," is now in this country for a few weeks. His fame has preceded him, and his fellow Irishmen in this country are contriving to make his stay as uncomfortable as possible. The proprietor of the hotel at which he stops has received threatening letters, and Boycott himself advised to leave the country. Just what good all this persecution is expected to accomplish, does not appear.

New Passenger Depot.

The new passenger depot of the Pittsburg Fort Wayne and Chicago road, at Chicago, was formally opened to business April 11. This magnificent structure is situated on Canal street, and extends from Van Buren to Madison streets, a distance of nearly three blocks. All passenger trains of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago railway now run to and from the general passenger depot, connecting without transfer with the great trunk lines leading from Chicago to all points in the west and northwest.

PERU, South America, is now enjoying a state of things bordering on anarchy. Since the occupation of the country by the Chilians the Peruvians, being unable to contend successfully against their enemies, have begun a crusade against the Chinese, and other foreign laborers in the country. These have been mercilessly assailed by mobs, beaten, driven from plantations where they were employed, and great numbers of them killed. The authorities are not in a condition to check these lawless proceedings, and the prospects are that these barbarous scenes will be kept up until the government is again put on a solid footing. And this is not likely to be while the Chilians occupy the country. The Chilians, to make matters worse, have levied a forced contribution on fifty of the wealthiest citizens. This is fixed at $20,000 each, and if not paid at a given date, their property will be destroyed.

Neighborhood Nippings.

The Pittsburg railroad will ballast their track with stone from Ft. Wayne to Van Wert, this summer.

The young people of Columbia City will build a summer resort on the banks of the Eel River, about three miles from that place.

Dr. A. P. Paul, of Milford, Indiana, died at that place of small pox April 8. There are several other cases in the vicinity of that place.

The Columbia City Post says about 800 emigrants passed through that place Monday afternoon, on the P., Ft. W. & C. railroad, west.

The Hicksville News says a woman went to a man in Hicksville a few days since and wanted to sell a bible, which had been given her, to get money to buy food. "Charity begins at home," and a little of the money sent abroad, could be put to good use at home.

Miss Savilla Kring has not been without success in her revival services in this place. Over twenty-one have been led to seek religion, and it is likely more will follow.—[Ibid.

Emma Sprow was drowned at Defiance last week. She was crossing the canal on the ice, and fell through, the ice being rotten. She was twenty years of age, and formerly resided at Sherwood.—[Ibid.

Great excitement prevails in Kentucky, over the finding of two nuggets of gold, said to be very fine specimens of the shining ore. If there is any truth in the report, Kentucky will soon be a bigger man than Ohio.

The safe of F.M. Welborne, of Princeton, in this state, was blown open one night last week, and about $5 000 taken. The money belonged to farmers who had deposited in the safe of Mr. Welborne for safe keeping.

J. H. Dapuy, of Wabash, has bought the second Presbyterian church at that place, and now advertises for a preacher. The applicant must be a democrat, be possessed of a good moral character, and will be paid a good salary.

During the freshet of the Coosa river near Rome, Ga., which inundated the farm of Frank Perry, the water receding brought to view an old battle field. Skeletons and parts of skeletons were strewn upon the field, and bones of every portion of the human frame. In addition, every variety of Indian beads were unearthed. The field was strewn with implements of war, used by the Aborigines, and here and there could be seen fortifications.

The Republican's Kansas City special, says that about four o'clock in the morning of April 7, a house standing on the bank of the Missouri river, near Parkville, occupied by a woman named Condell and three children, was swept into the stream by the current cutting into the bank. After floating down the river about seven miles, the house was discovered by two young hunters, named Burch and Fand, from Kansas City, who put out to it in a skiff, cut a hole in the roof, the only part of the building above water, rescued the terrified inmates and took them back to Parkville.

"Sold Again."

Last Saturday evening, on the corner of Main and Seventh streets, could be seen a backwoods fellow, from "Juice town," selling an article for turning brass into silver. He was about as much adapted to the business, as a bull-frog would be to perform the wonderful feat of climbing a greased pole. He talked incessantly for an hour, but couldn't make any one believe that his article was worth a quarter. He finally became fatigued, and knowing that his chores had to be done after he reached home, made one grand effort to get ten cents for a bottle, but the evening was chilly and the "suckers" wouldn't take hold. Lastly, he held out his precious preparation and begged that some one would take it for nothing. It was a hard matter to find any who had pocket room for it, but Gee Line, being of the more tender-hearted kind, relieved him of the bottle. The fellow made a short speech to the bystanders, which he wound up with an oath about two stories high, and then went in search of the marshal to have him refund his license money.

When Johnny came Marching home.

Johnny Fisher is not generally caught napping, but the boys came near getting ahead of him last Sunday. Johnny and his friends were in Auburn chatting gaily with some of her fairest daughters, when it suddenly occurred to him that a certain girl in Waterloo was just at that time pressing her lovely nose against the window pane in anxious anticipation of his coming. He pulled out his watch to remind the boys that it was getting late, but they scouted the idea. He spoke of the lowering aspect of the skies, but the boys didn't believe in rain so early in the season. The team pawed uneasily at the front gate, and they might break away if kept longer waiting, but all was in vain. The truth must be told, and the boys, all of whom remembered how it was themselves, finally started for home. And it is claimed, there was a happy household in Waterloo, "when Johnny came marching home."

Death of Mrs. A. P. Foltz.

Mrs. A. P. Foltz, wife of our county surveyor, living on Tenth street, in Ashley's addition, died very suddenly last Saturday evening. Her maiden name was Nancy J. Canon, and she was born in Leesville, Crawford county, Ohio, November 30, 1844, experienced a change of heart and united with the Lutheran church in 1859. May 6, 1866, she was married to Mr. Azam P. Foltz. In 1869 she united with the M. E. church of Auburn, in which faith she died at the age of thirty-six years, four months and nine days. Mrs. Foltz was an affectionate mother, a faithful, exemplary wife, a devoted christian, and by her amiable disposition won the affection of all with whom she came in contact. She has gone to meet her three children who went before her, and leaves a husband and two children to mourn her loss.

Couriers Wanted.

We have received the old papers advertised for last week, except December 23, of which issue we need several copies. Any one having COURIERS of this date, will confer a favor by letting us know.

—Col. Ef. Watson, the handy man at the Wabash elevators, has patented and placed before the public a superior article in the way of a lung tester. Quite a number of our citizens have tested the machine and pronounce it a perfect success. Among those whom it has assisted in prolonging life's journey are, our jolly Seventh street butcher W. L. Braun, Dave McNabb, Johnny Kneder, Tom Cool, Esq; Jack Ralston, Benj Shilling and a number of others whom space will not permit us to mention.

—Thieves entered the grocery establishment of Frank Hoff, on Seventh Street, Tuesday night and took away several boxes of cigars and other small articles. They gained an entrance by breaking open a window. One of the light fingered gents left his pipe, which, by the way, will be a good starting point for our detectives.

—Four young fellows from Waterloo, came down here Sunday and took possession of about all the girls there were in the city. They unloaded themselves at the residence of F. D. Ryan where they whiled away a few pleasant hours. If there are any parents in our neighboring town who have lost a child let them come hither.

—Our young friend, Frank Griswold has about closed a contract with Snyder Bros., of Angola, to sell buggies for them the coming summer. Frank is a good, trustworthy boy, with excellent habits and the above gentlemen could not employ a better hand, nor one who would work more for their interest than Frank.

—There is no small-pox in Syracuse, as has been reported, but near Milford, five miles from that place, there have been a large number of cases. One of the physicians there, Dr. Paul, has died of that disease, but at last accounts, it was believed that the disease was under control, and would not spread farther.

—Harper's weekly illustrated Frank Davenport's seal story last week. The only mistakes they made were that they located it up in the Alaska seas, instead of Michigan, and the men used clubs instead of umbrellas. The probabilities are that they will illustrate his rat story next week.

—Cooper Ralston has returned from New York, and looks as pleasant as a Presbyterian minister when his quarterly dues come in. Coop has purchased a nice stock and made his purchases so that the firm of McQuiston & Ralston will continue to be popular among the Auburn merchants.

—In a letter from George Picker, of Kansas, he asks, "Where is Moldy now?" Well, Moldy is stirring dough and washing oyster dishes at the popular bakery on Eight street. He has a record as a baker, and can handle ten dishes to Dinah's one, in the eating rooms.

—Doc. Dancer is back from the Buckeye state. The manager of Forepaugh's circus wanted him to act as a trapeze performer, and Doc. desired to drive the wagon in which the lions were enclosed. Both being of different opinions, they did not make a contract.

—W. W. Spangler, formerly of this place, but now librarian of the state university at Bloomington, will be the manager of a European trip this summer. Mr. Spangler has already made the continental tour, and is, therefore, competent to carry out his undertaking.

—The Odd Fellows of this place will celebrate the sixty-second anniversary of Odd Fellowship at their hall one week from next Tuesday. They will give a free entertainment, consisting of songs, speech, etc.

—Sam'l. McEntarfer, living near Waterloo, died of typhoid pneumonia Monday, April 11, 1881, aged 55 years. Deceased was one of the old settlers of the county. He was a man who was well thought of by all who knew him.

—We were a little off last week, in stating that D. D. Snyder was selling buggies. That is the only business we know of, however, that Dave isn't doing. His main point is hardware and agricultural implements.

—There is a family living on south Main street who have a patent rolling pin. Its a purp. The dough is placed near the stove and the rolling is performed in a scientific manner. Patent applied for.

Heaters.

In a recent number of the COURIER we called attention to the remarks made by the Steuben county papers in regard to the new heaters in their school rooms. Under the supposition that they were the same furnaces as those which had been in use in the Waterloo and Auburn school-houses, we took occasion to warn those interested against their use. Those used in Waterloo had failed to heat the rooms sufficiently, had smoked, and several times the building caught fire from them. Stoves were placed in the different rooms from time to time, until now the heaters are entirely abandoned. In Auburn the result was still more disastrous, as our fine school building was burned to the ground. The heaters in both cases were in the basement, and the heated air was conducted through tubes lying between the joists supporting the floors. Hence in case of strong heat the wood-work was almost certain to take fire.

There is, however, a heater now coming into use that we believe has better heating qualities, and at the same time perfect freedom from danger of fire. It is also a perfect ventilator. We were shown the plan recently by W. H. Keeran, of this county, and Daniel Winebrenner, of Wawaka. This arrangement consists in a stove heater, that is in the room to be heated, or where more than one room is warmed by one apparatus, it is in one of the rooms and always in plain sight. No hot air is carried in hidden tubes to start a secret fire. The cold, pure air is brought from outside, warmed by the heater, and by a peculiar arrangement is distributed throughout the room, and when it has become impure is taken out at a register and finally passing through the stove escapes from the room. It would seem that such a method of heating and ventilation would be desirable, and we call attention to it thus fully, in order that our school board, when a heater is needed, may be prepared to consider the merits and demerits of the different kinds. Besides the safety and healthfulness of this plan, it seems also to be the cheapest.

Granville Baldock Dead.

Last Friday night, Granville Baldock, aged 18 years, youngest son of Thomas and Mrs. Baldock, residing on the corner of Sixth and Cedar streets, died of brain fever. Granville was a very promising young man and all the qualities and attainments he possessed were of the best. He had not one fault to speak of and his sudden demise has cast a dark gloom over his many young associates. He was a member of the Auburn cornet band, in which he was greatly liked both for his politeness, kindness and excellent musical talent. The band played a funeral march from the church to the cemetery and a farewell piece at the grave. The ceremonies were solemn throughout and were listened to by a large concourse of people, many of whom were lamenting with tearful eyes and saddened hearts. It has been but a short time since the father and mother of this household were buried, each one being sick but a few days when death's cold hand o'erspread their brow. We sympathize with relatives and friends of the deceased.

Wonderful.

—One day last week as a Baltimore train came thundering into Garrett, a porcupine was seen sitting on the cow-catcher, winking at the trainmen as they passed to and fro. His majesty was full grown, and when Doc. Cowan spied it he fell in love with him immediately. Several parties wanted to lay claim on the "baste," but Doc. dived for his wallet and paid an enormous sum to secure him. He brought him to Auburn and placed it in Sim Tarney's menagerie, where at some future time he will be brought before the public at popular prices of admission. This firm purchased an owl Monday and will soon have a colossal collection of animals.

A Good Move.

We have heard it intimated that the property owners along Cedar Creek contemplate making a move toward straightening the channel and clearing out all the drift-wood and other obstructions. This would be one of the greatest improvements that could be made. It would be beneficial to the looks, the health, the roads, the bridges, the fences, the wealth, the crops; in fact everything except mosquitoes. Our columns are open for the discussion of this subject. We hope those directly interested will not delay the matter but go at it and take the necessary steps to get the improvement under way all along the line.

Entertainment.

The entertainment given by Miss Root and Mr. Williams last Thursday evening, was one of the best ever given in this part of the country. The singing was excellent, and showed a proficiency in the art that is attained by few. Mr. Williams has few equals in his chosen profession, elocution. His facial expressions are good, and his imitations unusually correct, and life-like. It is a great pity that we cannot know in advance what entertainments are worthy of patronage. Then we could save our time and money and receive full value for both, by attending only such as are first-class. Miss Root and her company certainly belong to the latter class.

GENERAL.

A FARMER living near Caseyville, Ill., has two dogs which he trained to chase Bible agents. The dogs set upon a nurseryman named Clucas, who was delivering trees to the farmer, and so worried him that he cannot live.... John Walters and Silas Williams, two youths of Unionville, Ohio, aged respectively 14 and 15, went out hunting and have not been heard from. It is thought that they perished in the snow-storm which followed their departure....Emigrants to the number of 20,000 left Bremen, Germany for this country since the 1st of January.... The Early-Storey libel suit has terminated, the jury finding for the plaintiff, and assessing damages at $500....Gustav Reichfus, a wealthy bachelor, living near Monroe, Ohio, has been assassinated....John Bodkin, an Irish landlord now in Toronto, who is fully seven feet high, says he left Ireland because he was too big a mark for bullets.

THE Rev. Dr. Philip Schaff, who was one of the American Committee on the Revision of the New Testament, said to a New York reporter, the other day, on this subject: The changes are so many that scarcely a verse in the New Testament remains unaltered. We have worked between two fires—the Radicals wanting far more sweeping changes than we would sanction, and the other party rolling their eyes in horror when a comma was transposed or a small letter replaced by a capital. The controversy will probably go on for a few years. The New Testament will be sold in England, Scotland, Ireland, Australia and the United States on the 20th of next May. The stories that large numbers of books are now in this country under lock and key are false, the revisers only having received copies. Only subscribers will receive copies at first, and the price to the public will be $10. It is understood that, within forty-eight hours of the appearance of the English copies upon the market, reprints will appear from six New York publishers, the price of some of the editions to be as low as 15 cents.

KENWARD PHILP called on the President, together with his counsel, and had a conversation on the subject of the Morey letter. After his interview, Mr. Philp said the District Attorney of New York had notified his counsel that it was the intention to drop the prosecution of him. Immediately thereafter Mr. Philp says he will commence suit for false imprisonment against the District Attorney, and for malicious prosecution against George H. Bliss.

FRANCOIS CHARON, a Frenchman of Kingston, Canada, being impressed with the fact that he had made too much use of his tongue, cut off a portion. He said that he had talked too much and was getting himself into trouble.

THE United States Supreme Court has reversed the decision of the Supreme Court of Utah, which found Miles, the Mormon, guilty of bigamy. The latter tribunal made an error in admitting the testimony of Miles' second wife in relation to his first marriage, whereas a Utah law bars a wife from testifying against her husband, or a husband against his wife. Nearly all authorities agree that, so long as the fact of the first marriage is contested, the second wife cannot be admitted to prove it. The case is remanded for a new trial.

THE National Telephone Exchange Association was in session at Chicago last week. Some improved mechanical appliances were exhibited and explained, and some reports were read.

THE fourteenth annual reunion of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee was held in Cincinnati. Gen. Sherman read an interesting sketch of the battle of Pittsburg Landing, illustrated by maps and charts. The principal oration was delivered by Col. Osro J. Dodds. An impressive ceremony, in which the society took part, was the unveiling of the statue of Gen. McPherson. The flag which covered it was removed by Gen. Sherman, the band meanwhile playing a dirge. Not a word was spoken. One important feature of the reunion was the singing, which was grand beyond description....The Trappists expelled from Algiers, France, have been assigned 700 acres of land at Oka, Canada, where they will open an agricultural college....The Catholic college at Rimouski, Quebec, valued at $60,000, has been burned.

FLAMES destroyed the grain-drill factory of S. B. Hart & Co., at Peoria, valued at $60,000, and the car-shops of the Lackawanna road, at Dover, N. J., the loss being $75,000. ....The Society of the Army of the Tennessee at its session in Cincinnati elected the following officers: President, Gen. Sherman; Recording Secretary, Col. M. L. Dayton; Corresponding Secretary, Gen. Hickenlooper; Treasurer, Gen. M. F. Force. The next meeting will be held at St. Louis May 10 and 12, 1882.

THE resignation of Andrew D. White, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Berlin, has been in the hands of the President for some time, coupled with a request that his successor be nominated at an early day....There is a movement on foot to effect the removal of Public Printer Defrees, which is being pushed by persons lately removed from his office. It is charged that he has given preference to Democrats over Republicans, and that there are more of the former holding places under him than of the latter.... A Washington dispatch says the Voorhees-Mahone difficulty is virtually ended. Voorhees says he intends to treat any message from Mahone, whether it be a challenge or otherwise, with contempt.... The President and his family expect to stay at the Soldiers' Home during the summer, in the house formerly occupied by President Lincoln during the war.

THE attention of Secretary Blaine having been called to the case of Mr. M. P. Boyton, an American citizen now in jail in Ireland, Mr. Blaine has stated that the matter is being attended to, and that the State Department will promptly perform its duty in the matter.

SECRETARY WINDOM, after spending several days in New York, consulting with the leading bankers and financiers of that city, returned to Washington on the 4th inst. A dispatch from the capital states while the conferences resulted in nothing of a definite character, Secretary Windom received a great deal of financial information and many important suggestions in regard to refunding.

AT the Cabinet meeting, on the 5th inst., Secretary Windom and Attorney General MacVeagh gave incidents connected with their conference with New York financiers. A Washington telegram of that date says it is probable that new bonds to the amount of $104,000,000, bearing 4½ per cent. interest, will be sold at the market price. The matured 5 and 6 per cents. will doubtless be allowed to stand out at 3½ per cent., subject to the call of the treasury.

REV. CHARLES J. RAMSDELL, a Presbyterian pastor at Washington, has been arraigned by the Presbytery for marrying a Catholic lady. The ceremony was performed in Chicago by Rev. Dr. Patton.

AN order has been issued by Postmaster General James, to take effect the 1st of May, which will reorganize the entire railway mail-service. All employes doing the same work are placed upon an equality as regards salary. All appointments of employes and local mail agents will be for a probationary period of six months, and at a salary not exceeding $900 per annum. If at the expiration of six months such employes' records are satisfactory, the appointments will be made permanent.

FOREIGN.

MR. ROWELL, who was recently elected to the English Parliament from Wigan, a Lancashire borough, has been unseated for bribery and corruption....There will be a meeting of the Emperors of Austria, Germany and Russia at Ems the coming summer.... Three professors at Jassy, in Roumania, have been suspended because they are suspected of Nihilistic tendencies....France is sending troops to Algiers, ostensibly to protect French subjects from marauding bands. There are some who think that France has designs on Tunis.

TWELVE Baronies in the County Cork have been proclaimed in a state of disturbance.....An affray has occurred between the people and the police, who were protecting a process-server on an estate near Ballaghaderin, County Mayo, Ireland. Two men were killed and several wounded.....Col. Flatters' party, who went from Paris to survey for the Trans-Sahara railway, has been about annihilated by the natives. One squad of twenty-nine was destroyed by poisoned dates..... There have been severe floods and gales on the Spanish coast of the Mediterranean and considerable destruction to property in Andalusia. ....In Russian Poland the peasants refuse to swear allegiance in the Greek churches. They demand to be sworn before Catholic priests, and have driven away the Greek priests. The Governor of the province declares they must take the oath in the Russian churches..... The prosecution of the Freiheit in London is unpopular. Nobody expects the conviction of Most. Moreover, the language of the Irish World and other Irish papers openly incites to sedition and rebellion, yet they go scot-free .... A military cordon surrounds St. Petersburg. Nobody is allowed to enter or leave the city.... The Minister of Roumania to Russia and the commandant of the fortress died of a cold caught at the burial of the Czar.

A WAR of races has broken out in the valley of Canete, one of the most fertile provinces in Peru. More than 2,000 Chinamen have been murdered by negroes, and Cholos, and cane fields, sugar houses, machinery and other property, to the value of millions, destroyed. The work of murder and plunder is still going on, and all foreigners have fled the valley. It is feared that similar scenes will be enacted throughout Peru.... The British budget shows an expenditure for the past year of £83,108,000. Gladstone proposes that £60,000,000 of the national debt be paid in the next quarter century....Scio, one of the most beautiful islands of the Levant, was shaken to its center by an earthquake, the shock of which was felt at Tinos and other islands. It is estimated that 3,000 persons were killed or injured.... Prince Carolath, of Germany, has obtained a divorce from his wife, who eloped recently with Count Hubert Bismarck. It is said that the lady will soon be married to the Count.... England, Italy and Turkey have recognized the Kingdom of Roumania....Three French regiments in Algeria are on the way to the frontier....Mrs. B. H. Buxton, the English authoress, is dead.

A CONSTANTINOPLE dispatch says: "The latest accounts from Scio estimate the number of victims at 5,000. All the foreign men-of-war at Smyrna have started for Scio. Gen. Longstreet, United States Minister, has ordered the corvette Galena to proceed thither with succor for the sufferers. Thirty villages were destroyed. Forty thousand people are destitute. Castro, the chief town of Scio, is almost in ruins. Four hundred corpses have already been found. The Porte is taking measures to alleviate the sufferings of the destitute inhabitants."... It has been decided that if Bradlaugh be re-elected to Parliament, a motion will be made from the Conservative side to prohibit him from taking the oath of office, as no Christian oath is binding upon the conscience of an atheist....All sections of the Irish Nationalists and English Democrats are organizing a movement in London to agitate for the unconditional release of Davitt....It is proposed by France to establish a protectorate over Tunis, leaving the Bey, however, all authority over his Mussulman subjects.

THE Custom House authorities in London have been warned that an attempt will soon be made to blow up that building.... Twelve policemen in Ireland were escorting a process-server at Ballinamore, when twenty women attacked them with sticks and stones. One girl was fatally shot and another wounded, while several officers were seriously injured.... Mr. Mason, the United States Consul at Basle, who has investigated the circumstances which led to the trichina scare in France and Switzerland, has communicated to Secretary Blaine the result of his investigations. He finds that the ostensible occasion for the agitation was the outbreak of trichinosis in a French family, at first supposed to have eaten American pork, but which had only partaken of the flesh of a recently-killed French hog. The pork found infected with trichinæ in France, and which was reported to be American pork, was really pork imported from Germany, where the disease first originated. Mr. Mason states that there has not been a single instance of any person having suffered in health from the use of American hams or pork, that this fact is fully recognized by dealers in Great Britain, Belgium and Switzerland, and that the danger from trichinosis arises from the use of fresh, uncured and uncooked pork.

THE Irish Land bill was introduced in the British House of Commons by Mr. Gladstone on the 7th inst. It provides that a tenant may sell the interest in his holding, subject to the reasonable veto of the landlord; that rents shall be fixed by a Land Court, wherever the landlord and tenant cannot agree, but the court will not interfere in cases where they do agree. This court will also have to determine on the landlord's right of veto on the assignment of interest on a farm. Power to contract out of the act is given where the rental exceeds $1,000 per annum. The Land Court will consist of one Judge or ex-Judge of the Irish courts and two persons having practical knowledge of the relations between landlords and tenants. Sub-courts may be established by the central court. The bill also empowers this Land Court to buy estates which landlords are willing to sell, and resell them to the tenants, the title in the lands to be vested in the court, so as to guarantee payment, and to prevent subdivision. Advances will also be made to owners, tenants and solvent companies for the reclaiming of waste lands, or other agricultural improvements, the advance not to be greater than the amount to be laid out by the tenant, landlord or company to which it is advanced. Advances will also be made to assist emigration. Mr. Gladstone spoke several hours in explanation of the provisions of the bill. He said the desire of the Government was to do justice to the Irish people, to give them laws which would enable them to live and thrive upon the land, to help them to purchase farms, or assist them, if they preferred, to emigrate. Mr. Parnell regretted that provision was not made for colonizing Irish farmers upon lands to be purchased for the purpose..... There is a great deal of lawlessness in Havana, Cuba. Cutthroats and thieves wander without restraint through the city at night, and the lives and property of honest people are endangered. The British Consul was recently attacked and nearly killed....A Constantinople dispatch of the 8th inst. says: "Shocks of earthquake continue in Scio, and are fast completing the general ruin. In Kastro, which contained nearly 4,000 inhabitants, only 150 are known to be alive."..... The Greek Patriarch at Constantinople telegraphs the Greek Committee in Liverpool as follows: "The news from Scio is heartrending. The catastrophe surpasses all belief. I implore you to form committees to receive subscriptions in aid of the sufferers. The need is urgent."..... The Grand Duke Nicholas Constantinovitch, whose connection with the diamond robbery made him notorious, is imprisoned in a castle near St. Petersburg, on suspicion of being concerned in an intrigue in favor of his father, the Grand Duke Constantine, brother of the late Czar..... England is not disposed to consider the principle of bimetallism, and will therefore send no representative to the international monetary conference....The Duke of Argyle has resigned the office of Lord Privy Seal owing to a difference of opinion with his colleagues on some of the provisions of the Land bill.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

There was a strong flavor of the sensational in the Senate proceedings on Friday, April 1. The debate was made up of a series of personal encounters. Lamar, of Mississippi, for the first time in many months, made a speech. He was very weak and spoke with evident effort, and at the end of an hour was utterly exhausted. Hoar, of Massachusetts, replied to him, and George, the new Senator from Mississippi, spoke of politics in that State, and was answered by Dawes. Hill of Georgia, Logan and Butler took part in the discussion. An angry altercation between Voorhees of Indiana and Mahone of Virginia capped the climax, and brought the proceedings to a close. Voorhees adopted the language of a quasi Republican paper, and applied the epithet "renegade Democrat" to Mahone, and accused him of being a party to a disgraceful bargain. Mahone replied that no brave and honorable man would make use of such language. Both spoke of settling the difficulty "hereafter," which led to rumors of a coming duel. The President nominated John E. Clements, of Louisiana, to be United States Consul, at Guatemala.

The usual kind of debate took place in the Senate on Monday, the 4th inst. Several Southern Senators, including Johnston, of Virginia, defended their respective States. Finally, on motion of Mr. Dawes, the Senate adjourned. The Republican Senators in caucus resolved to persist in their efforts to elect Senate officers, and the members of the committee which is to escort the remains of Senator Carpenter to Wisconsin were requested to arrange for pairs.

The Senate passed one day more in talk, on Tuesday, the 5th, and adjourned without doing anything. Senator McPherson wanted to introduce a petition in reference to Boyton, the Irish Land Leaguer, and Mr. Hoar objected. Mr. McPherson then made a speech in reference to the matter. It was noticeable that both Bayard and Sherman took part in the day's debate. The President nominated the following Postmasters: Thomas E. Shephard, Mechanicsburg, Ohio; Edwin S. Hubbard, Richwood, Ohio; M. E. Taggart, Leetonia, Ohio; George E. Wood, Mitchell, Ind.; Benjamin W. Sholty, Decatur, Ind.; Selden M. Bronson, Menasha, Wis.; Henry Elmer Botsford, Otsego, Mich.; James France, Rawlins, W. T.; W. W. Holden, Raleigh, N. C.; Thomas H. Prince, Gallatin, Tenn.

Senators Sherman and Bayard were the principal speakers on Wednesday, April 6. There was no immediate prospect of a break in the deadlock. President Garfield said to some gentlemen visitors that, while he thought it was the duty of the Republican Senators to persist in their attempt to elect Senate officers for a time at least, if Senator Mahone thinks it necessary for his protection, at the same time he thinks that the Senate should take action on the nominations sent in at an early day. The President nominated Hiram Price, of Iowa, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, vice Thomas M. Nichol, whose nomination was withdrawn at his own request. Also [illegible] Blythe, to be United States Marshal of South Carolina, and the following to be United States attorneys: Samuel W. Melton, for South Carolina; George M. Duskin, for the Southern district of Alabama. To be Receivers of Public Moneys: James M. Whiteman, Marquette, Mich.; John M. Farland, Detroit, Mich.; John Lynn, Tracy, Minn. To be Registers of the Land Office: John F. Owens, Taylor's Falls, Minn.; Charles E. Tyler, Tracy, Minn.

Nothing new is to be reported of the Senate on Thursday, April 7, the usual speeches, interspersed with roll calls, being continued. Senators Vance, Ransom, Call, Dawes and Hoar were the principal speakers. An adjournment was taken to Monday. The President nominated the following Postmasters: Arthur L. Sanborn, Anderson, Iowa; Rohan S. Loomis, Preston, Minn.; John C. Dickey, Waterville, Kan.; George W. Doty, Burlingame, Kan.; William N. Taft, Charleston, S. C.; John Nichols, Raleigh, N. C.

Successful Books.

Books which are immediately successful are those which catch and reflect the passing tones of opinion—all-absorbing while they last, but from their nature, subject to change. The mass of men know little other times or other ways of thinking than their own. Their minds are formed by the conditions of the present hour. Their greatest man is he who for the moment expresses most completely their own sentiments, and represents human life to them from their own point of view. The point of view shifts, conditions alter, fashions succeed fashions, and opinions; and having ourselves lost the clue, we read the writings which delighted our great-grandfathers with wonder at their taste. Each generation produces its own prophets, and great contemporary fame, except in a few extraordinary instances, is revenged by an undeserved completeness of neglect. Very different in general is the reception of the works of true genius. A few persons appreciate them from the first. To the many they seem flavorless and colorless, deficient in all the qualities which for the moment are most admired. They pass unnoticed amid the meteors by which they are surrounded and eclipsed. But the meteors pass and they remain, and are seen gradually to be no vanishing coruscations, but new fixed stars, sources of genuine light, shining serenely forever in the intellectual sky. They link the ages one to another in a common humanity. Virgil and Horace lived nearly two thousand years ago, and belonged to a society of which the outward form and fashion have utterly perished. But Virgil and Horace do not grow old, because while society changes men continue, and we recognize in reading them that the same heart beat under the toga which we feel in our own breasts. In the Roman Empire, too, there were contemporary popularities; men who were worshiped as gods, whose lightest word was treasured as a precious jewel—on whose breath millions hung expectant, who had temples built in their honor, who in their day were a power in the world. These are gone, while Horace remains—gone, dwindled into shadows. They were men, perhaps, of real worth, though of less than their admirers supposed, and they are now laughed at and moralized over in history as detected idols. As it was then, so it is now, and always will be. More copies of "Pickwick" were sold in five years than of "Hamlet" in two hundred. Yet "Hamlet" will last as long as the "Iliad;" "Pickwick," delightful as it is to us, will be unreadable to our great-grandchildren. The most genial caricature ceases to interest when the thing caricatured has ceased to be.—James Anthony Froude, in Good Words.

The Vote for President.

The New York Spirit of the Times has been appealed to to settle numerous election bets, which it has been unable to do up to this time, owing to discrepancies in the various political almanacs. For that reason, as the paper says in its last issue, "we determined to address the several Secretaries of State ourselves and publish a correct table when the full returns were received. These we have now. As the only just method of ascertaining the vote or plurality in a State in a Presidential election, we have in all cases used the highest vote in that State for either the Republican or Democratic elector. In Virginia the Funder and Readjuster vote is added together, and in Maine the Fusion vote is credited to Hancock." The complete table is as follows:

Putting Up the Champagne.

A company of New Haven gentlemen met at a fashionable restaurant in that city, and sat in groups about the small dining-room of the establishment, while the ladies who accompanied them were removing their wraps in a dressing-room. A wealthy New York merchant was taking supper in the same room, fell into conversation with them, and, wishing to express the pleasure he took in the company, quietly gave an order to a waiter to furnish all with champagne at his expense. The wine was brought in on trays, but declined by all present. The New Yorker rose to explain, and asked all to join him in a glass of wine. Gov. Bigelow, who was one of the party, rose in return and thanked him for the courtesy, but said the gentlemen present had come to celebrate the anniversary of the founding of a total abstinence society. The New Yorker "wilted," but drank himself to the health and principles of the assembly.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

POISON from bees, hornets, spider-bites, etc., is instantly arrested by the application of equal parts of common salt and bicarbonate of soda, well rubbed in on the place bitten or stung.

A STANDING antidote for poison by dew, poison oak, ivy, etc., is to take a handful of quicklime, dissolve in water, let it stand half an hour, then paint the poisoned parts with it. Three or four applications will never fail to cure the most aggravated cases.

THE food of the eye is light, as air is for the lungs, bread for the stomach, and as the fins of the fish pre-suppose water. To shut ourselves up in dark rooms, with or without weak light, is simply suicidal. Weak eyes, indeed, are the accompaniment of dark rooms, stained glass and gas.—Dr. J. H. Hanaford.

REST FOR HEADACHES.—Dr. Day says, in a late lecture: "Whatever be the plan of treatment decided upon, rest is the first principle to inculcate in every severe headache. Rest, which the busy man and anxious mother cannot obtain so long as they can manage to keep about, is one of the first remedies for every headache, and we should never cease to enforce it. The brain when excited as much needs quiet and repose as a fractured limb or an inflamed eye; it is obvious that the chances of shortening the seizure and arresting the pain will depend on our power to have this carried out effectually. It is a practical lesson to keep steadily in view, in that there may lurk behind a simple headache some lesion of unknown magnitude which may remain stationary if quietude can be maintained. There is a point worth attending to in the treatment of all headaches. See that the head is elevated at night and the pillow hard, for if it be soft the head sinks into it and becomes hot, which with some people is enough to provoke an attack in the morning, if sleep has been long and heavy."

SLEEP FOR CHILDREN.—If you would preserve your children from wasting diseases, do not stint them in their sleep; chlorotic girls, especially, and weakly babies need all the rest they can get. If they are drowsy in the morning, let them sleep; it will do them more good than stimulants and tonic sirups. For school children in their teens, eight hours of quiet sleep is generally enough, but do not restrict them to fixed hours; in mid-summer there should be a siesta-corner in every house, a lounge or an old mattress in the coolest nook of the hall, or a hammock in the shade of the porch, where the little ones can pass the sleep-inviting afternoons. Nor is it necessary to send them to bed at the very time when all nature awakens from the torpid influence of the day-star; sleep in the atmosphere of a stifling bedroom would bring no rest and no pleasant dreams. But an hour after sunset there will be a change; the night wind arises and the fainting land revives; cool air is a febrifuge and nature's remedy for the dyspeptic influences of a sultry day. Open every window, and let your children share the luxury of the last evening hour; after breathing the fresh night air for a while, they will sleep in peace. —Popular Science Monthly.

Why We Ask People to Dinner.

In asking people to dinner you should put to yourself the question, "Why do I ask them?" and unless the answer be satisfactory they are not likely to contribute much to the agreeability and sociality of the entertainment. They may be ornamental; it may be necessary, in a give-and-take sense, to have them in return for a dinner already long received and digested; but unless they are sensible, social, unaffected and clever men, they are not likely to contribute much to the hilarity of the entertainment. You may ask a man because he talks brilliantly and eloquently; because he is a distinguished artists, author or orator; or because he is a "jolly good fellow." But do not ask any, however much above the average, who is a pig, who is pretentious, who is disputatious or who has not the feelings, habits, manners and education of a gentlemen. The presence of men of this stamp is destructive of good fellowship. They are social pets.—Gastronomist.

DEMOCRACY.

The Old Name, the Old Flag and the Principles of Jefferson, Jackson and Tilden—A Tariff for Revenue—Views of Representative Democrats.

The Chicago Times, in a recent issue, contained a report of interviews with hundreds of representative Democrats throughout the Northwest, suggested in the following interrogatories:

1. Are you in favor of making the next Presidential canvass on the issue of a "tariff for revenue only?"

2. Do you believe it worth while, after the defeat of last November, to longer maintain the Democratic organization?

3. Would you favor a reorganization under another name, as the Whig party was reorganized into the Republican party after the defeat of Scott in 1852—making a revenue tariff and no "protection" the chief article of the new party's political faith?

The result of these interviews, the Times frankly admits, is not encouraging to those people who have been looking forward to the early disintegration of the great Democratic party. It says: "The current of opinion sets strongly against the disintegration of the party, and scarcely the faintest echo of the wail of despair that went up when Hancock's defeat was announced is now heard."

We present below the views of a few of the prominent Democrats interviewed by the Times' correspondents:

Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana: I will say that unless there is a satisfactory reform in the tariff laws before the next Presidential canvass that subject ought to be, and will be, an issue. As against a prohibitory, or exclusively-protective tariff, or any other that imposes unjust burdens upon the great mass of the people who are consumers of articles imported, the Democratic party, I have no doubt, will favor a tariff for revenue that will, while looking to revenue as the principal object, wisely discriminate on the incidental protection afforded by the raising of such revenue, so as to best foster and encourage American industries without being unjust or oppressive to any class, and especially that large class of producers of wealth who are the least able to pay. It is not likely, however, that tariff reform will be the only issue in the next canvass. I know of no good reason why the Democratic organization should be abandoned. If its principles are right, the organization should be maintained as zealously in defeat as success, and the party has repeatedly been in a worse condition than it is to-day. It is in a far better condition than it was forty years ago, since which time it has administered the Government through several Presidential terms, during which a great war was successfully prosecuted in a foreign land and a vast territory acquired, of incalculable value to this country for all time to come. It has preserved its organization through the strain and wreck of three great wars; it has maintained it notwithstanding the whole power and patronage of the General Government has been continuously against it for over twenty years, and yet in the last two Presidential elections it had the support of a majority of the American people. A party of the constitution, founded on the principles of Jefferson, with one-half the States and one-half the people on its side, is not likely either to die or disband. It is much more likely to again come in possession of the Government, as it did in 1844, after the disastrous defeat of 1840. It is only a question of time. There is no necessity for a reorganization of the party, but I see no objection to making such a reform in the tariff as I have indicated a leading article of faith, as it has been, in fact, heretofore.

Ex-Senator Joseph E. McDonald, of Indiana: I favor a tariff for revenue only and not for protection, but the canvass must have other issues. It would be folly to abandon a party casting a plurality of all the votes, and therefore the Democratic organization should be maintained. There is no necessity of a reorganization as suggested.

Hon. Frank Landers, of Indiana: It is hardly possible to make a canvass on "a tariff-for-revenue-only" platform, for the reason that there may be a few interests that need and should have protection. Certainly a canvass should not be made upon that issue alone. The present organization must be kept up. I would not favor a new party. In my judgment the tariff question will become an important question in the next campaign, for it is one of vital interest to the country, so vital, in fact, that in time governments most interested will be compelled to agree to a mutual adjustment of the tariff, so that all will share alike in its advantages.

Hon. John H. Oberly, of Illinois: I believe in the maintenance of the Democratic organization. I believe that the Democratic party is the advocate and defender of certain political principles the success of which is necessary to the continued maintenance of our form of government. Even in defeat the Democratic party has compelled the Republicans to pay a certain degree of respect to these principles. Abandon the principles of the Democratic party and the republic will fall. I would rather be defeated year after year all my life, as a Democrat, than succeed and enjoy the flesh-pots of place as a Republican. I am opposed to protection and in favor of a tariff for revenue only, but I don't know that this will be the issue of the next Presidential canvass, and I don't know that I am in favor of making the issue you speak of the issue of that canvass. I am in favor of making an issue with the Republican party, in the next canvass for the Presidency, on that matter of political concern which at the time will be forced by public opinion and a general demand of the citizens upon the attention of political parties. I am opposed to a reorganization under another name, because such a reorganization would not deceive the public. A party called the Reform party, or the Liberal party, or the People's party, advocating a tariff for revenue only, and no protection, would be recognized by everybody as the Democratic party attempting to disguise itself under a new name. If "a tariff for revenue only, and no protection," can be and is made the one sole issue of the next Presidential campaign, I shall, acting as a Democrat, stand by and support the party which holds the affirmative of that issue, by whatever name that party may be called, against the party maintaining the negative of that issue, by whatever name it may be called.

Ex-Congressman Samuel S. Marshall, of Illinois: It is too soon to determine issues for 1884. There is no authority in the constitution for levying taxes for any purpose other than for revenue. A tariff for protection or prohibition is absolutely without constitutional authority, and in violation of every principle of a sound political economy. I am, therefore, for making "a tariff for revenue only" a prominent issue in every political contest. I believe it worth while to maintain the Democratic organization. That party now holds in its ranks a larger popular vote than any other party that exists, or ever has existed; and, if we consider only that race which must ever be the ruling race on this continent, the Democratic party has a plurality of 1,000,000 votes to-day. It seems to me preposterous to talk of disbanding such a party, or to doubt its ultimate success.

Hon. M. V. Montgomery, of Michigan: I am in favor of the success of that political party which advocates a "tariff for revenue only," and opposes a "tariff for protection." It seems to me that the time has come when this question should be made one of the leading political issues. The Democratic party is a strong and powerful one. If it were manifest that a new organization were ready to be perfected which promised to reform the tariff laws so that a "tariff for revenue only" could be secured, and the centralization tendency of the General Government successfully opposed, I certainly should favor it. But until something tangible in that direction is promised, I cannot declare myself in favor of surrendering our organization.

Hon. O. M. Barnes, of Michigan: I think the revenue tariff inevitable. A majority of Republican journals advocate a high protective tariff. The Democratic party is committed to "tariff for revenue only." I see no justification for taxing imports any more than anything else but the need of revenue. The tariff should be adjusted for revenue, and be as low as possible. I am not in favor of abandoning the Democratic organization, and do not deem it in any way necessary to do so in order to make the issue referred to, as the Democratic party is already committed to a "tariff for revenue only," favors the greatest freedom of trade, and opposes tariff monopolies. It should be maintained because of this. It has in it more voters than any other party in the nation, who should be rallied to the support of this platform in 1884.

Hon. Charles S. May, of Michigan: I would make the next Presidential battle for a tariff for revenue only—as near free-trade as practicable and possible, but I would make it against rings, monopolies and corruptions generally, and for civil-service reform also. Two weeks before the October elections last fall the Republicans were beaten; then they raised the tariff cry, alarmed the business men, collected a vast corruption fund, and went into the market for votes. Now I would give them enough of the "tariff" and "protection" cry. They are on the wrong side of this issue—the unpopular side, and the people can be made to see it in the end.

Hon. H. M. Martin, of Iowa, one of the most prominent Democrats in the State, and an able lawyer, is in favor of having a revenue-tariff plank in the next national platform, but he does not think that the only issue upon which to make the campaign. He favors a reorganization under another name, if need be, and on a plan that will unite the Liberal Republicans and the Democrats, or bring the best elements of all parties together, with civil-service reform, economy in national expenditures, a suitable tariff and patriotic devotion to the best interests of the country in view. A large number of other leading Iowa Democrats were interviewed, and expressed similar sentiments.

Gen. H. H. Sibley, of Minnesota, the acknowledged "father of his party" in the State, and a man whose age, ability and experience entitle him to that rank, says: I am in favor of making the next Presidential canvass on the issue of a "tariff for revenue only," with the additional issue of a sweeping change in the navigation laws, which will encourage our citizens to compete with foreign nations for the carrying trade of the world on equal terms. I am strongly in favor of maintaining the Democratic name and organization intact. The results of the two last Presidential elections have demonstrated conclusively that there are more Democratic voters than Republican in the Union, and that if in the future the old and time-honored Democratic party will confine itself to living issues, and not encumber its platform with traditions of the dead past, there is no reason to doubt, under competent leadership, that it will triumph in 1884.

Hon. Edmund Rice, Democratic candidate for Governor of Minnesota in 1879: A tariff for protection is vicious in principle. The consumers, who are many, needlessly pay a heavy extra tax ingeniously disguised to enrich the manufacturers, who are few. It is unjust to the many. It financially debauches the few, and deludes and misleads them. It degrades politics and legislation. If it was made equally applicable to all the productions of labor, every one would be on stilts, and one as tall as another, and so "protection would fail to protect," as in some instances it does now. There is nothing in the defeat of last November to discourage Democrats numerically; it was nearly a drawn battle. No party could be found that would take the place of that party. It has accomplished a vast amount of good, and prevented much evil while in control of the lower house since 1874. The safety of the country depends upon its continued existence. Whether in or out of power, it has been and is to be the hope and refuge of the people. It is the only party that has ever existed in this country that has at all times defended the integrity of the constitution. Many of its leaders have erred and blundered, and will again. Many of its followers have gone astray, and it has been afflicted with leaders sound on many, but not on, all its cardinal principles; but time will, it is hoped, correct these evils. I favor a square fight by the Democratic party against a tariff for protection, per se, and for revenue only, and for free ships, and for the least possible restriction upon the sale of all commodities, whether produced in this country or any other, and I think I will not vote with any party that favors the opposite.

Judge Hoadley, of Ohio: I am in favor of "a tariff for revenue only," as is well known by my friends; but there are other measures also of national importance which I regard as of perhaps more immediate consequence than the tariff question. We have an immense debt still, which must be reduced, and free trade should be brought about gradually so as not to impede too much the reduction of this debt. If there were no national debt the tariff question would be the most immediate and pressing necessity of the day. I consider the readjusting of the tariff so as to make it less burdensome an important step for the American legislators to take. Congress has no power under the constitution to tax one man for another. So I think the issue as aptly expressed in the Watterson plank, "tariff for revenue only," will always be a good one for the party to stand on. I am opposed to the dissolution of the Democratic party. We were defeated by a profuse use of money in Indiana, and by that alone. Twelve thousand more votes in New York would have elected Hancock as it was. The Democratic party has always stood up for the rights of the people, for the laborer as against the oppression of the monopolist. Such a party will always be necessary. If the Democratic party is to end I see no end of usurpation—of the oppression of the poor by the rich. The Democratic party is the champion of equal rights. In my opinion, its only sin was committed when it went astray on the slavery question. That is now past, however, and slavery has ceased to be an issue. Some one has said he was in favor of abandoning capital punishment just so soon as the murderers would abolish murder. As soon as the Republicans give up the attempt to alienate the sections of this country by arraying race against race; to enrich the poor by protecting taxation and bank legislation; to enforce sumptuary and Sabbitarian legislation; as soon as it gives up the idea that the people were made for the party, and not the party for the people, then I'll be in favor of abandoning the Democratic party. I am in favor of the old name, the old flag, appropriation or no appropriation, and the principles of Jefferson, Jackson and Tilden.

Judge Wakely, one of the leading lawyers of Nebraska: I am for making the lowest possible tariff for revenue a prominent issue in the next Presidential election, but, unless the Republican party reforms more rapidly than I have any expectation of, this should by no means be the only issue. As the Presidency was stolen from the Democrats in 1876 and Hancock got a larger popular vote in 1880 than Garfield, and would have been triumphantly elected but for Indiana mistakes, I am not for striking the Democratic flag now. Furthermore, the old name is good enough for me, but I have no serious objection to taking another if any good reason for it is developed.

Judge James A. Mallory, who was the Democratic candidate for Governor of Wisconsin three years ago, and who has long been looked upon as one of the leading exponents of Democratic principles in the State, declared himself heartily in favor of giving all possible prominence to the free-trade issue in the next Presidential campaign. He could see no reason why the party should reorganize on any different basis. He believed the issues between the two great parties now are the same as in 1844, and he wanted to see the Democratic party make a bold stand against the national-banking system, the monopolies, and for a tariff for revenue only, and not be led to temporize.

Hon. James G. Jenkins, of Wisconsin, who led the party in the campaign of 1879 for Governor, thinks it too early to decide upon what leading issue the next Presidential campaign should be conducted, but he is heartily in favor of the principle that the national tariff should be levied for revenue only.

"Did you read my last poem?" "Yes; it was simply perfect." "Oh, come now, really, you know, nothing is perfect in this world." "Oh, yes—nonsense is!"

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

FRIDAY, April 1.—SENATE.—The Senate passed numerous bills to-day, among the more important being those concerning landlords and tenants; authorizing railroad companies to operate telegraphs for commercial purposes; legalizing acts of gravel-road companies which purchased roads at Sheriffs' sale; educating pauper children; and concerning the insurance of plate-glass. The minority report indefinitely postponing Senator Chapman's bill repealing the bill of March 15, 1879, touching foreign corporations, was adopted, after which the General Appropriation bill was called up for the third time and passed.

HOUSE.—A multitude of bills were rushed through the House, the majority of which were simply amendments of existing laws or measures presented by the Codification Committee. The bill originating in the Senate for the care and education of pauper children passed, and the bill for the taxation of mortgages was defeated, 55 to 27. The resolution was voted down to recall from the Senate the House bill relating to elections, passed two weeks ago. The bill passed providing that a wife may acquire property in any way by her means or individual effort, and it shall remain her own separate property, if unmarried. Revision bills were passed concerning the adoption of heirs, Circuit Courts, ferries, public holidays, which adds election days to the number, and concerning guardian and ward, and the powers of cities.

SATURDAY, April 2.—SENATE.—The Senate discussed the criminal code and accepted an amendment that in felonies over which different States have jurisdiction the State shall not lose its right to try the criminal for the reason that he may have been punished for the same offenses in another State.

HOUSE.—The House passed the bill creating the Thirty-first, Twenty-ninth and Thirty-fifth judicial circuits. A bill was introduced raising convict labor to 90 cents per day. The Republican leaders gave notice of an abandonment of the apportionment scheme.

MONDAY, April 4.—SENATE.—The Senate worked this morning almost exclusively on second reading of bills. The Code bill, concerning criminal procedure, occupied the greater part of the afternoon. The vexed Dog bill was recalled and referred. A remonstrance was received from the German Turnverein of Indianapolis against any prohibitory liquor legislation, because such legislation was packed by enemies of personal liberty, and, as a constitutional amendment, would greatly injure the State, beside being an infringement upon the fundamental law of the land and unworthy a free and enlightened people.

HOUSE.—Among the new bills introduced in the House were three affecting the sale of liquor. One of them proposes to make the granting of licenses optional with the County Commissioners; a second was a general revision of the licensing system; and the third proposed a license for all persons desiring to drink intoxicating liquors. This bill was introduced by Mr. Ryan, of Delaware, and provides that the drinker shall pay $10 per annum for the privilege of drinking, money so accumulating to be expended in building an inebriate asylum. One plain drunk forfeits the license.

TUESDAY, April 5.—SENATE.—The Senate to-day passed the bill giving City Marshals the same authority and fees as are given constables. The joint resolution proposing a prohibitory clause as an amendment to the constitution was referred. A long discussion originated over the proposition to indefinitely postpone the bill looking to an abandonment of the Beaver Lake lands in Newton county, and instead of postponing the matter it was finally laid on the table. The Revision Committee bill for the incorporation of cities passed, and some progress was made with the Criminal Code.

HOUSE.—The House passed bills authorizing Inspectors to be selected by the voters when the appointee is absent at the time for opening the polls; declaring cruelty to animals a misdemeanor; to prevent the pollution of streams and canals which furnish water supply for cities and towns, and that the Indianapolis waterworks shall not take their supply from any point within the limits of the city; amending the act relating to the incorporation of cities. Bills were introduced in the House prohibiting the running of railway trains on Sunday, and prohibiting discrimination against sex in the payment of school teachers and State officials. The Local-Option bill was made the special order for Thursday. The Prison Reform bill was defeated. The bill repealing the railroad subsidy act failed; so also the bill allowing nine of a jury to return a verdict.

WEDNESDAY, April 6.—SENATE.—Bills were passed: Concerning the settlement of decedents' estates; authorizing owners of real estate to petition for improvements of streets and highways, and to obtain right of way for such. The Senate absorbed the forenoon with discussing the House bill to encourage immigration by allowing non-resident aliens to acquire real estate in this State. It went over for final action until to-morrow. Bills passed for bridging the Ohio river at Evansville, and establishing the Vigo Superior Court. The proposed prohibition amendment to the constitution was made the special order for to-morrow. Senator Wilson resigned the Chairmanship of the Finance Committee, because, in the appointment of a conference committee with the House, the President was not governed by custom, and appointed some other Senator instead of Wilson. The Fee and Salary bill was set down for Friday. The House bill authorizing purchases of turnpikes by counties for conversion into free roads passed. The Judiciary Committee recommended constitutional amendments increasing the regular session of the General Assembly to 100 days and limiting the special session to thirty; also, that the Supreme Court shall embrace not less than five nor more than nine Judges, holding six years. An amendment to the Civil Code bill was adopted, limiting changes of venue to one from the Judge and one from the county.

HOUSE.—The House failed to pass the bill reorganizing the benevolent institutions, and passed the bill making the law of 1873 relative to taxing banks for city and town purposes conform to the new Tax law. The State House bill passed; also the bill for the appointment of Commissioners to assist the Supreme Court. Carroll, White and Pulaski counties were constituted the Thirty-ninth judicial circuit. The law relating to foreign insurance companies as to serving notice passed. An evening session was held for the benefit of the bill relative to offices and officers. The House passed bills: Appropriating $1,050 to the former employes of the Orphans' Home at Knightstown; providing for the incorporation of the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Association; and establishing a Superior Court in Vigo county.

THURSDAY, April 7.—SENATE.—The Senate completed the reading of the Criminal Procedure act, and took up the bill defining offenses. House bills were passed amending the Whistling act, concerning husband and wife, and relating to taxation in cities and towns. The Appellate Court bill was introduced, and the bill to encourage immigration failed for want of a constitutional majority. This was the bill permitting non-resident aliens to own real estate in Indiana. The motion to suspend the rules for consideration of the prohibition amendment failed; another attempt will be made to-morrow.

HOUSE.—Bills were passed in the House for keeping in repair public cemeteries; to encourage the destruction of birds that prey upon poultry; requiring witnesses to be notified when their fees are paid into court; allowing witnesses in court $1 a day in the county and $1.25 outside; and allowing lands to be redeemed from execution sales by paying 8 per cent. interest. After a long debate the House passed the Female Suffrage amendment to the constitution—62 to 24. The announcement of the vote was received with cheers, the majority being surprisingly large. The afternoon and evening sessions were taken up with the offices and officers' bills.

Making Money.

Why some men are so eager to make money is a problem; they certainly do not spend it freely. They care nothing for the good things of life. They seem to value money for its own sake. Most men start in life with a bright object before them, the means for attaining which is money, and so they resolve to make money. But the means push the end out of sight. A new fascination springs up, which banishes the younger dream. The real pushes the ideal from its seat. Money acquires, or seems to acquire, a value of its own; it becomes both means and end, and making it grows into a habit seldom lost. The proverb says that "Use is second nature," and it is fully proved, when the natural desire of men for happiness is obliterated by the habit of making money.

HOUSEKEEPERS' HELPS.

APRICOT SAUCE.—Put half a pot of apricot jam in a saucepan with half a pint of water and a glass of sherry; boil, strain and serve.

IRON MOULD.—To remove iron mould from linen, wash the spots in a strong solution of cream of tartar and water; repeat if necessary, and dry in the sun.

FRIED SMELTS.—Let them be carefully floured, and fry them in plenty of hot lard. When done drain them well in front of the fire, sprinkle them all over with very fine salt, and serve with fried parsley and lemon cut into "quarters."

COFFEE CAKE.—This is one of the best of plain cakes and is very easily made. Take one cup of strong coffee infusion, one cup molasses, one cup sugar, one-half cup butter, one egg and one teaspoonful saleratus. Add spice and raisins to suit the taste and enough flour to make a reasonable thick batter. Bake rather slowly in tin pans lined with buttered paper.

SIR WATKIN WYNN'S PUDDING.—Six ounces chopped lemon peel, four ounces beef suit chopped fine, four ounces white bread crumbs, one tablespoonful of flour, three ounces of moist sugar, two ounces of apricot jam, a small liquor glass of marachino or of curacoa, one desert spoonful of milk and three fresh eggs. Mix all together, pour into a buttered shape and steam three hours. Apricot jam sauce to be served under the pudding.

SAVE THE PICTURES.—Picture scraps may often be used with capital effect. Small rooms, and nurseries especially, papered with them and afterward varnished afford great entertainment. Cornices may be made of them to run all around the wall paper, with about two inches of gold foil between each and a black bordering. Wooden fireboards add Holland mats may also be covered with them. These must, of course be varnished.

ROAST SIRLOIN OF BEEF.—Cut off most of the flap and trim the joint neatly. Have a clear, brisk fire, well built up. Place the joint close to it for the first half hour, then move it further off. Baste frequently. When nearly done sprinkle the joint well over with salt. Put a small quantity of water in the dripping-pan, then pour off the gravy, free it effectually from fat and pour it over the joint in the dish. Time of roasting, about three hours for a ten to twelve pound sirloin. Garnish with scraped horseradish and Yorkshire pudding. Serve horseradish sauce in a tureen.

ROAST WILD DUCK.—Roast at a very brisk fire not longer than fifteen, or at most twenty minutes. Baste frequently with butter, and sprinkle freely with salt at the time of serving. Serve with Bigarade Sauce. Pare off, as thinly as possible, the yellow rind of two Seville oranges; cut it into very thin shreds and boil them in water for five minutes. Melt a piece of butter in a saucepan add to it a tablespoonful of flour and stir until it begins to color; add a gill of stock, pepper and salt to taste, the juice of the oranges and a good pinch of sugar; then put in the boiled rinds, stir the sauce until it boils and serve.

STEWED CELERY.—Trim and cut to the same length a number of heads of celery, split them in two lengthwise, tie them in bundles with thread, and parboil them for ten minutes in salted water. Drain them, and arrange them in a saucepan over slices of bacon, with a bundle of sweet herbs, a couple of onions, pepper and salt to taste, and a blade of mace. Add enough stock just to cover the contents and simmer gently till the celery is quite tender. Having removed the string, dispose the celery on a dish; take some of the stock in which it has been stewed, remove all fat from it, add a small piece of fresh butter, pour it over the celery and serve.

The World's Travel and Traffic.

Little does the world think what tremendous capital is required to carry on its travel, traffic and commerce. The railroad net, woven all over the globe, consists of 200,000 miles; Asia, Australia and Africa can claim only the fourteenth part, the other thirteen-fourteenths being nearly equally divided between Europe and America. The rolling stock in use over this railroad net consists of 66,000 locomotives, 120,000 passenger and palace cars, and 1,500,000 freight cars. The capital invested in all the railways is estimated at twenty milliards of dollars. The commerce on the seas is carried on by 12,000 steamers and over 100,000 sailing vessels. The tonnage of these vessels amounts to over twenty million tons. Telegraphic communication is maintained by 500,000 miles of wire, of which about five-eighths fall to Europe, two-eighths to America, and fully one-eighth to the sub-marine telegraph system. There are 40,000 stations, from which 110,000,000 dispatches are sent annually, or an average of over 300,000 daily. According to population, Switzerland does the most telegraphing, there being one dispatch sent annually for every inhabitant. This is undoubtedly due to the great annual influx of travelers and pleasure seekers. Next come the Netherlands, and then Great Britain. Russia comes last on the list, as she sends only forty-five dispatches per annum for every thousand inhabitants. The transmission of letters by mail amounts in round numbers to about 4,000 millions. According to the population of the several countries, the Americans write by far the most letters; next come the English; then Switzerland, Germany, the Netherlands, Denmark, Austria, France, Sweden, Norway, Spain, Hungary, Italy, Portugal, Greece, Russia, Servia, Roumania, Turkey.

AGRICULTURAL ITEMS.

HOED CROPS.—Farmers frequently stop the cultivation of hoed crops too soon and allow the weeds to gain possession of the soil. Cultivate early and often should be the rule for corn.

KEEPING GRAPES.—A lady has discovered that grapes packed in granulated sugar will keep fresh longer than when packed in sawdust, and, as the sugar is not injured, expense will not prove an objection.

STRAWBERRIES IN THE CITY.—The following novel suggestion is from the Fruit Recorder, and is one that might be carried out with little trouble and expense: "How many of our city readers might have fresh, fragrant strawberries and other dainties, with but little care or trouble! But, say some, 'the rain water would be filled with dirt.' No, not if properly grown—that is, by setting the pots or boxes holding the plants in pans or boxes that are water tight. Fifty plants of strawberries would give a family of four to five persons a nice dish daily for two weeks. Fifty pots of annuals like petunias, balsams, etc., would make a show that would be beautiful and well repay all trouble. Try it, readers."

ORCHARD NOTES.—It is commonly the case that the orchard is cropped year after year until the diminished yield shows that something must be done. The proper way is to give a moderate manuring annually; stable manure put on in the fall and plowed in, or in small orchards forked in, may be alternated with ashes or lime on other years. Clover to be pastured by hogs, and afterward plowed under, is one of the best fertilizers. Trees of forced growth are more tender than others and so suffer more from sudden changes of climate. For this reason too high cultivation is as bad as not enough. Heading back and root pruning are the best methods of restoring barren trees. Wood ashes is the best fertilizer for trees, vines and bushes. Prune apple-trees so as to give them a low, well-balanced top. One such tree is worth several tall, irregular trees. Peach orchards should have a dry, fertile soil on a Northern or Western slope.

LATE EVERGREEN CORN.—A trustworthy writer in the Rural New Yorker plants his evergreen sweet corn in the following way: The soil is sandy gravel, naturally warm, and of moderate fertility; in fact, not rich enough to produce satisfactory crops without manure, which I did not have in sufficient supply to feel sure of a full crop. Consequently I purchased a little superphosphate to give the corn the benefit of its effects (if any) in its earliest growth. As the crop of field corn was planted, having a little manure yet in the cattle yard, we scraped together what we could and spread it on the plot to be planted to sweet corn for green fodder. The piece had wheat grown on it the year before, the ground having been plowed in the fall and replowed in the spring before applying the yard manure, also after the manure was applied. The reason why I plowed so many times was that a part of the piece had an abundance of quack grass on it, and I wished to destroy that if possible. Everything was now ready to plant corn on the 25th of May, the plot having been harrowed and marked. We then put about a tablespoonful of the superphosphate at each crossing of the marks, covering it slightly with mellow soil and planted the corn on the places thus prepared.

PROFIT AND LOSS WITH POULTRY.—A sensible writer says that the direct profit or loss with stock of any kind whatever comes from the feeding resorted to. If proper food has been given, at regular intervals, in sufficient quantity, profit is the natural result, while haphazard management results disastrously. In the feeding and management of poultry there is more lax discipline than with any other kind of stock. There is far too much corn, in different forms, fed to breeding poultry, and to layers to secure the best results, for corn has a great tendency to produce fat, which is not desirable where plenty of eggs are expected, the fat forming so thickly on and around the ovaries and other organs as to effectually prevent the fowls from laying. In cold weather, warmth and heat are necessary, and feeding corn moderately to the laying hens is not so objectionable as it is during the warm summer months, while over fat fowls are more liable to disease and ailments than those only in good condition. For the laying fowls no better food can be given for a principal diet than good, sound, whole wheat, though it must not be given in the same quantities as corn. Screenings are not all objectionable, provided they are not musty or spoiled, though the price at which they are usually sold makes them more expensive than good wheat, for the simple reason that scarcely one-half the screenings is wheat or will be consumed by the poultry, the greater part being cheat, cockle, weed seeds, etc. For the fattening of poultry corn is the very best and cheapest food which can be given to accomplish it. To secure the greatest profit from the poultry it is economy in the end to keep the birds growing rapidly from the start, and a couple of weeks before they are to be marketed have them penned up and fed principally on soft food, such as scalded corn meal, well boiled mush, oat meal mush (if the meal can be gotten cheaply), etc., feeding twice a day at first, and toward the last three times, only what they will eat up with an appetite, and confining the birds in a darkened room, giving them light only at feeding time.

CRY
FOR Pitcher's
Castoria.

Mothers like, and Physicians recommend it.

IT IS NOT NARCOTIC.

CENTAUR LINIMENTS; the World's great Pain-Relieving remedies. They heal, soothe and cure Burns, Wounds, Weak Back and Rheumatism upon Man, and Sprains, Galls, and Lameness upon Beasts. Cheap, quick and reliable.

IN USE SINCE 1852
MISHLER'S
HERB BITTERS

A Compound Tincture of the most valuable remedies known to the medical profession, prepared upon strictly pharmaceutical principles.

An experience of twenty-five years proves it to be the greatest Antidote to Malaria and all other Ague influences known to the world.

The only absolute cure for all Affections of the Kidneys. In Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, all Disorders of the Bowels, and all Affections of the Throat and Lungs, it is equally efficacious, while as a remedy for complaints peculiar to the female sex it has no equal.

NOT A BEVERAGE
But an old reliable Household Remedy, thoroughly adapted to assist nature.

It supplies tone to the stomach, reinvigorates the digestive organs, stimulates the secretions, and promoting a regular action of the bowels, enables every organ of the body to perform its allotted work regularly and without interruption.

Its highest commendations come from those who have used it longest and known it best.

Nowhere so popular as in Lancaster, Pa., where it has been in use for more than a quarter of a century.

Highly commended as a General Tonic and Appetizer. Sold by Druggists everywhere.

THE MESSENGER OF HEALTH
A large sized paper descriptive of disease, its origin and cure, will be mailed free to any address on application to
THE MISHLER HERB BITTERS CO.
Lancaster, Pa.

☞ We strongly recommend to mothers Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup. It never fails, is easy to take, and no after-physic is required. Price, 25 cents.

THE SYMPTOMS

of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels alternately costive and lax; Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; Debility, Low Spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a dry Cough often mistaken for Consumption.

Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the Liver, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

AS AN UNFAILING SPECIFIC
For DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heart Burn, etc., etc.,
Take Simmons' Liver Regulator.

This justly-celebrated medicine Regulates the Liver, promotes digestion and fortifies the system against malaria.

CAUTION.
See that you get the Genuine, in clean, white wrapper, with large red "Z." Prepared only by Discoveries Made by Accident.

Valuable discoveries have been made and valuable inventions suggested by the veriest accident.

The swaying to and fro of a chandelier in a cathedral suggested to Galileo the application of the pendulum.

Mezzotint owed its invention to the simple accident of the gun-barrel of a sentry becoming rusted with dew.

An alchemist, while seeking to discover a mixture of earths that would make the most durable crucibles, one day found that he had made porcelain.

The power of lenses, as applied to the telescope, was discovered by a watchmaker's apprentice. While holding spectacles-glasses between his thumb and finger, he was startled at the suddenly-enlarged appearance of a neighboring church-spire.

The composition of which printing-rollers are made was discovered by a Solopian printer. Not being able to find the pelt-ball, he inked the type with a soft piece of glue which had fallen out of a glue-pot. It was such an excellent substitute that after mixing molasses with the glue, to give the mass proper consistency, the old pelt-ball was entirely discarded.

The process of whitening sugar was discovered in a curious way. A hen that had gone through a clay puddle went with her muddy feet into a sugar house. She left her tracks on a pile of sugar. It was noticed that wherever the tracks were the sugar was whitened. Experiments were instituted, and the result was that the wet clay came to be used in refining sugar.

The art of etching upon glass was discovered by a Nuremburg glass-cutter. By accident, a few drops of aqua fortis fell upon his spectacles. He noticed that the glass became corroded and softened where the acid had touched it. That was hint enough. He drew figures upon glass with varnish, applied the corroding fluid, then cut away the glass around the drawing. When the varnish was removed, the figures appeared raised upon a dark ground.

The art of lithographing was perfected through suggestions made by accident. A poor musician was curious to know whether music could not be etched upon stone as well as upon copper. After he had prepared his slab, his mother asked him to make a memorandum of such clothes as she proposed sending away to be washed. Not having pen, ink and paper convenient, he wrote the list on the stone with the etching preparation, intending to make a copy of it at leisure. A few days later, when about to clean the stone, he wondered what effect aqua fortis would have upon it. He applied the acid, and in a few minutes saw the writing standing out in relief. The next step necessary was simply to ink the stone and take off an impression.

Colonel Stephenson, of the United States Geological Survey, has turned another page in the long-sealed volume of American antiquities. A large village of cliff-dwellers has been discovered between the Jemez mountains and the Rio Grande river, in New Mexico. The cliffs rise from a height of fifty to five hundred feet. Some of them contain two, some three, and others as many as five lines of dwellings, rising line above line, and back towards the mountain, tier above tier. The houses on the top of the cliff in the abandoned city, are rectangular in form, but the caves are circular, being from ten to fifteen feet in diameter, with arched roofs. Within the excavations, are numerous small rooms. Before each line of dwellings there appears to have been pavements, sometimes four or five feet in width, on the broadest of which, Colonel Stevenson found imprints of feet. Many pictures and hieroglyphics adorn the face of the rock.

COURIER SUPPLEMENT

Auburn Courier.

THURSDAY, APRIL, 14th 1881.

Waterloo.

John Lutz, living near town in sick.

This place is well supplied with woodpiles.

Dr. Chamberlain is having a new porch built.

Sam. Beck expects to celebrate easter next sunday.

Patterson & Smith are receiving their new stock of goods.

Last Sunday the boys could sit on a storebox, and whittle.

Ab. Kelley has gone for another car load of potatoes from Ohio,

The town board held their last regular meeting Monday evening last.

J. D. McAnally has obtained a patent for his device for hitching tugs.

W. R. Sheffer, of the Angola Herald, passed through town Wednesday.

Miss Carrie Cutter has returned from an extended visit to friends in Michigan.

Mrs. Buckland, now residing in Kendallville, is visiting friends in this place.

J. H. Leas is bringing on a lot of the well-known Jackson buggies this week.

S. R. Bickle reports a great deal of building to be done among the farmers this summer.

Theodore Imhoff is now taking orders for his patent weather strip. All say it is the best in use.

J. R. Duncan is running a freight train —or at least he was running one the night of the donation.

There will be preaching at the Presbyterian church next Sunday afternoon, by Rev. A. Y. Moore, of Vinceons.

Calvin Crane, one of the original owners of the town plat, has been here for several days attending to his interests.

It is a great convenience to have the morning train on the Jackson road come early, so the passengers can go into the cars and get warm.

Rev. C. C. Beyrer was pleasantly surprised by a number of the members of the church Tuesday evening. Some very nice presents were made.

The annual re-union of the temperance reform club of this place, will be held May 6th. No pains will be spared to make the re-union a success.

The hand-car house near the Lake Shore freight house burned last Thursday evening. It is supposed that the fire was dropped from a passing train.

The Presbyterian social will be entertained by Mrs Hiram Leih, Wednesday afternoon and evening of next week. All these socials should be well attended.

Rev. H. J. Lacey has been absent attending the Methodist conference at Wabash. He has, during his stay here, won the respect of our people, and we are glad to learn that he is to be retained.

Ike Mannheimer thinks of going to Cleveland for further treatment of his eye. The sight of the left eye is destroyed, and he fears he will be obliged to have it entirely removed, as it continues to be very painful.

J. C. Delong, a brakeman on the Lake Shore road, had a fall one day last week while performing some acrobatic feats in a hotel in Goshen. Result, a bruised head, a broken shoulder and a job for Dr. Chamberlain.

The cemetery needs some attention but the trees are growing finely, grass is evenly and thickly set, the walks and drives are tastefully laid out, and everything considered, is the most beautiful "city of the dead," to be found in this section of the country.

Last week, Gen. Blair traded his great American, Mexican, Mustang, pony to Jas. D. Campbell for his Egyptian, Mambrino Chief, Grey Eagle, Dufler. We are not certain, that we have the full names of all this horse flesh, exactly correct, but that they made a trade, is a positive fact.

Spencerville.

Miss Ella Emanuel spent a part of last week in Auburn, attending her brother Charley who was sick.

Mrs. Luther Jones, who has been ill, is convalescing.

Rev. Hollopeter, of Leo, preached an interesting sermon at the Methodist church Sunday.

Cicero Emanuel has returned to the home of his boyhood with LLD to his name.

Ben. Zimmerman should receive a vote of thanks for the absorbing interest which he takes in the band.

Miss Lillian Sijberg is home from her visit to Hicksville.

Dr. Murphy has concluded to move to Waterloo. Our people regret to lose him.

Mrs. Overhulster has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. Newton Hursh, at Hurshtown.

Mrs. Allen, of Maysville, is visiting her parents.

The Lutheran Sunday-school elected officers last Sunday.

Mrs. Bowman entertained a few of her friends Tuesday evening.

Miss Alice McKay has a full line of stamping patterns which will pay the ladies to see.

Miss Ella Emanuel will teach the school at McCauley's Corners this summer.

Miss Lena Olds visited St. Joe last week.

Mrs. S. Wise went to Fort Wayne Monday.

Miss Alice McKay desires to call attention of the ladies of Spencerville and vicinity to her complete line of millinery goods and stamping patterns.

Mr. John Provines is putting a new roof on his drug-store building.

Potatoes For Sale.

Alfred Kelley, of Waterloo, has two car-loads of nice potatoes just brought from Ohio, which he will sell on reasonable terms. Seed potatoes a speciality. He has Burbank's Seedling, Mammoth Pearl, Victor and Snowflake. He also has an extra early variety, which he sells at fifty cents a piece.

—For carriage and wagon hardware, iron and wood work, call on Kiblinger & Co. 9tf

—Those who contemplate building will do well to call on Kiblinger & Co. before buying hardware, doors, sash and glass. 9tf

—You can get anything in the line of baby carriages, or boys' carts and wagons as cheap as the cheapest, of M. B. Willis. 14-2w.

—The best bargains that you ever saw, in wall-papers and window-curtains and fixtures, can be found at the book-store of M. B. Willis. 14-2w.

Butler Township.

The people are preparing for smallpox.

John Lung contemplates moving to Michigan.

T. S. Merica is canvassing.

Mrs. Laura Groves, who has been visiting with relatives at this place, departed last Monday for her home in Ohio.

Constable Houser is lying dangerously ill with dropsy.

Mr. Percel and son, of Ohio, have removed with their families to Butler Center.

The singing class at Cedar Creek will give an entertainment next Friday night.

Joseph Rechtenwalt, of Keyser, is very sick with erysipelas.

William and Ezra Ensley are running an extensive maple-sugar camp on the farm occupied by John Heitz.

William Fair and John Baber have agreed to clear the tract of land on the Vandercook farm, commonly known as the "berry patch." The tract contains about sixty acres, and has been for several years the resort of berry-pickers for miles around.

Rev. Thomas Higgins, of Kosciusko, has taken up his residence at Cedar Creek. That place never wants for preachers.

J. A. Quince, of the firm of Quince & Son, of St. Johns, will teach school in Jackson township this summer.

J. T. Groves will start a circus. His property will consist of a stuffed bird which Frank persists in saying is not a crane. PIKIE.

THE Boers, or Dutch colonists in South Africa, are not yet fully conquered. It seems a pity that these gallant people cannot be let alone. They have shown themselves capable of self-government, and proved to the world they can fight bravely when in defense of their rights. But the English wish to extend their territory, and the country of the Boers lies in the way. So they propose to annex it. Hence the war. The most remarkable part of the matter is that the commander of the Boers is a former resident of Pennsylvania, Daniel Zoubert by name. He served in our war of the rebellion with marked distinction, and at the close of the war went over to Holland to visit relatives, From there he went to South Africa, and identified himself with the Dutch settlers there. He soon became an influential citizen, and when the war broke out, his military experience gave him a prominence that resulted in placing him at the head of their forces.

SOME of the Ohio papers are reviving the memory of some of the ancient financial legislation of that state. In 1807 the legislature enacted the famous "squirrel law." Under that statute any tax-payer was assessed so many, say from ten to one hundred squirrels, as the number he must kill during the year. He had to bring the required number of scalps to the township trustee, for each of which he was to be paid two cents. But for each scalp he failed to bring in he was obliged to pay a forfeit of three cents. But squirrels were plenty, and few failed to kill the required number. Still, great as was the numbered slaughtered, there were squirrels enough to keep up their ravages on the growing corn crops. The bounty began to drain the treasury, and after a brilliant run of two years, the first financial "Ohio idea" was repealed.

—The "widow" has gone, boys.

—How's this for plowing corn ground

—Isaac Roth changes horses every week.

—Elza Shaffer is reportd to be quite sick.

—Roy Gregg will move his cigar factory down town.

—Theives entered Reuret's hardware store Tuesday evening.

—Fred. Yesbera, our good-looking jewelry clerk came up yesterday.

—S. C. Swineford has gone to Ohio, and Billy Rose bosses the Swineford during his stay.

—Get a hat of Mrs. Little. All the nobby hats on the street come from her establishment.

—One of Chas. Klotz's children fell down the steps at the Presbyterian church last evening and was hurt quite badly

—Letters remaining in the post-office at this place not called for—April 11, 1881: Cody James J. (registered), Barnes Nettie, Merrell William, McKanney W. S. J. RAINIER, P. M.

—This week, the Ligonier Banner is fifteen years old. Mr. Stoll has had control of the paper all this time, and has made it one of which the people of that place are justly proud.

—Joseph Henderson, of Syracuse, made us a brief call yesterday. He reports no small-pox in that place, but a large number of cases and several deaths a short distance northwest, in the country.

—The "nice" question has struck Ligonier, and now her citizens are rushing around after unabridged dictionaries, to see whether this harmless little word "nice" is as nice as it used to be considered.

—A young man near Keokuk, Iowa, was so overjoyed at being accepted by his girl, that he hugged her so hard as to cause her death. This is a fact, and should be a warning to six or seven of the Auburn boys we know of.

—The ladies' society of the Methodist church, will be entertained by the members of the fourth section, in the lecture room, on Wednesday afternoon and evening. Refreshments served at half-past five. All are respectfully invited to attend.

MRS. J. ANDERSON, Sec'y.

What is the Relation of Study to the Practical Pursuits of Life?

[Read before the Teachers' Association at Auburn, by C. A. Fyke.]

To answer the question completely, would be, to my mind at least, to develop the true philosophy of education. As I believe that education is a development of power produced by study, I will call your attention, first, to some of the methods of development. But there is a vast difference between a development that educes power and one that tends to culture and show only; and while it should be the aim of every school to raise the standard of culture, it should be the chief aim to develop the manhood, and make good, practical citizens, such as will make the community, the state and the world feel their influence.

Too much of the study done in schools today is for culture and show, rather than for utility. The mind is made the receptacle of a conglomerate mass of facts and principles without the proper assimilation and digestion of the same, and nothing is really valuable to us until it has become a part of our individuality. Children are not born with principles, either mental or moral; but they have a nature that will use the facts of life to fashion principles for themselves. Now, the mistake most frequently made is to give the pupil facts instead of principles. This arises from the fact that the American people are an energetic and crowding people. Every one is striving to accomplish the most possible in the least amount of time. We are a nation of crammers. This is seen on every hand. The professional man rushes to his profession unprepared, for who will believe that a man who has passed two winters in a professional school is prepared to enter upon the duties of that calling, especially since most of the schools do not require a thorough or even a moderate literary training? It is seen also in the haste to acquire wealth, which has taken such a hold upon the masses that so very few remain in our schools a sufficient length of time to complete the high-school course. Although this may not be an outgrowth of our educational system, yet it is our duty as educators to correct this by our teaching.

If facts are given to a child and circumstances are such that time may be given for a modification of these facts by varying circumstances, he will make his own principles. When a child is in possession of a fact and nothing more, he is informed; when he is put in possession of a principle and nothing more, he is instructed; but when he is in possession of facts and principles, so assimilated and digested that they become a part of his very being, and evoke power from the spiritual man, he is educated.

True education is, then, the communication to the child of facts and principles, illustrated and illuminated by careful thought and investigation so as to draw out the mental and moral powers. These powers must be developed in harmonious proportions, or the education is a failure. Man is a compound being. He has a three-fold nature which allies him to the organic and the animal world, while his moral or spiritual nature allies him to the God of the universe. True manhood, the thing to be developed by study, is the combination and harmonious co-operation of the physical, mental and moral natures, in which the physical is subordinate to the mental, and the mental is subordinate to the moral. Some one has said, in substance, that if we develop the physical powers only, we will have a brute; that if we develop the physical and mental only, we will have a rascal; but if we develop the physical, the mental and the moral powers in the proper proportions, we will have the true and noble being that God designed man to be. All true education aims to develop this triune being by three distinct and co-ordinate methods. This development must and will evoke power if the subjects have the proper food and training. But instruction without training will not educe power. The muscles of the body are not developed by the mere consumption of food. There must be judicious exercise, and from this commingling of the two, comes the development.

Now what the practical pursuits of life demand of us, is a class of graduates whose manhood has been developed, who have moral strength and firmness of character. Study should be so directed that the pupil may have these powers developed to their fullest capacity. The practical pursuits of life demand men of character who are not afraid to do with all their might whatever their hands find to do.

Let me here ask you a question for a complaining people, and invite your careful investigation of the same. Why do our schools, and especially the high-schools and colleges send out so many young men in the world who never return to the farm or workshop, but prefer to perform any labor in the towns and cities, or aspire to fill the already overflowing ranks of professional life, in which there are few who are an ornament to that profession, and many who eke out a mere subsistance? Surely, my dear teacher, a great part of this state of things is due to our teaching. A true system of training will give us a class of graduates who will go from the school-room to the workshops and farms where cultivated intellects and moral worth are in great demand; where is to be found the greatest inducements for the ambitious young man to labor with the most reasonable hope of success.

Study should be so directed that it will produce a character that will not consider it dishonoring to manhood and to womanhood to earn their bread by the sweat of honest industry, but rather an honor. Industry is divine. Indolence is eternally dishonorable, and a true education will produce a manhood that will delight in labor, mental or physical, rather than consider itself above it.

Another observation relating to my subject, which perhaps you may have made, is this: Why does the business world look with disfavor upon the application of our graduates for positions? They assert that it is easier and less expensive to take an ordinary young man and teach him the business than to employ the educated young man. Now, if education is worth anything to a person, it will make him a better business man or laboring man of whatever kind. All education must be a failure which does not aim to do this, and accomplish it so far as the subject will admit. Pupils must be taught not only to know things, but to do things. The most refined philosophy, the most cultivated intellects, and the most highly-finished scientific attainments are often to be found unused, because their possessors did not know how to take hold and move the men and things around them. And study or instruction is defective which does not teach the pupil to do things. "To do and to bear is the duty of life." The first aim is to cultivate the activities. This, according to a law of nature, will create an appetite. Then facts and principles may safely be given. Children should be told little, and stimulated to discourse much. Any other method will teach them to depend upon others. This is the natural method, as is seen in the case of the self-made man. Investigation lays the foundation and opposition strengthens the character. No teaching or study can add a new faculty to the mind, but may we not tamper with those which it already possesses?

I have now given you all that my time will allow on the subject of development, and I believe that this is the true mode of education. But I will call your attention to a few thoughts on that branch of my subject which I presume the proposers of this question desired me to speak. I am not a believer in "practical branches," and all this cry for a course of study that shall provide that which the child expects to use in after life is false utilitarianism. My dear teacher, which would you name as practical branches, or adapted to the practical pursuits of life? Business arithmetic may be taught a boy of ordinary intelligence in a few weeks at most. Reading and writing he may acquire in the primary and intermediate departments; this he may supplement by reading papers and books out of business hours. Business language he learns at home and on the streets. I can think of nothing else that is essential if we are seeking a practical, short road.

In education the usefulness of a study is not to be measured by its availability for the business purposes of after life, but solely by its fitness to develop or educate the student's powers. Till that is completed he should not be required or permitted to learn a thing simply because he hopes to use it to make money with. Business of every kind is a trade, and should be learned after one is educated, and time would be gained in the end. But, as I have before remarked, the American cannot take the time to follow out such a course, but rushes into some branch of business, and unless he has splendid natural abilities, ten chances to one he will fail, or make but a mere livelihood. The object of an education is not to learn useful things, but to become able to learn and to use them; and this grasping for "practical branches" and "short cuts" to fame and wealth are working unnumbered evils to this generation. The consequence is the sending forth of half-educated men to plead the causes and heal the diseases and to do the business of the generation. Education give a man the use of himself, and helps to make him his own master. The educated man can always command and use his faculties for all they are worth. He may be a man of much or little power, according as nature has endowed him, but if he is truly educated he will count for all that he is worth. An argument in favor of this theory of practical education is found in the fact that the season of childhood is prolonged out of all proportion to the length of man's days upon the earth. He has a longer time given him for a preparation for life work than any other creature. But man in this crowding and thoughtless age is trying to improve upon the plans of the Creator and push the mere child without development and character into the intricacies of business life with a so-called "practical" preparation that makes him a mere tool, to accomplish a work that requires force and not an instrument of force. There is no strength except that which comes from development, and that study which does not aim at development is a failure. I care not whether the instruments are of a practical class or not if they only possess the requisite fitness for educing the powers of the student. And I will say but a word on this point for fear that I may trespass on the province of a subject that is yet to be discussed. The study of Latin and Greek and the higher mathematics, of rhetoric and logic, mental and moral philosophy—these are the useful studies while man is being educated. These are the studies by which such men as Newton, Bacon, Milton and Gladstone were made. What we need to-day is more warp and not so much filling. I am aware that all will not and could not reach a high standard of development. The false ideas of society and the difference in natural abilities will not admit it, but if this is the true mode of education, would it not be the best course to adopt, whether the pupil pursues an extended course of study or not? Let us devise some method by which we may correct these evils; and may we all see the time when our young men will lay aside their anxiety to enter upon the active duties of life, and young ladies their fear of passing their nineteenth birthday unmarried, until they shall have obtained a thorough education.

A Strange Malady.

Robert Neilson is a native of Glasgow, Scotland, and is forty-two years of age. He came to this country some years ago, and settled in Lansing, Mich., where he now resides. When a baby, his mother was greatly troubled to put him to sleep, even when put to the influence of opiates. As he grew older, this strange malady increased, so that sleep is unknown to him for periods of over four months. He retires at night the same as other people, rests well, but never closes his eyes or feels the least bit drowsy. He says:

"When I go long periods without sleep, the only peculiar sensation I experience is that everything I look at, seems distant and larger than it really is. A short man coming toward me, would apparently be very tall. Before going to sleep, I never felt different than any one probably would, on going to bed any night. I would dream little dreams, the same as most people do when restless and uneasy. Riding in the cold makes me drowsy, if anything does. In summer time, I can go long periods, and feel tip-top all the time. Last summer I did not sleep for four months, and I worked every day."

Correspondence.

We publish by permission, the following letter from Dr. Darby, now at Hot Springs, Ark., to F. P. Haskin, of Waterloo:

HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

DEAR SIR:—By this time, I can give something of an idea of this region of the immoral region of the universe: First, the climate is delightful, mercury ranging from 70 to 80 degrees, and a pure balmy mountain air. We are from 1,400 to 1,800 feet above the sea. This city is located in a narrow valley three miles long, and wide enough for one street at the base of the mountains (which rise at an angle of about 45 degrees) by excavating to make room for the rear ends of the buildings the most of the distance from the upper to the lower end of the city. The property of the city thus far has never been taxed, and you can imagine what the street is, with a stream of water occupying sometimes one side, the center, and then the other side of the street, and a street railroad taking the same liberty of the creek. No fifty feet of sidewalk (if it can be so called) like any other fifty feet in the city. As to elevation, kind or quality, everything is built without reference to grade. There are some very fine buildings and hotels, and the bath houses here are probably as good as any in the world. I was told by a gentleman yesterday, who was on his way to Philadelphia from a trip to Texas with General Grant, and who has visited Baden Baden, Bath, England; Russian, Swiss and Italian watering places, and nearly all, in fact, in the civilized world, that the new bath house, which was opened yesterday, is the finest he ever saw. Everything is high here, board from six to twenty-five dollars per week in respectable places. Nearly all the provision is brought from St. Louis and north of there. Beef-steak is 25 cents a pound, potatoes $3.00 a bushel, oats and corn $1.00, hay $32.00 per ton, etc. The views from the mountain tops are simply magnificent, the rocks show that this region was a melted mass at one time—volcanic—flint and crystal of various kinds, from the limpid clear diamond of the Washita, to the opaque chrysolite, in the lava rock. I shall endeavor to get a few specimens before I leave. Fred., this is a land of roughness by nature, and the natural inhabitants show marked similarity. The forest here is full of game, such as deer, bears, squirrels, coons, opossums and I guess all the snakes in variety which you found in Texas.

I am almost entirely free from my rheumatism, and if I get fully relieved, I shall feel well paid for this sacrifice of coming here. Remember me to your wife, and remember, when you pick up that cherub boy, that there is a fellow about my size who would like to see a little black-eyed girl in Waterloo, her mother and brothers.

Write to me and give me the news of the people, the town, the weather and all else you may think of in addition.

Yours truly, A. B. DARBY.

Lost in the Snow.

Little Annie and Robert Bruce, who live far west, were overtaken on their way home from school one day by a sudden and very heavy snow-storm. Annie was only nine years old, and her brother was younger. They struggled along as best they could, but when they reached a certain hollow, they could not find the path. They tried in vain to find some trace of it. The blinding and piercing wind was fast overcoming the little creatures, and they sank down to rest.

"O what shall we do?" said Robert, "I'm so cold!"

This roused Annie to a fresh effort, and at last she thought they had reached home, but the house was not there. "The wind has blown the house away?" cried Annie in dispair; then remembering how her mother had always taught her to pray when in trouble, she clasped her arms about her little brother and knelt down and prayed, with all the trust and earnestness of childhood, for God to stop the storm.

Who can know but that some blessed messenger from God guided the father's footsteps? for, as she ceased, she saw three figures passing, and rising from her knees, she was clasped in her father's strong arms. The men had not seen the crouching little figures in prayer, but the children saw them and arose, or they might have been found in the bitter morning, cold and white. How triumphantly the little benumbed creatures were borne to their home, twenty rods away, and with what overflowing hearts the parents listened to their sweet voices as they sang together after they were snugly tucked away in bed.—[Exchange.

Performing Miracles.

An Erie, Pennsylvania, special to the Enquirer says:

Rev. James Maloney, who is alleged to have raised Miss Quillian from the dead two months ago, has taken up his residence in Erie, Pa., and is reported to have been working marvelous cures among the sick and maimed. His house is besieged with hundreds of lame, blind, deaf, paralytic and scrofulous people, all clamoring to be healed. Father Maloney was interviewed, and humbly disclaimed any personal power, but gave the glory to God, who, he says, answers his prayers. James May, Ellen Dougherty and several others declare that they were instantaneously healed of disease. To-day, two cripples from Quebec arrived for the purpose of being healed. Maloney was formerly a priest of this diocese, but has traveled all over the world. His bishop looks coldly upon the miracle business.

A Virginia M. C.

[Washington Republican.]

Not long after the close of the rebellion Virginia sent two representatives to the lower house of congress, one of whom we will designate as Judge B. The judge had slight backwoods tendencies and scorned the use of many conveniences deemed indispensable in polite society, and seemed especially adverse to the use of pocket-handkerchiefs, preferring the thumb, finger and back of his hand instead. His colleague, who occupied a seat close by, was the pink of propriety and neatness combined. Some even went so far as to declare him old maidish in many of his notions. One day, as he saw his bucolic brother going through with the customary maneuvers, a happy thought struck him, which he carried into effect the next morning by placing upon the member's desk a box containing a dozen fine, hem-stitched nose-wipes. When the judge came in he saw the package, addressed to himself, and proceeded to open it with due deliberation. Taking out one of the nicely folded "indispensables," he first gazed at it curiously, then shook it to the breeze as he bent over his colleague with the whispered remark: "Them's hankerchiefs, ain't they?" "It seems so," was the response. "Does congress furnish 'em?" he next inquired. "Better ask the sergeant-at-arms," was the reply. "No, 'taint worth while," remarked Judge B., as he gave his nose a tweak and drew underneath it the back of his hand which he wiped on the hip of his pantaloons; "'taint worth while. I never use the damn things nohow; I'll jest frank 'em home to my wife." And he did so then and there, leaving his accomplished friend out to the tune of several dollars, with no compensating satisfaction, and fairly raging at the manner in which his well-intended hint had been taken.

She Saw Him a Few Better.

[Cleveland Leader.]

The public has long conceded that the power of the hotel clerk is superior to that of president. A new rival has sprung up in the railroad ticket agent, as was demonstrated at an Iowa station a few weeks ago.

"I want a ticket to B——," said a well-known lady of the town, just before train.

"Twenty-four cents" responded the agent, working his sausage machine. She laid down a silver quarter. Being well acquainted and a practical joker, the agent drew from his pocket a glittering pants button, passed it over with the ticket, and scooped up the quarter.

"Is this legal tender?" asked the lady quietly.

"Oh, yes," he answered, with mock gravity, "they are the main stay of the republic."

She pocketed it and got aboard, leaving the agent's face coruscanting with smiles.

A few days after, he told it to a brigade of runners buying tickets for B—— and while he was enjoying the encore, the lady appeared with—

"Ticket for B——, please."

"Twenty-four cents," with a sly wink at the runners. He laid down the ticket. She scooped it, and laid down twenty-four dazzling pants buttons, exactly like the first.

"You said they were legal tender. They go a long ways in supporting the family," she chirped sweetly, as she bowed from the presence of more than presidential prerogative.

Then he set 'em up to the brigade of enlightened runners.

KIDNEY-WORT

PERMANENTLY CURES
KIDNEY DISEASES,
LIVER COMPLAINTS,
CONSTIPATION and PILES.

Dr. R. H. Clark, South Hero, Vt., says, "In cases of Kidney Troubles it has acted like a charm. It has cured many very bad cases of Piles, and has never failed to act efficiently."

Nelson Fairchild, of St. Albans, Vt., says, "It is of priceless value. After sixteen years of great suffering from Piles and Costiveness it completely cured me."

C. S. Hogabon, of Berkshire says, "One package has done wonders for me in completely curing a severe Liver and Kidney Complaint."

IN EITHER LIQUID OR DRY FORM

IT HAS WONDERFUL POWER. WHY?

Because it acts on the LIVER, BOWELS and KIDNEYS at the same time.

Because it cleanses the system of the poisonous humors that develope in Kidney and Urinary Diseases, Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation, Piles, or in Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Nervous Disorders and Female Complaints.

☞ It is put up in Dry Vegetable Form, in tin cans, one package of which makes six quarts of medicine.

☞ Also in Liquid Form, very Concentrated, for the convenience of those that cannot readily prepare it. It acts with equal efficiency in either form.

FAREWELL.

The boat went drifting, drifting, over the sleeping sea,
And the face that I loved the dearest sat in the boat with me.

The shadow of coming parting hung over the great grey swell,
And the winds that swept across it sobbed sadly, farewell, farewell.

The boat went drifting, drifting, in the lingering northern night;
And the face that I loved the dearest paled with the parting light.

We strove to join light laughter; we strove to wake a jest;
But the voice that I loved the dearest rang sadly with the Past.

The boat went drifting, drifting, while the dull skies lowered down,
And the "ragged rims of thunder" gave the rocky land a crown.

The boat went drifting, drifting, while to the darkening sky,
For the man that I loved the dearest, the prayer rose silently.

Oh, true, strong hand I touch no more; brave smile I may not see;
Will the God who governs time and tide bring him back to my life and me?

—All the Year Round.

A RUN FOR LIFE.

In my young days I was an enthusiastic entomologist, and one summer vacation I was delighted to receive an invitation from a bachelor cousin, Fred Vernon, to spend a week or two with him in a distant county. Fred was agent to Squire Althorpe, who owned pretty nearly the whole of the parish in which he lived; and, as the Squire spent a good part of his time away from home, I knew I should be able to roam about the place very much as I liked, and should therefore have ample opportunities of adding to my collection of butterflies and other insects. Fred and I had been at school together, and were much more intimate than is usually the case with relations; but we had somehow lost sight of each other since, and on my part I was very glad of an opportunity of renewing the old friendship.

At the time of my visit to Blankshire, the Squire was away on the continent; and, on the morning after my arrival, Fred, having some leisure time at his disposal, proposed that we should take a ramble round the park, and finish up by visiting the Squire's kennels.

The park was a magnificent place, fully 600 acres in extent, and well wooded. Grand old oaks, graceful limes and handsome chestnuts were dotted here and there with picturesque irregularity; while on each side of the hall were clumps of the finest elm trees I had ever seen, on which, for ages past, vast numbers of rooks had built their nests. A certain portion of the park itself—about a third of the whole extent—was surrounded with high iron railings, put down to keep in the deer, of which there were about 100. Within the park was a small lake, about twenty or thirty acres in extent, teeming with fish, surrounded on all sides by giant trees and fringed with beds of waving reeds, while further out into the water were patches of lilies, yellow and white, whose blossoms floated placidly on the unruffled surface.

On the other side of the park, stretching far away inland, was an extensive heath, gently undulating, and covered here and there with patches of gorse and rough grass, which afforded covert for numerous partridges and hares and rabbits. Altogether, the estate was a perfect sportsman's paradise, while for the naturalist it offered unusual attractions as being the home of many different kinds of plants and flowers, and supplying food and shelter to insects of every kind.

As for the dogs I saw at the kennel, I have never forgotten them. Each breed had its own special department, and an assistant to see after it. Much as the spaniels and setters interested me—for I was a bit of a sportsman as well as a naturalist—I must confess that a pack of splendid bloodhounds struck me most of all. Their wise, solemn-looking faces, with their gracefully-pendulous ears, as fine and as soft as silk, were indeed a study. This pack, I was told, was not only celebrated for its appearance but also for its work. They were trained to follow a trail, of biped as well as quadruped, with the most undeviating certainty; and their presence in the Squire's kennels did more to prevent poaching than an army of gamekeepers. While we were admiring the hounds the kennelman told us several tales in illustration of this fact.

A few mornings after our visit to the kennels Fred told me, as we sat at breakfast, that he had some estate business to transact at the town a few miles off, which would require him to be from home nearly the whole day. I could come with him, he said, if I chose; but, once at the town, he must leave me to my own devices, and he opined that I would find it rather dull. With thanks for his offer, I assured him that I would much prefer an entomological expedition by myself to hanging about the town; but at the same time I suggested that, if my services would render him any help, I would gladly sacrifice my own comfort to his. With a laugh, he said that I should only be in his way if I came with him, and we settled the matter there and then.

After breakfast Fred's horse was brought round to the door, and, with parting injunctions to me to go where I liked, he rode off.

Shortly after his departure, armed with my butterfly-net, and with a goodly store of collecting-boxes for the reception of my spoils, I too started for a long, solitary ramble across the heath. I had been gone, I suppose, rather more than a couple of hours, and had been wandering about here and there in an apparently aimless fashion in pursuit of specimens, visiting two or three old pits, and the various hollows in the heath as I came to them, when, on mounting some rising ground, the deep notes of a bloodhound were borne faintly to me by the gentle breeze that was blowing from the direction of the kennels. As I listened, the sound appeared to grow a trifle more distinct, and then entirely died away. Thinking that the pack was out after an escaped deer, I did not pay much attention to what I heard, but proceeded on my way to the next bit of high ground, which from its elevation would give me an opportunity of observing in the distance the movements of the dogs. A brisk walk sufficed to bring me to the top of this spot, and here the deep mellow voices of the hounds were heard more distinctly, and, as it seemed to me, sounded much nearer than on the previous occasion. They are coming this way, I thought to myself; and straining my eyes in the direction from which the sounds came, I tried to distinguish the pack. This was no easy matter, for the hounds were of a color not readily visible in the distance and, on the burnt grass of the heath. However, I at last succeeded in making them out, and perceived that they were alone. This surprised me, for Fred had mentioned that the kennelman always accompanied them when they were out for exercise, or when they were being used to drive back any deer that had succeeded in getting over the high railing that surrounded this part of the park.

As I watched them, they appeared to be slowly approaching in my direction, and to my astonishment they seemed, as nearly as I could tell, to be taking exactly the same course, which was a very erratic one, as I had done. Spell-bound, I watched them disappear in one of the pits I had visited, and, as they vanished from my sight, the music of their voices ceased, the sound waves being intercepted by the intervening ground. In a very short time they emerged from the pit, scrambling up the side just where I had come, and then hunting on in a compact body, led by one hound, which, being slightly larger than the others, was on that account more conspicuous. Slowly they made for the next pit, giving tongue as they came on. Suddenly the thought flashed across my mind:

"They have broken loose and are hunting me."

What was to be done? Here was I, a stranger to the hounds, alone and unarmed in the middle of a vast heath. No house or shelter of any kind was near. For a moment I was paralyzed; but, collecting my thoughts, I began to turn about for some way of escape. That the hounds, if once they came up with me, would attack me, I well knew, and all thoughts of attempting to resist them were out of the question. Hastily throwing off the sachel which, full of boxes and cases, was slung across my shoulders, I buttoned up my coat and started off at a steady trot. My net, which was a strong, serviceable one, I kept in my hand, thinking it might be of use.

Scanning the very limited horizon eagerly to catch sight of any shelter that might be visible, I saw nothing that could help me. It was clear that my best chance of safety lay in my being able to foil the hounds by making them lose the trail. The tales I had read in my boyhood of the hair-breadth escapes of runaway slaves in Cuba flashed across my mind, and I suddenly recollected that in these stories water almost always played a prominent part. To cast my eyes round in search of the stream was the work of a moment; but, as may be imagined, on the high ground where I was, no stream was possible. No time was to be lost, for already the notes of my pursuers sounded clearer and clearer, showing that they were gaining on me. I dare not run at too great a speed, for I knew I should soon become exhausted.

The undulating nature of the ground made it very hard work for me; but, for all that, it was not an unmixed evil, as it prevented the hounds, which now gained steadily on me, from quitting the trail to run by sight. On descending the slope, I was delighted to behold a long and somewhat winding pool of water. Here, thought I, was my chance; and I immediately went for it. The run was beginning to tell on me, and I knew well that the reduction in my speed, rendered necessary by my having to wade almost knee-deep in water, would enable me to recover my breath somewhat. Fortunately the water was not very deep—little more than a foot—and after the first few steps, the bottom was fairly firm and hard. My progress now was not only slow but very fatiguing; and nearer and nearer came the hounds.

After wading about a hundred yards, a stronger gust of wind than usual wafted the deep tones of my pursuers even more clearly to my ears, and the fear that my ruse might not be successful compelled me to quit the water once more and toil wearily up the sloping side of the miniature glen in which the pool was situated.

Once on the summit of the slope, I paused and looked behind, to catch, if possible, a hurried glimpse of my pursuers. To my horror, I saw them stream over the side of the hill and make straight for the spot where I entered the water. Here, as I had hoped, the hounds were puzzled, but only for a little.

I was rapidly becoming exhausted with my long run, and more than once I was tempted to stop and collect a heap of stones and try to keep the hounds at bay until help should arrive. Reflecting, however, that it might be an hour or two before the kennelman discovered the whereabouts of his lost pack, I gave up the idea for the present, and moved on with all the speed I could muster. Still losing my trail, the hounds had been silent, and I began to flatter myself that they had lost the track, when suddenly the recommencement of their cries told me that they had hit off the scent again.

On, on I tottered, my head reeling and my eyes swimming with the unwonted exertion. Thoughts of the home I might never see again floated across my brain and renewed my failing strength. My pursuers were gaining fast now, and already no more than a couple of hundred yards intervened between us.

Presently a sudden increase in the music behind—which just then was anything but music to me—caused me to look round, when I saw that the hounds had viewed their quarry, and, with heads in the air, were racing on at well-nigh double their former speed. Increasing my pace without even looking where I ran, I caught my foot in a tuft of grass, and nearly fell, turning half round in my efforts to save myself.

It was a fortunate trip for me; for at a short distance off, on my right, I saw a stunted oak, nearly dead, it is true, but high enough from the ground to afford me a safe resting-place, if only I could climb up into the branches before the dogs reached me. If I had not tripped, I should have passed this tree without seeing it until it was too late to be of service to me, for it was hidden by some higher ground from my view until I reached the spot where I nearly fell, and then I was past it.

With the little strength I had left I dashed for the tree, but to my dismay I saw that the lower branches were beyond my reach. No time was to be lost, for already the hounds were close at hand. Suddenly I remembered that I had my butterfly net, which, providentially, was strong and serviceable, in my hand; and on reaching the foot of the tree I hooked the ring of the net over the broken stump of a bough, and by dint of almost superhuman exertion I managed, I hardly know how, to scale the rough bark and drag myself into the polled head of the tree. I was only just in time, for as I reached this place of safety the hounds were round the foot of the tree baying furiously.

Feeling a deadly faintness creeping over me, I had enough presence of mind left to undo the stout leathern belt I wore round my waist, and fasten myself by it to one of the branches. Then the baying of the hounds, the rustling of the leaves, and, as I fancied, the blowing of a horn, were mingled together in a confused murmur, and I swooned.

When I recovered consciousness I was stretched on the ground, my head supported on the knees of the old kennelman, while one of his assistants was attempting to pour a little brandy through my clenched teeth. My old pursuers were lying on the ground close by, watching the proceedings with solemn indifference, and a couple of horses were cropping the grass a few paces away. I was soon sufficiently restored to mount one of the horses, and as we walked slowly home the old man told me how it happened that the hounds had broken loose. He had taken them out for a run on the heath as usual, he said, when suddenly they appeared to hit off a trail of some kind.

Thinking, as I did when I first heard them, that one of the deer had escaped from the park, he encouraged them to follow up the scent; and, as he was riding over some rough ground, his horse put its foot in a rabbit's burrow and fell, throwing him heavily. The old man was somewhat stunned by the fall, and, when he came to himself, he found that the hounds were away, and the horse had evidently gone back to the stables. Thither he also hastened, and found his horse, and, taking one of his "helps" with him, he set off in search of the hounds. Meanwhile these had followed up the trail by themselves, with the results mentioned above. The two men rode after them as well as they could, having only the sound, and that at times very faint, to guide them. The nature of the ground over which they were riding obliged them to proceed slowly; and it was some time, probably, after I had fainted that, instead of the deer they expected to find, they had come upon me hanging by my belt in the tree.

"Would the hounds have killed me if I had not been able to find shelter?" I presently asked.

"Yes; most certainly they would," was the old man's reply, "if they had been left to themselves."

What a narrow escape I felt I had! But for the refuge of that solitary tree, my life would most certainly have been sacrificed. When at length I reached my cousin's house, the reaction consequent upon the intense excitement of the past few hours had begun, and I had to betake myself to bed, where a raging fever detained me for a few weeks. During all that period my thoughts were occupied with the fearful experiences of that day on the moor; and, even now, though restored to my former health and vigor, it is not without a shudder that I am able to think of that run for my life.

What a Sailor Said.

His Honor had before him at the Central Station Court a long-legged, bow-back man with a high-pitched voice who said he was a sailor.

"What are you sailing around here for, before navigation has opened?"

"Well, you see, my name is Flint. Got that down?"

"Yes."

"Well, my first name is Sam. You can spell Sam, I suppose?"

"Yes; you are Sam Flint, and I can spell both names."

"Well, I was up the lake chopping wood. The other day I got tired of that work and came down to see what the prospects were. Says I to myself: 'Maybe there'll be work and maybe there won't be, but we'll glide down to Detroit.'"

"And you glid?"

"Yes, and when I got here I says again: 'Twon't be no time lost, for if you don't get work you can get drunk.'"

"And so you got drunk?"

"Yes. And when I found I was getting drunk, I says to Sam Flint: 'Sam, my boy, they charge as much for a little drunk as a big one, and so Sam, get a big drunk.'"

"And what else did you say?"

"Well, when I was hauled in I says to myself: 'Samuel, you are booked for thirty days, or I'm a goat, but you will save railroad fare and be handy by when the season opens.'"

"And did Sam say anything to that?"

"Not a word, yer Honor, but he kind o' grinned and looked pleased. If I were you, I'd lift him for a month."

But His Honor wouldn't. He turned him out in the spring slush to go back to his chopping.—Detroit Free Press.

THE area of the Russian Empire is 8,531,004 square miles. The population, including Poles, Finns, Caucasians, and Asiatics, is 85,685,945. The area of Russia proper is 1,881,216 miles, and the population 65,704,559. No other country in Europe has as large a territory or as many inhabitants. The late Czar ascended the throne March 2, 1855, after the battles of Baldkava and Inkermann, and in the midst of the siege of Sebastopol. His reign was exactly twenty-six years and eleven days in duration. His father, Nicholas, reigned thirty years (1825-1855), and his great uncle, Alexander I., twenty-four years (1801-1825). There have been but three Czars of Russia in the present century. Alexander III., now on the throne, was thirty-six years of age, March 17, and will, unless he meets an untimely end, live to complete the century in four generations. The last Czar of Russia who met his death at the hands of an assassin previous to the late Emperor was Paul, the son of the famous Catharine (1796-1801). Spite of the repeated attempts upon the lives of the rulers of Russia, the average length of reigns in that kingdom has been greater than in most other countries of Europe.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

PAINLESS CURE FOR WARTS.—Drop a little vinegar on the wart and cover it immediately with cooking soda or saleratus; put on as much soda as you can pile on, and let it remain ten minutes. Repeat several times a day, and in three days the wart will be gone. A good remedy for corns also.

EARACHE.—In the course of practice you will often be called upon to attend a case of earache. This means, pathologically speaking, acute inflammation of the membrana tympani. Now, in such a case you may quickly subdue the inflammation, relieve the patient from the excruciating pain he is suffering, and save him, perhaps, from subsequent confirmed deafness. The treatment from which such a very desirable result may be obtained is similar to that which you will find so beneficial in analogous cases of eye disease; viz., leeches behind the ear, hydrarg c. creta and belladonna powders, with warm fomentations.

DISEASES OF THE KIDNEYS.—Diseases of the kidneys are of far less frequency than is generally supposed. There is a very general belief that any illness that is accompanied with irregularity of the secretions from the kidneys is ample evidence of disease of these organs. When, however, we understand that the fluid portions of the waste matters from the body are mainly passed out of the system through the urinary passages, and that the quantity and character of these effete matters depend or are influenced by a variety of circumstances, not inconsistent with perfect health, we shall find little cause for anxiety, on account of the varied and peculiar appearances of the discharges. Not only is the quantity and appearance of these secretions affected by what we eat and drink, and by extremes of heat and cold, but even more by mental impressions. Any nervous excitement, as fear, anxiety, grief or anger, frequently causes an entire suppression of these secretions for hours. There is a popular dread of what is commonly called "kidney complaint," and when a nervous man is suffering from any ailment that he cannot define; if he can locate a dull pain in the region of the kidneys, and if he notices that the urine is highly colored, and that there is a sediment on the bottom of the vessel in the morning, his worst fears are confirmed, and he is ready to invest in any, or all, of the advertised specifics for kidney diseases. It is not to be wondered at that venders of quack medicines of this sort can procure any number of genuine certificates from well-known and reputable persons, who feel certain that they have been saved from untimely death by these wonderful preparations. I believe that most physicians will agree with me in the opinion that not more than one person in five who seeks medical advice, under the impression that he has kidney disease, has any serious trouble of that sort. Such persons are usually dyspeptics, and treatment appropriate for that disease usually cures the kidney trouble. But kidney diseases are not infrequent, and, when neglected, are likely to have a painful and fatal termination. I should, therefore, regret to have any well-grounded fears set at rest by anything I have written on this subject. It is the duty of every person to promptly seek the best medical advice in all cases of doubt.—Hall's Journal of Health.

The "Year Without a Summer."

We continue to receive occasional inquires concerning the "year in which there was no summer." Some persons appear to have a wrong idea as to the time. It was the year 1816. It has been called the "year without a summer;" for there was sharp frost in every month. There are old farmers still living in Connecticut who remember it well. It was known as the "year without a summer." The farmers used to refer to it as "eighteen hundred and starve to death." January was mild, as was also February, with the exception of a few days. The greater part of March was cold and boisterous. April opened warm, but grew colder as it advanced, ending with snow and ice and winter cold. In May ice formed half an inch thick, buds and flowers were frozen and corn killed. Frost, ice and snow were common in June. Almost every green thing was killed, and the fruit was nearly all destroyed. Snow fell to the depth of three inches in New York and Massachusetts, and ten inches in Maine. July was accompanied with frost and ice. On the 5th ice was formed of the thickness of window glass in New York, New England, and Pennsylvania, and corn was nearly all destroyed in certain sections. In August ice formed half an inch thick. A cold northwest wind prevailed nearly all summer.

Corn was so frozen that a great deal was cut down and dried for fodder. Very little ripened in New England, even here in Connecticut, and scarcely any even in the Middle States. Farmers were obliged to pay $4 or $5 a bushel for corn of 1816, for seed for the next spring's planting. The first two weeks of September were mild, the rest of the month was cold, with frost, and ice formed a quarter of an inch thick. October was more than usually cold, with frost and ice. November was cold and blustering, with snow enough for good sleighing. December was quite mild and comfortable.—Hartford Times.

Animal Reasoning.

A correspondent of Nature, writing from Cambridge, Mass., says: A lady, a friend of mine, was at one time a matron of a hospital for poor women and children, which was maintained by subscription. One of the inmates was a blind girl who was there not as a patient, but temporarily till a home could be found for her. She had learned to feed herself, and at meal times a tray containing her dinner was placed on her knees as she sat in a comfortable chair for her special convenience in feeding herself. One day while she was eating, the pet cat of the establishment placed herself before the girl and looked long and earnestly at her, so earnestly that the matron, fearing that the animal meditated some mischief to the girl, took her out of the room. Again the next day, at the same hour, the cat entered the room, but this time walked quietly to the girl's side, reared herself on her hind legs, and, noiselessly, stealthily reached out her paw to the plate, selected and seized a morsel that pleased her, and, silently as she came, departed to enjoy her stolen meal! The girl never noticed her loss, and, when told of it by her companions, laughed very heartily. It is evident that the cat, from observation, had entirely satisfied herself that the girl could not see, and, by a process of reasoning, decided she could steal a good dinner by this practical use of her knowledge.

Plurality of Inhabited Worlds.

"This world, this planet upon which we live," says Flammarion, the French astronomer, "is only a grain of dust in the mighty immensity of space." And in his admirable work on the plurality of inhabited worlds he advances the theory that God has created living beings on every planet and satellite in the heavens. Indeed, the astronomers generally agree with him that as this earth, which is but a mere atom in the vast expanse of the universe, is inhabited, the presumption is that other worlds of more importance than ours in point of magnitude are also inhabited by beings with life and intelligence like us. In short, the earth has no marked pre-eminence in the solar system to entitle it to the only inhabited world. Astronomically speaking, the other planets are arranged as well as it is as abodes of life. Even the sun with all its heat, is supposed to be inhabited by mortals physically suited to dwell on it, for an omnipotent God, who could create the sun itself, could also create people capable of living on it.

If the universe remains to man only a great material mechanism, moved by physical forces, nature is nothing in his eye but a gigantic laborartory, where the elements are mingled blindly under the most various and casual forms; in a word, if the admirable and magnificent science of the heavens confines the efforts of the human mind eternally to the geometry of the heavenly bodies, the science would never attain its real end, and that it would stop at the moment of reaping the fruit of its immense labors. It remains supremely incomplete if the universe was never anything to it but an assemblage of inert bodies floating in space under the action of material forces.

The philosopher must go farther. He must not confine himself to seeing under a more or less distinct form the great body of nature.

We live on a world which is no exception among the heavenly bodies, and which we have no reason to believe has received the least privilege. It is the third of the planets which revolve round the sun, and one of the smallest among them; without going beyond our system, other planets are much more important than it in the mechanism of the solar system. Jupiter, for instance, is 1,414 times greater, and Saturn 734 times greater. While it appears to us the most important of the universe, it is in reality lost in the immensity of the worlds which people the heavens, and the whole creation does not guess at its existence.

Of the planets of our own system there are only four, the inhabitants of which, if they realy have any, can know the earth exists; those are Mercury, Venus, Mars, and Jupiter; and even to this last one it is most of the time invisible in the solar aureola. Now, while the earth is thus lost amid worlds more important than itself, the other worlds are in the same conditions of habitability as those that we observe on the earth. On these planets, as on our own, the rays of the sun pour forth heat and light; on them, as here, years, months, and days succeed each other, drawing with them the seasons which, from time to time, support the conditions of existence; on them as here, a transparent atmosphere envelopes the inhabited surface with a protecting climate, gives rise to meteoric movements, and developes those beauties which celebrate sunrise and sunset. On them as here, vaporous clouds rise from the ocean with the deep waves, and spreading themselves under the heaven, carry dew to the parched-up regions. This great movement of life which circulates over the earth is not confined to this little planet; the same cases develope elsewhere the same effects, and on many among these strange worlds, far from noticing the absence of the riches with which the earth is endowed, an abundance of wealth of which ours only possesses the first fruits is observed. By the side of these bodies, the earth is essentially an inferior world in many respects: from the unsatisfactory conditions of geological stability of which the terrestrial spheroid reminds us, its surface being only a thin pellicle, to the fatal laws which govern life on this earth where death reigns upreme.

If, on the one hand, the other worlds have conditions of habitability quite as powerful, if not more so, as the terrestrial conditions, on the other hand, the earth, considered in itself, appears to us like an overflowing cup whence life issues on all sides. It seems that to create is so necessary to the order of nature, that the smallest piece of matter of suitable properties does not exist without serving as an abode of living beings.—Exchange.

"Muggy Weather."

This is a very expressive phrase for the "dog-days," as they average, and the other description tells us so exactly our sensations under the clammy air and close temperature. "Mug" in provincial English dialect means "fog," but this probably is traced to the older Irish word meaning a cup, as our word does now. So that "muggy weather" is weather in a cup—close weather. The New York Mercantile Journal explains why this kind of weather is always so uncomfortable:

"The evaporation of moisture from our skin cools us. Evaporation, as is well known, is always a cooling process. The heat, from being 'sensible,' becomes 'latent,' as the philosophers say—that is, the heat is used up in making the vapor and passes off in it, just as the heat of the fire is used up in making steam, and really passes off in that.

"When this process of evaporation is rapid from our system, we are rapidly cooled, and though the weather is warm, are made comfortable.

"But it can be rapid only when the air is dry. Air already saturated with nearly as much moisture as it will hold, can, of course, take up very little more from the evaporation of objects on the surface of the earth. In such weather we must go on as best we can without the comfort of this cooling process.

"The mug is a natural 'hygrometer,' somewhat rude, it is true, to tell us how much moisture there is in the atmosphere. A real hygrometer only tells the same thing more accurately."

Archibald Forbes on American Politeness and Canadian Slowness.

"The English have the idea that the American people are a race of ill-mannered, bad-tempered people. But they never were more mistaken in their lives. There are no bad manners in this country. What has been mistaken for bad manners is the abruptness. One says to a ticket agent: 'Can you sell me a ticket to such a place?' He replies: 'Two-fifty,' and hands one out to you. You instantly think: 'Well, you are an ill-tempered fellow not to answer my question,' but on reflection you become satisfied that is the most practical way of doing business. You ask a man to move a little. He does not hear you and he says 'Aye,' instead of 'Beg your pardon, sir.' But as soon as he catches your meaning he is all politeness and takes an interest in your welfare."

"Then, do you consider the Americans a sympathetic people?"

"Not sympathetic, but human. I missed a train in the West. The brutes in England would have laughed at me and said, 'You'll be in time for the next one.' But what did they say out West? 'Oh, that is too bad,' and immediately helped me to get out of the difficulty as much as was in their power. I have met no brutes in this country. At first I thought the hotel clerk was one. He will answer your questions in a mechanical sort of way, and throw a key at you, as much as to say: 'What the devil do you want, anyway?' I left the Tremont House, in Boston, on this account. But experience has taught me a lesson, and I now think the hotel clerk is the traveling man's best friend. His manners are abrupt because the public doesn't want to hear two words when one will suffice. But if you want to find out anything, to get anything, or to have anything done, you go to the same clerk whom you have thought churlish, and he does it for you readily and satisfactorily."

"Have you noticed any peculiar American habits?"

"Yes, there is one thing, and that is the disgusting habit Americans have of clearing their throats. Canadians are also peculiar. They never shut a door. I asked a boy in a hotel what a door was for, and he replied, 'To go in by.' But speaking of Canadians reminds me of my trip through Canada. It was one continual supper—and speech-making. I could not get away. The Canadians are genial, gentlemanly men; men of sterling character, who I believe mean well. But they are insufferably slow. They admire the Americans, and when an American happens among them they receive him with open arms—can not do too much for him. But when they cross the border they are dignity personified and keep the Americans at the elbow joint, as if every man they met wanted to rob them."—New York Tribune, Interview.

President and Mrs. Polk.

President Polk was nearly 50 years of age when he was inaugurated, and was no novice in public life, having served for fourteen consecutive years in Congress, and for two years as Governor of the State of Tennessee. He was a spare man, of unpretending appearance and middle stature, with a rather small head, a full, angular brow, penetrating dark gray eyes, and a firm mouth. His hair, which he wore long and brushed back behind his ears, was touched with silver when he entered the White House, and gray when he left it. He was a worthy and well-qualified member of the fraternity of Freemasons and a believer in the creed of the Methodists, although, out of deference to the religious opinions of his wife, he attended worship with her at the Rev. Mr. Sprole's Presbyterian Church. Calm, cold and intrepid in his moral character, he was ignorant of the beauty of moral uprightness in the conduct of public affairs—ambitious of power, and successful in the pursuit of it. He was very methodical and remarkably industrious, always finding time to listen patiently to the stories of those who came to him as petitioners of patronage and place. But his arduous labors impaired his health and shortened his life. Before his term of office had half expired, his friends were pained to witness his shortened and enfeebled step, and the air of languor and exhaustion which sat upon him.

Mrs. Polk was a strict Presbyterian, and she shunned what she regarded as "the vanities of the world" whenever it was possible for her to do so. She did not possess the queenly grace of Mrs. Madison, or the warm-hearted hospitality of Mrs. Tyler, but she presided over the White House with great dignity. She was of medium height and size, with very black hair, dark eyes and complexion, and formal yet graceful deportment. At the inauguration of her husband, she wore a black-silk dress, a long black-velvet cloak with a deep cape, trimmed with fringe and tassels, and a purple-velvet bonnet, trimmed with a satin ribbon. She would not permit dancing at the White House, but she did all in her power to render the administration of Mr. Polk popular. One morning a lady found her reading. "I have many books presented to me by the writers," said she, "and I try to read them all. At present this is not possible; but this evening the author of this book dines with the President, and I could not be so unkind as to appear wholly ignorant and unmindful of his gift." At one of her evening receptions a gentleman remarked: "Madam, you have a very genteel assemblage to-night." "Sir," replied Mrs. Polk, with perfect good humor, but very significantly, "I never have seen it otherwise."—The Atlantic.

A Natural Mistake.

It was a foggy afternoon, and the rain had begun to fall. Lower Broadway was crowded with drays, 'buses, and vehicles of every description, drivers were shouting at each other, and there was a scene of great confusion. People stood upon the sidewalks waiting in the rain for an opportunity to cross the street, and among the impatient throng was an elderly-looking lady apparently much troubled by the situation, who, after watching in vain for a policeman, finally made an effort to cross the street, but retreated in alarm. Just then a portly middle-aged gentleman of benign countenance stepped up and touched the lady on the shoulder. "It is useless for you to wait or to look for a policeman," he said. "It is a pity that an old lady like yourself should be kept standing in this crowd, so if you will take my arm I will cross"—here he paused, for the face of the lady was turned toward him, and he beheld the round, rosy countenance of a young lady just out of her teens. Her bright black eyes spoke volumes of astonishment and indignation, and with an additional upward turn to her naturally retrousse nose she mockingly replied: "Old lady, indeed!" and picking up her dainty skirts she made a lively run across the street, gaining the opposite side in safety, and was quickly out of sight. The polite but dazed Samaritan stood still for a moment in silent wonder, and then walked slowly away, whistling softly to himself. The secret of the blunder was simply this: The young lady was completely enveloped in an antique Mother Hubbard's cloak, whose heavy folds hung straight down from its wide, old-fashioned yoke. Upon her head was an immense coal-scuttle scoop bonnet, the overarching brim covering her face and head and the sides of the bonnet were held down by broad strings, hid in an immense bow at one side. A large Mother Hubbard bag of black satin hung from her arm, and with her back to the crowd she looked as if she might be her own great-grandmother.—New York World.

How to Be "Intense."

But while the female æsthete is simply ridiculous, the male of the species is absolutely offensive. He lisps and ambles; his locks flow uncombed over his collar; but when no one is by, he is not above investigating the contents of a tankard of Bass' ale, of which he partakes freely. He generally carries an artificial lily in his hand, at which he sniffs pathetically now and then. He has been caricatured unmercifully in the illustrated papers, and even on the stage; but he heeds it not. He goes on lisping and sniffing, well aware that his new method of getting into notice and emerging from the ranks of obscurity to which his own incapacity has hitherto confined him is the easiest and cheapest of all. To show the extent to which the æsthetes have encroached upon the domains of common sense and propriety, it is only necessary to mention one or two of the vagaries to which they have given vent of late. A lady of high repute and much beloved and respected, but who has gone in for the æsthetic phase, determined to act up to the character she had assumed, and at a soiree given at her house, after having treated her friends to a few melodious twangs upon the ancient lyre kept in her husband's studio to assist him in painting his antique groups, she disappeared from the room. Presently she returned with a crystal platter on which was an antique goblet upside down. Going round to each guest she whispered in a hollow tone, "Supper is ready," at which announcement the guest who accepted the invitation to descend to the supper room was expected to turn the goblet. The male æsthete, on his side, keeps a taper burning before the portrait of the lady who pleases him best; never owns his love, but goes on sighing and moaning and dining and supping at the same time, with the most self-satisfied calm imaginable. An effort is now being made by the leaders of fashion to crush this affectation, which is enervating the youth of both sexes and converting some of the salons of London into the semblance of the mortuary chapels of the Campo Santo at Pisa.—London Hour.

Our representative lately learned the following from Mr. Carl Siegmund, cor. We consulted many physicians and used all kinds of medicines, but in vain. At last, St. Jacobs Oil effected the happiest results. It cured my daughter.

Carlyle and Newton.

"F. W. R." sends to the London Times the following authentic version of the burning of the manuscript of the first volume of Mr. Carlyle's "French Revolution," given by Mrs. Carlyle many years ago: "When Mr. Carlyle had completed the first volume, Mr. J. S. Hill called on him and stated that he had heard he was engaged in writing the history of the French revolution, adding that he had himself intended to write on the subject, and that he would be glad to see what was already done, in order that he might judge of the advisability of commencing the work or not. Mr. Carlyle readily lent his manuscript; but it happened shortly afterward that Mr. Mill's cook had occasion to bake some cakes, and finding the precious manuscript lying about, she concluded that she might turn it to good account, and accordingly, partly as fuel and partly as lining for the cake tins, she used up the whole of the manuscript. "Mr. Carlyle never keeps notes," said Mrs. Carlyle, "but gets all his materials ready, works till he has everything in his head and then winds it out like silk from a reel." Horrified at the accident Mr. Mill and Mrs. Taylor called on the great historian. "Such a thing never happened before," said Mr. Mill. "Yes, though," answered Mr. Carlyle, "Newton and his dog Diamond." "True, but Newton went mad over it." "Well, well, we shall hardly be so bad as that," said Carlyle; and he soon afterward began again at the beginning, scarcely saying a word about his misfortune at the time, but afterward, as the work progressed, grumbling about it often."

A Mad Hunting Scene.

The Chicago correspondent of the Cleveland Leader writes out (from a returned army officer's description) the following thrilling incident of a grand buffalo-hunt by the Crow Indians:

After riding over mountains for two days, the Crows came upon a fine herd of buffaloes in a narrow valley near by the Yellowstone. There were four hundred Indians and four thousand buffaloes.

The Crows had been forced by fear of starvation to take to the chase, and the keen hunger they were suffering only sharpened their eagerness for a tilt with their fellow-nomads, the noble bison.

The game stampeded down the valley in the direction of the Yellowstone. The chase was hotly followed, half a dozen buffaloes biting the dust before the river was reached.

One of the most vehement of the pursuers, who had distinguished himself for bravery in two or three fights with the Sioux, fell from his pony in the midst of the flying herd, and was trampled to death by the frantic beasts.

The Yellowstone, a roaring, rushing river even at the lowest tide, was booming with the regular summer freshet, the outpour of the melting snows in the high mountains.

When the river was reached the game made a bold stand, and for a time it seemed doubtful which held the mastery; but the incessant fusillade from four hundred rifles, together with the desperate proximity of the formidable battalion, drove the herd in dismay into the roaring torrent.

Beside themselves with the excitement of the moment, the Indians urged their ponies into the stream, unwilling that even a flood should spoil their frenzied sport, or cut them off from their game.

The terrific current, made tumultuous from the huge piles of rock here and there in the channel, whirled buffaloes, ponies and Indians along at a bewildering velocity, until the thousands of beasts were rolling and writhing in inextricable confusion.

In the dizzy evolutions of the horses and riders, the latter were left to struggle for themselves in the water, and to be jammed to death between the surging mass of drowning beasts.

Some, who saw the danger in time and turned shoreward, found safety on terra firma; but those who ventured far enough to be embraced by the sweeping, restless tide, and to become involved in the tangle of struggling animals, were all drowned.

The story brought to the post was that thirty Indians and fifty ponies were drowned, beside five hundred or a thousand buffaloes.

Profit, $1,200.

She has done her own housework for a year since, without the loss of a day, and I want everybody to know it, for their benefit."—N. E. Farmer.

Medical Adventure.

Medical adventure, which during the last century has left few of the physical penetralia of humanity unexplored, has just conquered the last delicate obstacle to the rehabilitation of the body. Operations involving the cutting of the throat and the introduction of food by artificial means were thought to be the utmost venture that science would ever successfully make in replacing the wasted, wounded, or decaying forces of nature. But a Vienna physician, Professor Billroth, has invaded the stomach of a patient, cut a cancer from the intricate tissues, and the subject is not only alive but in better health than ever. Before making the experiment the doctor practiced exhaustively on the stomach of dogs, removing various parts, restoring the covering, and succeeded in establishing the basis of his scientific principle of resection. The human subject was a woman, and the cancer enormous, leaving some doubt in the operator's mind as to the elasticity of the stomach to adjust itself after the cutting out of such a mass. But no difficulty was experienced. The woman began by drinking milk, and graduated to more substantial alimentary nourishment. The operation involved the opening of the stomach, the cutting of the masses of tissue-like covering, the removal of several pounds of cancerated accumulation, the reclosing of the aperture, and the provision for artificial distension of the new coating. Physicians the world over will be delighted if not surprised by this wonderful performance, removing as it does another from the list of generally supposed fatal maladies.—Philadelphia Times.

The Pleasures of Business.

No human mind is contented without occupation. No human soul is satisfied without an aim or purpose in life. The greatest success in life consists not in the mere accumulation of riches, but in being able to acquire wealth with a disposition to apply it in such a manner that it shall be a comfort and blessing to others—not in the mere giving away of money, but in putting people in a way to labor and help themselves. There is no pleasure in oppression. There is no joy in grinding and exacting gold from the poor; but there is a great deal of genuine satisfaction in being able to offer steady and honorable employment to the many willing hands that have nothing to do. One of the greatest enjoyments of the prosperous business man consists in being able to comfortably provide for the many employes in his house and manufactory. In doing this he is fulfilling his obligations to society; he becomes a useful and honored citizen; business to him is real pleasure; he enjoys his successes, when they are fairly won because he feels that he deserves them.

When a business man has the right kind of a purpose in life he enjoys his occupation, he feels a just and worthy pride in his prosperity, he is pleased with the respect and gratitude of those whom he directs and controls in the management of his affairs, and he feels that in benefitting himself he is conferring a favor upon others.

Grateful Women.

None receive so much benefit, and none are so profoundly grateful and show such an interest in recommending Hop Bitters as women. It is the only remedy peculiarly adapted to the many ills the sex is almost universally subject to. Chills and fever, indigestion or deranged liver, constant or periodical sick headaches, weakness in the back or kidneys, pain in the shoulders and different parts of the body, a feeling of lassitude and despondency, are all readily removed by these Bitters.—Courant.

Cold and Magnetism.

An investigation, conducted in the physical laboratory of Harvard University, has led to the discovery of the remarkable fact that intense cold can deprive magnetized steel bars of nearly all the magnetism that may have been imparted to them. The intense cold was produced by solid carbonic acid. This fact has an important bearing upon observations of the magnetic condition of the earth, taken in high latitudes; for what appear to be daily and yearly changes in the earth's magnetism may be due in large part to conditions of temperature, which affect the magnets used in the observations. It also must be concluded that the molecular condition of steel is changed by great cold.—Boston Advertiser.

Emmert's Extract of Tar and Wild Cherry has been used for twenty years, and during that time has saved many very valuable lives. Do not neglect a cough or cold until it is too late. An Old Tragedy Revived.

The Princess Caroline, of Denmark, who recently died in her eighty-eighth year, was a second cousin to Queen Victoria. The deceased Princess was the daughter of King Frederick VI., of Denmark, and the wife of Prince Ferdinand, of the same house. She had been a widow since 1863. Her father's mother was the Princess Caroline Matilda, of England, and a sister of George III. She was born in 1751, and married when only fifteen to Christian VII., King of Denmark. In 1768 she became the mother of the father of the lady who has just died. Introduced when very young into a dissolute court, she was giddy and imprudent, but, as she always protested, not guilty of infidelity to her husband. She was very popular, except with the Queen dowager and another beldame of the royal house. They were absolutists in theory, while the young Queen favored a representative government and raised Struensee, the Court Physician, to the position of Prime Minister. She showed him many favors and was doubtless far from discreet. Finally the dowagers and their tools induced the weak-minded King to believe that his wife had betrayed him. She was obviously more fond of the brilliant young Minister than of her besotted spouse, but, as she claimed they were only friends. Nevertheless, Struensee was arrested January 16, 1772, and, with his friend Brandt, soon after beheaded. He died penitently, acknowledging his worldliness and other follies, though he made no confession of the main charge. The Queen was taken into custody at the same time, and would have been executed also, had not the British Embassador interposed. As it was, she was kept in captivity during the remainder of her short and unhappy life, which ended May 10, 1775. A pathetic letter addressed by her to her brother George III. is emphatic in her assertion of her innocence. It is generally believed that she wrote the truth.—Cincinnati Gazette.

Neighborhood Nippings.

Hicksville is to have an addition to her school building this summer.

Rev. Jabez Shaffer, once a resident of this county, but lately of Elkhart county, will locate at Rome City.

A teacher near Elkhart recently became crazy on the subject of elocution and oratory. He fled to the woods, and when found was mounted on a stump and holding forth in the most approved fashion.

A boy in Huntington county, while riding a blind horse to a neighbor's, carelessly allowed the horse to stumble over a bank about eight feet high. He was thrown into a ditch containing water, his neck broken, and the horse falling upon him, was also killed.

Mr. Fred. C. Boltz, recently received a check for $2,500 from R. M. Boardman, secretary of the Commonwealth lottery company, of Louisville Kentucky. The money will be forwarded to Mr. F. C. Walters, of Logansport, who purchased of Mr. Boltz one-half of the whole ticket drawing $5,000 March 31.—Ft. Wayne Gazette.

Michael Callahan, a tramp, recently fell into a vat of boiling glycerine at the establishment of Emory & Sons, Cincinnati. He went into the building to lounge about during the rain, sat down on the edge of a vat, and from some unknown cause fell into it backwards. Before he could be rescued he was completely parboiled, and soon died.

The small-pox has not entirely disappeared from the vicinity of Milford. Two new cases are reported in the country near that place. At other places it is still raging. At Glover's Gap, W. Va., it is still very bad. The physicians are all sick and hardly enough people can be found to bury the dead. But it is believed the disease will not be allowed to spread farther.

The Goshen Democrat says: "W. H. Kiblinger, an enterprising hardware merchant, of Auburn, Indiana, occupied one-half of a page of the COURIER, for his spring advertisement. More than all our merchants put together." And it is needless to inform friend Beane that Mr. Kiblinger has a trade corresponding to the size of his advertisement. You ought to see the people come in and "walk back" to inspect his immense stock of hardware. He recently sold two and one half tons of nails and one and a half tons of lead to one party in Garrett.

A young man in New Philadelphia, Ohio, recently applied to the probate judge for a marriage license, but could not for the life of him remember the lady's name. He scratched his head, stammered and studied, but the name refused to come. Finally he told the judge to make it "the same as his'n," as it soon would be that, but the judge would not give him the license under the circumstances, and the fellow trudged home and came back in a couple of hours. He had the name this time on a piece of paper, got the license and went away happy.

The following are the names and locations of the M. E. ministers of this vicinity for the coming year: Y. B. Meredith, presiding elder; Berry street, C. G. Hudson; Wayne street, A. E. Hahin; Centenary, C. W. Church; Third street, supplied by S. D. Miller; Huntertown, J. H. McMahon; Harlon, H. C. Meyers; Auburn, H. J. Norris; Waterloo, H. J. Lacey; Garrett, to be supplied; Leo, J. A. Lewellon; Fremont, G. W. Howe; Angola, P. Carland; New Haven, P. S. Cook; Coesse, E. P. Church; Arcola, B. Sawyer; Decatur, M. S. Metts; Monroe, I. J. Bicknell; Geneva, supplied by C. H. Murray; Sheldon, J. H. Slack; Monroeville, W. R. Jones; Ossian, J. L. Ramsey; Bluffton, H. J. Meck; Worthington, I. N. Rhoads; Roanoke, D. F. Stright; Markle, Jas. M. Woolpert; Huntington, M. Mahin; W. F. Yocum, president Fort Wayne college and member of Wayne street quarterly conference; A. Albro, professor in Fort Wayne college and member of the Berry street quarterly conference.

We clip the following from the Indianapolis Herald of April 16: Representative Moody may be a bitter partisan, as is often said of members of both political parties, but he certainly is entitled to the full credit of heading off and defeating a slick piece of jobbery, and a great fraud on the tax-payers of the state, by squelching the Cincinnati ballot-box swindle. The bill recommending the adoption of this box, if successful, would have cost the tax-payers $75,000, and really would not have mended matters toward preventing election frauds. Mr. Moody showed up the matter so forcibly and plainly in a twenty-minutes speech, that it effectually cooked its mutton, so to speak. The price asked for each box was $25, while representative Moody showed conclusively that it did not cost the manufacturers one-fifth the sum, and also dispelled the fallacious glamour of its infallibility, by proving that there were men serving out sentences in the penitentiary for committing frauds on this same box. Though the agents of the manufacturers were on hand, and labored indefatigably to secure its adoption, the sledge-hammer arguments of the member from DeKalb silenced their batteries.

Our New School-house.

EDITORS COURIER: Not having heard anything for several weeks on the subject of re-building the school-house, as a citizen of the town, a property holder, and having children to educate, I would like to know whether we are to have a respectable place for our children to attend school. Was the effort recently put forth only spasmodic, and that which was done go for naught? Shall we be compelled for another term or two to rent business rooms on the most public streets, have our children from morning to night gadding around liquor shops, the public streets, in the business places and in the very places in town where they should not be permitted, for one, two or more years? If such is to be the case, the result will be very detrimental to the interests of our town. I for one would be glad to leave the place if those are to be the school privileges of the town; others feel the same way, and where is there a man in the whole country who will settle in our town under such circumstances? Those who are looking for a place where they can educate their children will never look at our town, but will go to another place where they do have decent places in which to hold schools. I know of one man who has bought in another place for just this reason.

I mingle somewhat with the citizens, and I have yet to find one who is opposed to the re-building of the school-house, or paying taxes sufficient to re-build. Then what are our school trustees waiting for? Why do they not go ahead? I understand they have about $5,000 insurance money on hand; the town authorities have issued to them $6,000 in bonds, and it seems they have no excuse for this delay. If they (the school-board) have not the stamina to go ahead and do something, let them step down and out. Let it be understood that if we do not have a good, respectable school-house in our town our property will depreciate at least ten per cent, and this depreciation to every property owner will exceed five times the tax necessary to build a $20,000 school-house. In a business and property point of view every person in town ought to urge the re-building of the school-house this summer. I am for AUBURN.

Buggies For Sale.

J. H. and H. K. Leas, of Waterloo, Indiana, are now offering their stock of Jackson buggies to the general public. These buggies are made from selected material, and are warranted for one year. Their goods are all new, and will be sold cheap. Give them a call. 16 tf.

New Dentist.

Having opened an office in Auburn, I take this means to ask a share of public patronage. I am prepared to do all kinds of work in the way of dental surgery and plate work. Gold and other filling a specialty. All work promptly done, and in a careful, pains-taking manner. Give me a call. Office over Mrs. Jones' store, first door south of Boot-uo side-Down. S. D. Myers.

Tramps Took 'Em.

Some tramps broke into a freight-car at the Junction Sunday night, and, after opening several boxes of goods, struck what they were after. When they left, five dozen pairs of socks were dangling at their belts. After getting the socks, they stole a keg of beer from Chris. Baker, and had a high old time. They evidently spent the night in Mr. Spangler's barn, and although the agent, Mr. Martin, found a few of the tramps next morning, a diligent search failed to reveal any socks. The five dozen socks had evidently gone ahead to prepare a place where the modest tramps could make the exchange of their old socks for new ones.

Assessors' Duties.

Our attention has been called to some of the duties of assessors under the present assessment laws. Heretofore it it has been the custom in most places for the assessor to take a list of the property, etc., and merely require the person assessed to sign his name to the list. Some assessors have, however, required the one assessed to take an oath, to the effect that the list contains a full and correct statement of his property. Under the present law it appears that assessors are compelled to exact an oath of each and every one who is assessed, and no assessor has a right to omit this important part of his duty. We mention the matter so that it may be fairly understood and when the assessor comes around each one may know just what is expected of him, as the law, for some years, has required each person assessed, to be sworn.

Obituary.

We are called to the painful task of chronicling the death of one of the oldest settlers and best know citizens of the county, Mrs. Rebecca Coats, wife of the late Dr. Noyce Coats, died at her home in Wilmington township, April 18, 1881, at the age of 54 years, 8 months and 2 days. Mrs. Coats was born in Youngstown, Ohio, August 11, 1826, and moved into this county when about the age of 20 years. Two years later she was married to Dr. Coats and has since resided in the neighborhood in which she lived at the time of her death. Her death was preceded by a long and painful illness. Both herself and her late husband were well known throughout this section of country for their liberality, kindness and many acts of a friendly and neighborly character. Mrs. Coats leaves three children to mourn her loss, C. J. Coats Esq., of Butler, Worth Coats, and Letitia A., their only daughter, at present remaining at the old homestead.

—The legislature adjourned without passing a registry law or the fee-and-salary bill. It is very apparent that it was imperatively necessary to go to the expense of holding a special election in March so that the republicans could enact these measures of reform.

—We wish to call the attention of the farmers in general to the superior qualities of Mr. B. Allen's norman stallion.

—We have heard the names of F. D. Ryan, and Jos. Girardot mentioned as probable candidates for town treasurer.

—A young man, brother-in-law of Wm. Forsbey, will start a barber shop over Sim. Tarney's meat market next week.

—We hear that Mrs. John Bunch was adjudged insane last week. We are not in posession of the facts as to the cause.

— Before you buy your boots and shoes, go to Hague & Raut's and see their new goods. They have the largest stock in the county. 15 2w.

—Schaab, Beugnot & Co. will sell you dry-goods, clothing, carpets, groceries, etc., cheaper than any other store in the county.

—Schaab, Beugnot & Co. have as good and choice a stock of family groceries as can be found in the county, at rock bottom prices.

—There will be a hard-tack social at the residence of our friend Charley Beugnot this evening. A general invitation is extended to all.

—The McNeil family played to a fair audience on Tuesday evening of this week. The entertainment was first-class in every particular.

—Miss Rosa Shaffer did not begin her school this week, not being sufficiently recovered from her recent illness. She will begin two weeks later.

—Charley Klotz' little boy is improving slowly. He fell from a hay mow and not from the Presbyterian church steps as we stated last week.

—S. M. Knott, of Butler township, has been investing in a fine Kentucky short horn bull. He is also the owner of some fine Poland-China pigs.

—Last Friday, the 15th day of April, A. D. 1881, we had a large snow fall. In fact it came down already made up; all the boys had to do was to pick 'em up and throw them.

—Several of our young married fellows went to the "gift show" expecting to carry home an outfit of furniture, &c. but they returned home disappointed. P. S.—John Leasure did't attend.

—The matrimonial market is very dull at present. Clerk Baxter has issued only two permits since April 9, viz: Cornelius Platter to Eliza Davis, Peter Sheilhouse to Catharine E. Maynard.

—If you want the best Bettsville, Ohio, Snowflake lime, plastering-hair or cement, call on Samuel Beck, Waterloo, Indiana. You will find that Sam will give you a good article, good weight and good prices. 16-3w.

Auburn Lodge 116, I. O. O. F.

This lodge will celebrate the sixty-second anniversary of American Odd Fellowship by a social at their hall on Tuesday evening, April 26, to which all Odd Fellows, their families and old friends of the order are cordially invited. The exercises will consist of an oration by R. Wes. McBride, and short addresses by other Odd Fellows, including singing and a general good time. No cake, no ticket, no money.

Committee.

Cured.

Mr. Jonathan Swander, of Richland township, called our attention the other day, to a strange case, by which, he has been a sufferer. About three years ago last January, Mr. Swander hurt his right hand, and it soon afterwards began to swell along the middle finger. He applied poultices and other remedies, which seemed to scatter it, and the soreness settled in the palm awhile, and from there, went to the inside of the wrist. Here it finally broke—not a running sore, but apparently nearly dry—and several large lumps of dryish matter (some of them as large as hickory nuts) were taken out. Soon after this, it returned to the palm, where it broke out in several places in the form of a circle. Different physicians examined the afflicted hand and arm, but did not seem to agree as to what the disease was, and Mr. Swander was continually trying some means to effect a cure. There was no great amount of pain, but the disease did not yield fully to any treatment. In June last, Dr. Sears began treating Mr. Swander, by thoroughly cleansing his blood, and such other treatment as the case seemed to require. Local treatment of the crippled hand was also continued with ceaseless preservance, and was at last successful. Since last New Years, it has been comparatively cured. The sores are healed and the swelling gone, and he has a fair use of his hand. Although the thumb and fore finger are still somewhat stiff, Mr. Swander thinks it still far better than no hand at all, as some of the best known physicians in the country had at times thought he would be obliged to have his arm amputated. The case is rather a strange one, and, after suffering several years, Mr. Swander is, of course, grateful to his physician for the successful treatment that has saved him the use of his hand.

Suicide.

Justus Rinehart, an old German living about three miles west of Waterloo, committed suicide last Friday evening under the following circumstances: He had recently sold his farm, being obliged to do so on account of his debts, this being the only course by which he could save any of it. It seemed as if his misfortunes preyed on his mind. He had taken hurried trips to Angola, Pleasant Lake, Butler and Ft. Wayne without any apparent purpose. Though not an intemperate man, it was noticed that he had lately been drinking some. On Friday last, he came back from his trip to Fort Wayne, stopped off at Waterloo, and in the evening went west toward his old home, walking on the railroad track. It appeared that he went to the barn on the old place, went in and lay down, and some time in the evening or during the night, shot himself with a new revolver he had recently purchased. Mr. Dilgard, who occupies the place, went to the barn in the morning, and, hearing a sound as of hard breathing, opened the door and saw Rinehart lying as if asleep. Failing to awake him by calling, he approached near enough to see the revolver which Rinehart still clutched in his hand. He took the revolver from him, and as the prostrate man seemed to breathe with great difficulty, he went to a neighbor's for assistance. When help was procured, it was noticed that Rinehart was injured about the head, and examination showed two pistol wounds. He was taken into the house, where he soon died. Dr. Chamberlain, of Waterloo, was sent for, and the injuries examined. It was found that Rinehart had shot himself twice, the first time the ball struck the skull three or four inches about the right ear and glanced off. The second entered the skull lower and more to the front, going directly through the brain, so that a probe would strike the inner side of the skull on the opposite of the head. Both shots were fired with the weapon close to the head, as the hair was burned at both places.

CORONER'S INQUEST.

I, the undersigned coroner of DeKalb county, state of Indiana, on the 16th day of April, 1881, in Union township, said county and state, and legally authorized to inquire into, and true presentment make, in what manner and by whom, Justus Rinehart, whose body was found dead in said township, supposed to have come to his death by violence. After having examined the body and heard all the evidence, do find that the deceased came to his death by a pistol ball entering his head by his own hand. Given under my hand and seal this 16th day of April, 1881.

J. J. Latson,
Coroner of DeKalb county, Ind.

At Samuel Wildeson's sale last Saturday a glandered horse was bought by a man in the vicinity (whose name we can hardly refrain from mentioning) and offered for sale, Mr. Wildeson being ignorant of the horse's condition. Such carelessness on the part of the person bringing it there, is criminal, and should be treated as such.

A lady member of the "holy band," while praying for John Houser, who, by the way, is afflicted with consumption, asked that the pain be transferred from that gentleman's lungs to her own. And now comes the sequel. A short time after she complained of a severe pain in her lungs which soon passed away through her ears, and at the same time Mr. Houser acknowledged being considerably relieved. The above is chronicled as it came from the lips of a member of the "holy band." Pixie.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

Hon. Stephen Stockwell, who for forty years has been connected with the management of the Boston Journal, has closed his career.

The Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas has affirmed the legality of the election of Frank S. Bond as President of the Reading railroad. This a crushing defeat for Franklin B. Gowen, who was guarded by the McCalmont party.

John T. Raymond, the comedian, was married in Philadelphia to Miss Courtney Barnes, a daughter of Rose Eytinge. The Rev. Robert Collyer, formerly of Chicago, performed the ceremony....Gen. Devens has been reappointed on the bench of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts....The New York brewers, Joseph L. and Louis F. Kuntz, have failed. Their liabilities are $315,000.

It is stated that Jay Gould has purchased the entire interest of Thomas A. Scott in the Texas Pacific road, amounting to nearly $4,000,000. At a meeting of the directors in Philadelphia, Scott resigned the Presidency, and Gould was elected his successor.

New York papers state that there is scarcely a doubt that the body of the late A. T. Stewart is now at rest in the crypt in the Stewart Memorial Cathedral, at Garden City, L. I., and that the most elaborate precautions have been taken against another resurrection.

Sarah Bernhardt was attacked with a congestive chill at the close of the first act of the performance in Philadelphia, and had to be removed to her hotel.

James O'Brien, who swore that he knew H. L. Morey, to whom it was alleged President Garfield wrote the Chinese letter which figured so conspicuously in the campaign, pleaded guilty to perjury in New York, and was sentenced to the penitentiary for eight years.

THE WEST.

A Winona (Minn.) dispatch of the 8th inst. says: "The work of raising the blockade on the west end of the Chicago and Northwestern railroad is proceeding slowly. There still remains 370 miles in a blockaded state. Of this all but fifty miles can be easily raised. The fifty miles consist of ice and frozen snow that will have to be picked step by step. There are from 400 to 500 men at work, and it is thought that two weeks will see the road opened to Pierre, Dak. No trains have been run to Watertown, Dak., since the 20th of January. All stations of the blockaded portion report a scarcity of flour, oil and groceries, but no suffering from the lack of these or other living necessities."

At Princeton, Ind., the safe of T. M. Welborn was blown open and robbed of $5,000, mostly belonging to farmers who had left it for safety....At the closing meeting of Moody and Sankey, in San Francisco, $32,000 was raised to cancel the debt on the building of the Young Men's Christian Association....Ah Luck, a Chinaman, was hanged at Nevada City for murder. He became a Roman Catholic before his death.

The conductors and drivers on the West Division Railway Company, of Chicago, struck for an advance of 20 per cent. in their pay. Over half the city was deprived of street-car facilities for thirty-six hours, and people had to foot it to and from their places of business. The sympathies of the community were with the strikers, and the corporation finally yielded to the demands of the employes....A strike of the journeymen carpenters of Cincinnati resulted in the concession of $2.25 per day by 125 builders.

"The Legion of Honor," a melodrama of exceptional strength, presented by a very strong company, is again put upon the stage at McVicker's, in Chicago, this week. Messrs. Sam Piercy, Lewis Morrison, Forrest Robinson, George C. Davenport and Annie Graham and Louise Dillon personate the principal characters.

Mrs. Charles Ballou, of Saranac, Mich., the far-famed fat woman, known as the "Mammoth Queen," is dead. Her weight when with shows is stated to have been 570 pounds; before death it was 400 pounds....Ben J. Spooner, who was a private soldier in the Mexican war, and led the Eighty-third Indiana regiment in the Rebellion, died last week at Lawrenceburg, Ind. Of late years he was United States Marshal for Indiana....Ju[illegible] John Cheney, the oldest ex-member of C[illegible]gress in the United States, died at Ca[illegible] Winchester, Ohio. He was a Jackson ele[illegible] in 1832, and had held many important offices.

Under the escort of Senators Conkling, Jones, Logan and others, the remains of the late Senator Matt H. Carpenter, of Wisconsin, arrived at Milwaukee on the 9th inst., and were formally delivered to the Governor and Legislature of the State that had elected Mr. Carpenter to the Senate, by Senator Conkling, in behalf of the Senatorial committee. The body lay in state at the Court House, on Sunday, the 10th, and was viewed by 30,000 sorrowing people, after which it was buried in Forest Hill Cemetery, with imposing ceremonies.

Mark Beaubien, one of the early settlers of Chicago, is dead. Fifty years ago he kept a log tavern on the corner of Lake and Market streets. He was twice married and had twenty-three children, fifty-three grandchildren, and more great-grandchildren than he could count. David McKee, who settled at Chicago in 1821, has also just died of old age.

The people of Colorado anticipate an early outbreak by the Utes. Settlers in the Uncompahgre country have petitioned the Government for protection.

Sioux City dispatches of the 14th inst. represent that snow covers the prairies to the depth of one to three feet, and farmers in that section cannot commence plowing for several weeks. An aid society has been formed to distribute relief in the flooded districts, where the destitute number over 5,000. A Yankton dispatch of the 15th states that twenty families residing at a bend in the Missouri river fifteen miles below Yankton were imprisoned by fields of heavy ice. A colony of 120 people, who had been surrounded by water at Mayville for two weeks, had been rescued. Two relief parties were endeavoring to reach Meckling, where fifty persons were imprisoned by fields of ice from five to twenty feet high. Probably 5,000 settlers have been rendered destitute on the Dakota bottoms.

Prof. Richard A. Proctor has sued the Wabash road for $50,000 for injuries received in the wreck at Brunswick, Mo. The six actions already commenced on this account cover claims of $200,000....The gross earnings of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad for the past year were $8,556,975....A meeting has been held in Chicago to protest against the high rents now demanded by landlords. Threats were freely made that the owners would be "boycotted" if they did not modify their views of the value of their premises, and a committee was appointed to agitate the question of repealing the fire ordinance.

THE SOUTH.

John Williams, a negro wife murderer, was executed at Waverly, Tenn.

A negro, named Jethro Carter, formerly the property of Howell Cobb, died at Atlanta, Ga., at the age of 88. Carter, during his life, was married six times, and in addition had many associate wives. At the time of his death he justly claimed to be the father of eighty children.

The Citizens' Bank, of Atlanta, Ga., has suspended business. The liabilities will probably reach $800,000. The bank was a depository of the State. At the time the doors were closed it owed the State of Georgia $100,000. The city of Atlanta was also caught for $46,000....Frost has killed the peach and fig crops of Georgia.

A Deputy United States Marshal has traced out the whereabouts of the notorious James brothers. They are living near Andersonville, Ky. The Marshal applied to three Kentucky magistrates for warrants authorizing their arrest, but they refused, the magistrates stating that if they issued warrants the friends of the James brothers would do them bodily harm or burn their property....The suit of Miss Murray against Gen. Tyler, Postmaster of Baltimore, for $20,000 for indecent assaults upon her, resulted in a verdict for $5,000.

POLITICAL.

Senator David Davis has written a letter to John Martin, of Kansas, on the present political situation, having reference to the Senate deadlock. Davis says that both parties are controlled by monopolists, and neither can assert its will, policy, or that of its constituents. He says monopolists' control and influence handicaps both the Republican and Democratic parties, and the only solution of the political difficulties is in the reorganization of the parties. Davis says that if the Democratic party would disband the Republican party would fall to pieces, because it is only kept together by Federal patronage and by the agitation of the sectional question; that the disbanding of the Democratic party would set the Republican party to quarreling over the distribution of patronage and sectional questions, and thus its organization would be destroyed, and this would open the way for new parties, representing the will of the people.

WASHINGTON.

Secretary Windom's refunding scheme was approved by the Cabinet, and he was authorized to use his discretion in the matter. It is understood that the $104,000,000 of new bonds will be issued at 4 per cent., and sold to the highest bidder. The Secretary also contemplates calling in maturing bonds and allowing holders to retain them at a reduced rate of interest. Atty. Gen. MacVeagh is of opinion that such a plan would be legal....A panic was created in the Postoffice Department by the summary discharge of eight clerks, some of whom had been in position many years. Their only offense was said to be incompetency. Postmaster General James is making a careful inquiry into the qualifications of his subordinates with a view to good of the service....Private Dalzell has been appointed by Secretary Kirkwood to a $2,000 clerkship in the Pension Office.

Secretary Windom has issued a call for the outstanding 6-per-cent. bonds of 1861 and 1863, aggregating in amount $195,690,400. He agrees, however, to allow holders who so desire to return their bonds and draw interest upon them at the rate of 3½ instead of 6 per cent. This plan is the one proposed by the New York bankers. Should holders, as a rule, demand the redemption of their bonds at maturity, July 1, it will be necessary for the Secretary to sell $104,000,000 of 4 or 4½-per-cent. bonds, as there will not otherwise be in the treasury a sufficiently large fund....Mrs. Blaine, Mrs. Logan, Mrs. Pendleton, Mrs. Sherman and other ladies at Washington appeal to the American people for liberal contributions for the sufferers by the earthquakes in the island of Scio.

Ex-Senator Bruce was tendered the Brazilian mission, and has refused it on the grounds that he did not think the climate would agree with his health, and that he did not think a colored man would be well received at the Brazilian court. It is probable that Mr. Bruce will receive a home position.

Secretary Kirkwood has appointed Hon. Hiram Price, of Iowa, chief clerk of the Indian Bureau, which places him in command of the position to which he has been nominated by the President....Private Dalzell has declined the tender of an $1,800 clerkship in the Pension Office, since it was discovered that an examination was necessary.

The Postmaster General has officially declared all publications issued in violation of copyrights granted by the United States unmailable matter. It seems that Canada has been republishing an American book and circulating it in the United States at less than the American rates.

Tabano, leader of the remnant of Victorio's band of Indians, has been captured in Chi[illegible] were [illegible] 1,394 [illegible]nong [illegible] Eun- [illegible] York, for $100,000; the New Jersey Refining Company, for a l ke amount, and the Badger State Manufacturing Company, of Two Rivers, Wis.

The Captain of the steamship Nebo, which arrived at New York from Rio Janeiro, reports one of the most terrible cases of suffering ever experienced at sea. He fell in with the bark Tiger, from Liverpool for Baltimore, seventy-seven days out, absolutely without provisions, and the crew starving to death. For nine days the men had nothing to eat except the Captain's dog, and prior to that they had long sustained life on strips of boot leather soaked in lamp-oil. To add to their suffering and despair, two vessels had passed within a short distance, but paid no attention to their signals of distress. When the Nebo encountered them they were hesitating between suicide and cannibalism.

The number of immigrants who arrived in the United States during the month of March was 44,125, of whom 19,000 came from Germany, and 3,000 from Ireland. During the nine months ending March 31, 1881, the arrivals aggregated 351,422, as follows: From Germany, 102,098; Canada, 86,881; England and Wales, 39,772; Ireland, 33,334; Scotland, 8,991; China, 4,515; all other countries, 75,825....The amount of capital invested in the iron and steel industries of the United States, in 1880, was $230,971,884, against $121,772,074 in 1870....A mysterious and frightfully fatal plague has broken out among the Chinamen employed on the Canada Pacific Railway works in British Columbia.

FOREIGN.

The Czar is said to have received from the Nihilist Committee an offer to lay down their arms in return for a constitution and amnesty. It is alleged that another mine has been discovered under the entrance to the Winter Palace....Count Hamilton, Chancellor of the University of Upsal, Sweden, has been arrested for committing forgeries to the amount of $200,000....In a speech at Birmingham Parnell declared his conviction that the Land bill was an honest and sincere measure....The number killed by the earthquakes in Scio is estimated at 8,000....In the English university boat race Oxford defeated Cambridge fully four lengths.

London dispatches state that Mr. Gladstone's Land bill transcends all other topics in importance. Public opinion has not yet crystallized, but the first impressions are undoubtedly favorable to the bill as a fair, middle way for the settlement of the land question. The scheme is admittedly a new departure. English politicians regard it as a preface to a larger proposal, to be extended some day to Scotland and England. Copartnership in the soil is the mainspring of Mr. Gladstone's proposal. This principle is justified by the circumstances in Ireland, and the recommendations of both the Land Commissions. Neither the Irish press nor the Irish party has assumed antagonism to the bill....The will of the late Thomas Carlyle, in a paragraph expressing a strong feeling of good will toward America, and especially New England, gives the books he used in writing the lives of Oliver Cromwell and Frederick the Great to Harvard University.

The trial of the assassins of the Czar was brought to a close at St. Petersburg on the 10th of April. During the trial the prisoners were all attired in black, and seemed to be proud of asserting that they belonged to the terrorist party, by whose orders the assassination was accomplished. All except Russakoff and Jellaboff disclaimed any participation in the deed itself. They were all sentenced to death on the gallows.

Constantinople dispatches state that Scio is experiencing more violent earthquake shocks, and barely twenty houses remain habitable in the whole island. Forty-five villages have been destroyed, and in many localities the population has entirely disappeared....The Turcomans surprised and slaughtered the garrison of the most advanced Russian fort on the road to Merv.

The mother of Tom Hughes, now 83 years of age, will soon come over from England with all her household goods, and will spend her last days with the colony planted by her son in Tennessee....The whole of Northern Albania is in revolt, and 15,000 men are marching against Dervisch Pasha at Scutari....A dispatch from London says there is reason to hope for a peaceable solution of the Greek frontier question.

The anti-Jewish petition sent to Bismarck comprises twenty-six volumes, with nearly a quarter million signatures, including those of noblemen and retired Generals....The Rev. W. Morley Punshon, the distinguished Wesleyan minister, died at Brixton, England.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

The time-killing debate upon every subject was resumed in the Senate on Monday, April 11. The time of that day's session was occupied by Call, of Florida, in defense of the Southern States, a statistical speech from Camden in defense of the credit of West Virginia, a facetious speech by Beck on Don Cameron's dominance in Pennsylvania politics, a retort by Cameron, and a harangue by Vest returning to pretty much everything. At the close of Vest's speech the Senate adjourned. No business of any kind was done. Senator Edmunds had returned from Florida, and occupied his seat in the Senate. He seemed to be in excellent health and spirits, and received the congratulations of his fellow-Senators of both parties.

In the Senate, on motion of Mr. Burnside, a resolution was adopted on Tuesday morning, the 12th inst., requesting the President to communicate to the Senate any information in the possession of the Government touching the alleged arrest and imprisonment of Michael Boyton, who claims to be a citizen of the United States, by the Government of Great Britain. The floodgates of talk were then opened, and a number of Senators spoke on any subject interesting to them, Mr. Beck making the principal speech. Senator Pendleton commenced a long argument, and held the floor at adjournment.

The proceedings in the United States Senate were varied on Wednesday, April 13, by some sharp and angry passages between Dawes and Pendleton, and Dawes and Butler, and some excited denunciations of Republicans by Senator Harris. The session closed with another personal altercation between Messrs. Hill and Mahone, in which language purposely insulting passed between the Senators.

The usual amount of talk was indulged in by the Senate on Thursday, the 14th inst., but no business was attempted. When the session adjourned it was to meet on Monday. The following nominations were sent to the Senate: Postmasters—Isaac Brown, Columbus, Ind.; Edwin W. Phelps, Oak Park, Ill.; C. N. Clark, Ida Grove, Iowa. William Letcher, of Ohio, to be Register of the Land Office at Mitchell, D. T. Cortes Fessenden, of Michigan, to be Surveyor General of the United States District of Dakota.

Congressional Contests.

Notices of contest have already been filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the law, in the following cases:

Horatio Bisbee, Republican, vs. Jesse J. Finley, Democrat, Second district of Florida.

William M. Lowe, Greenback-Democrat, vs. Joseph Wheeler, Eighteenth district of Alabama.

Robert Smalls, Republican, vs. George D. Tillman, Democrat, Fifth district of South Carolina.

John T. Stovill, Democrat, vs George C. Cabell, Democrat, Fifth district of Virginia.

Samuel Lee, Republican, vs. John S. Richards, Democrat, First district of South Carolina.

George M. Buchanan, Republican, vs. Van H. Manning, Democrat, Second district of Mississippi.

J. C. Cook, Democrat, vs. Madison E. Cutts, Republican, Sixth district of Iowa.

Alex. Smith, Republican, vs. E. W. Robertson, Democrat, Sixth district of Louisiana.

James Q. Smith, Republican, vs. James M. Shelley, Democrat, Fourth district of Alabama.

Samuel J. Anderson, Democrat, vs. Thomas B. Reed, Republican, First district of Maine.

In addition to the above, it is understood that the seats of the following Democratic Representatives will be contested:

M. P. O'Connor, Second district; D. Wyatt Aiken, Third district, and John H. Evins, Fourth district of South Carolina.

Thomas H. Herndon, First district; H. A. Herbert, Second district, and William C. Oates, Third district of Alabama.

Henry L. Muldrew, First district; Otto R. Singleton, Fourth district, and Charles E. Hooker, Fifth district of Mississippi.

J. Floyd King, Fifth district of Louisiana, and R. G. Frost, Third district of Missouri.

One Who Has Killed 1,164 Deer.

The Elmira Free Press says: Charles O. Smith lives in Tuscarora Township, Steuben County, about four miles from Addison. In conversation with our correspondent he said: "I came from Chenango County into this region in 1840. It was a wilderness into which we went. Not a tree of the old forest had been felled. There was great hunting hereabouts in those days," continued Mr. Smith. "I remember well when my wife would say to me, 'Well, Charles, I want you to go out and get me a deer.' I would start in the afternoon when the sun was only an hour high and get three or four deer before it got very dark. Why, I have myself killed as high as eighty-four deer in one season. I have kept account of the number I have killed and it is 1,164, all, too, within a radius of six or seven miles from this spot, and every one in Steuben County. My father taught me to shoot on the run, long years ago, when we were living in Chenang' County, and when I was but a little boy. We would go out on a side hill and my father would roll a pumpkin down it. While it was under way I fired, and I practised so constantly and patiently that I got so I could hit the vegetable every time. I did this so I could learn to shoot a deer on the run, and it gave me excellent practice and skill."

Something That Beats All.

Here's something that beats them all. Mr. William Washam has a rooster, a genuine Leghorn rooster, that lays eggs. For six months Mr. Washam has been finding large rough-shelled eggs lying around his yard. He never thought of accusing his Leghorn rooster of it, but the other day he caught and confined him so as to have him within easy reach for a man who was coming to buy him. He left him (the rooster) alone over night in a small coop by himself, and next morning found one of those curious looking eggs.—Charlotte (N. C.) Observer.

CHAINED HIMSELF.

How a Texas Farmer Arranged for His Death from Hydrophobia.

A Dallas (Texas) letter says: "A tragic death has just occurred in our neighboring county of Hill worth relating, and worthy of Virginius or any other Roman father. One year ago George Arnold came to Dallas on private business, and while walking the streets was bitten by a worthless cur which was frothing at the mouth, and showing other symptoms of hydrophobia. Mr. Arnold became alarmed and very much excited when convinced in his own mind that the dog was mad. He went to a physician and had the wound severely cauterized. Then, going home, he was still very uneasy, and dreaded hydrophobia so much that he hunted up a mad-stone and had it applied for several weeks, off and on. He took every other precaution which was suggested, resting all the time under a mortal dread that the virus had gone into his system, and would sooner or later kill him. He had a wife and several small children living on a rather isolated farm, and the thought that he might suddenly lose his reason and harm his little babes horrified him. The other day he began to experience strange feelings, and at once concluded his time had come. He then procured a twelve-foot trace-chain and strong lock and went to the woods. After writing his wife a calm letter, in which he told her what was about to happen, giving directions as to his wishes after death, and pouring out a volume of love for her and their children, he ran the chain round a tree, drew it through the large ring at the end, and then wound the other end around his ankle so tight that it would not slip over the foot, locked it with the lock, and threw the key far beyond his reach. The body was found two days after, still chained to the tree. There was all the evidence necessary to show the horrible death from hydrophobia. The ground was torn up to the full length of the chain, the nails of the fingers wrenched off, and all his front teeth out in scrathing and biting the tree, and every thread of clothing off his body. The body was dreadfully lacerated with these, the only weapons the madman could use. He had judged rightly what would have been the consequence had he remained at home, and, knowing that there was no human skill that could have cured him, preferred death alone, and in that way, to doing harm to those so near and dear to him as a wife and children.

"Arnold was originally from Talladega, Alabama, where he married, and where his widow has many friends and relatives."

Some Simple Simons.

There was a circumstance happened in New York the other day, which throws considerable light on the conundrum, "Whither are we drifting?" It appears that for some time past the New York aristocracy has been imbibing English ideas and styles. Coachmen have been put in livery; carriages have a coat of arms emblazoned on them; the tally-ho coach has been introduced; the nifty young men affect the dress, mutton-chop whiskers and single-barreled eye-glass of the English snob, and other mannerisms and monkey-shines are aped. But all these are harmless, except so far as they act on the stomachs of sensible people as an emetic, and produce retching. Recently, however, an English custom has been adopted by these New York noodles that will not do in the land of the free, and if it is attempted to be put in practice to any extent aristocratic backbones are liable to get jarred. A refined, highly respectable and educated young lady, a school teacher, was a boarder in an aristocratic Fifth avenue boarding-house, where the boarders were of that class that they would lick up the spittle of a dead-beat lord, or lady, and thank them for the privilege. Now, among the English aristocracy it is considered very low for a person to know anything; and a school teacher ranks as a governess, and a governess as a menial and servant. So, when it was discovered that a "menial" was eating at the same table with them, the sweet-scented scions of some successful scavenger insisted that she must be bounced; and she was bounced. The affair was an outrage upon our boasted "equality of all," and the fact that no one in the boarding-house was found to raise an objection to the proceeding shows that the blood of New York people is getting pretty thin. We presume it is the case that nearly all the enterprise, genius and energy of the Eastern States have been drained off to supply the bold and adventurous army of men who have developed the Western States and Territories, leaving the lame, the halt and the simple-minded behind. And of course nobody is to blame for being a simpleton or a sucker; he is just as his creator made him.

Sang Out.

Col. Sellers used to whistle to cure himself of stammering. There is an old story dusted up again of a fellow who sang for the same purpose.

There used to be a really funny fellow on board a Nantucket whale ship during a cruise in the Pacific. He got off jokes enough to amuse the whole crew, and was a good singer. In fact singing was the only form of speech which he could use without stammering to a terrible extent. One day only he and the cook were on deck, when the cook fell overboard. The stammering tourist rushed to the cabin companionway to notify the Captain, but, as usual with stammerers when in a hurry, he couldn't say anything, stammer as he would. The Captain saw that something was the matter, and shouted, "Well, if you can't say it, sing it, you fool!"

"Be-be-be-be—

"Overboard is Barnabas,
And half a mile astern of us."

Barnabas was promptly rescued.

The Oldest Man.

There is a man living in the mountains of North Carolina, says the Louisville Courier-Journal, no more than forty miles from Greenville, S. C., who has reached the extraordinary age of 143 years. At the time of Braddock's defeat he was 20 years old, and had a wife and three children. A gentleman at Greenville states that this man, who comes down to us from a former generation, has always been in moderate circumstances, lived upon a coarse vegetable diet, that he has never drank any water but spring water and bids fair to live many years longer. He enjoys perfect health, possesses all of manhood's attributes, and wishes to marry. He has survived seven wives, and, having lost his last one about sixty years ago, he now begins to feel lonely.

Duties of Cabinet Officers.

The Secretary of the Treasury has charge of the national finances. He digests and prepares plans for the improvement and management of the revenue and support of the public credit. He superintends the collection of the revenue and prescribes the forms of keeping and rendering all public accounts, and making returns; grants all warrants for money to be issued from the Treasury, in pursuance of appropriations by law; makes reports, and give information to either branch of congress, as may be required, respecting all matters referred to him by the Senate or House of Representatives, and generally performs all such services relative to the finances as he is directed to perform; controls the erection of public buildings, the coinage and printing of money, the collection of commercial statistics, the marine hospitals, the revenue-cutter service, the life-saving service. Under his superintendence the Light-house Board discharges the duties relative to the construction, illumination, inspection, and superintendence of light-houses, light-vessels, beacons, buoys, sea-marks, and their appendages; makes provision for the payment of the public debt under enactments of Congress, and publishes statements concerning it, and submits to Congress at the commencement of each session estimates of the probable receipts and of the required expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year. The Secretary of War performs such duties as the President, who is the Commander-in-chief, may enjoin upon him, concerning the military service, and has the superintendence of the purchase of army supplies, transportation, etc. The Secretary of the Navy has the general superintendence of construction, manning, armament, equipment, and employment of vessels of war. The Secretary of the Interior is charged with the supervision of public business relating to patents for inventions; pensions and bounty lands; the public lands including mines; the Indians; the census, when directed by law; the custody and distribution of public documents, and certain hospitals and eleemosynary institutions in the District of Columbia; he also exercises certain powers and duties in relation to the Territories. The Postmaster General has the direction and management of the Post-office Department; he appoints all officers and employes of the department, except the three Assistant Postmasters General, who are appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate; appoints all postmasters whose compensation does not exceed $1,000; makes postal treaties with foreign governments, by and with the consent of the President; awards and executes contracts, and directs the management of the domestic and foreign mail service. The Attorney General is the head of the Department of Justice and the chief law officer of the government; he represents the United States in matters involving legal questions; he gives his advice and opinion on questions of law when they are required by the President, or by the heads of the other executive departments, on questions of law arising upon the administration of their respective departments; he exercises a general superintendence and direction over United States attorneys and marshals in all judicial districts in the States and Territories; and he provides special counsel for the United States whenever required by any department of the government. Recently we gave a statement of the duties of the Secretary of State. In regard to questions of policy and matters of importance, they consult the President, and are often consulted by him.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The Science of Forestry.

The Boston Globe says: The science of forestry is coming to press more earnestly upon public attention as our forests disappear under the wasteful policy which has prevailed ever since the country was settled, and in various directions effort is made to save what is left and to repair, for the sake of future generations, the losses already sustained. Such an effort is that of the Middlesex Fells Association; and from the same locality there comes the appeal of Mr. F. Rand for the planting of rock or sugar maples. Mr. Rand's plan is "to take these trees from the forest at a suitable age for transplanting, and set them out on the borders of highways, a row on each side, say one hundred feet apart, or with space enough to allow a fair view of our beautiful New England landscapes from the road. Let them be arranged so that the trees on the two rows may not come directly opposite each other, but have the trees on either side alternate with the trees on the other side. In twenty or twenty-five years the average of these trees would be of suitable size to tap for sap, and meanwhile they would have answered all the other purposes of shade trees equally well or better than others." The rock for sugar making, is a beautiful, hardy, clean, and valuable shade tree, and in addition is especially valuable. Mr. Rand estimates that the cost of this enterprise would be not more than $1 a piece for the trees, including the frame work necessary to protect the young trees from browsing animals; while the profit does not end when the trees cease to produce sap, for the wood is valuable for various articles of manufacture and for fuel.

How Divers Are Paid in India.

A writer upon India and its affairs writes in the Boston Commercial Bulletin: "Most of the divers are trained to their business from childhood. They enter the water, as a general thing, unarmed and entirely naked, having only a net bag about their necks in which to put the oysters. One minute and a half to three minutes is the usual length of time which they remain beneath the surface. The men are paid according to the number of oysters they catch, they in some cases receiving a certain amount of money, and in others a certain per centage of the unopened oysters. This latter arrangement usually pays them best in the end, but they, poor things, prefer to receive a definite amount, even though it may be but a pittance, rather than run the risk of receiving a larger sum, with the possibility of obtaining nothing."

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.

The cuttle-fish has three distinct hearts.

Elephants always disturb the water before they drink.

The woodpecker can thrust its tongue out full three inches.

The albatross, the largest of sea birds, flies with a velocity of 100 miles an hour.

The little bird called the swift darts through the air at the rate of 180 miles an hour.

The noise made by a school of fish sounds, in the deep sea, like the rumbling of thunder.

The horn of a rhinoceros, when cut through the middle, is said to exhibit on each side the rude figure of a man, the outlines being marked by small white strokes.

Orang-outangs, in a state of domestication, will sit at the table like men and eat every kind of food, using the knife and fork; and they will drink wine and other liquors.

The main artery in the common whale is a pipe into which a man might creep with ease; the heart throws out from twelve to fifteen gallons of blood at every pulsation; the tongue has been compared to a vast feather-bed, on which half a dozen men might find ample room for repose. The whale's tail not infrequently has a surface of 100 square feet.

If the earth could be suddenly stopped in her orbit, and allowed to fall unobstructed toward the sun, under the accelerating influence of his attraction, she would reach the central fire in about four months. But such is the compass of her orbit that, to make its circuit in a year, she has to move nearly nineteen miles a second, or more than fifty times faster than the swiftest rifle ball, and, moving twenty miles, her path deviates from perfect straightness by less than one-eighth of an inch.

Among the extinct species of animals, the remains of which are found in America, may be mentioned the Eobasileus cornutus, a beast as large as the Indian elephant, but standing low, having proportions more as in the rhinoceros. The physiognomy was very peculiar. On either side of the front, above each orbit, rose a stout horn, its base continuous with that of its mate. Immensely prolonged nasal bones supported on each side, near the extremity, a massive reversed shovel-shaped protuberance. These beasts probably lived in herds like elephants of the present day.

In Persia they bottle up their tears as of old. This is done in the following manner: As the mourners are sitting around and weeping, the master of ceremonies presents each one with a piece of cotton wool, with which to wipe off his tears. This cotton is afterward squeezed into a bottle, and the tears are preserved as a powerful and efficacious remedy for reviving a dying man after every other means has failed. It is also employed as a charm against evil influences. This custom is probably alluded to in Psalm lvi., verse 8: "Put thou my tears into a bottle." The practice was once universal, as is found by the tear bottles which are found in almost every ancient tomb, for the ancients buried them with their dead as a proof of their affection.

The London Medical Journal insists that Bright's disease is the result of the immoderate use of iced drinks, and seeks to prove this with figures showing that the disease prevails in any country in proportion with the amount of ice consumed there. We of the United States use 90 per cent. more ice than any European country, and the disease is 75 per cent. worse than in Europe. England comes next, while in the wine-drinking countries the disease is very seldom seen, and in semi-civilized nations, where ice is not used, it is wholly unknown.

A Chicago man at Plainfield, Ind., desired to leave his traveling-bag and overcoat while he walked to a place twenty miles distant. He put them in a field, unprotected from thieves, except by a sign, "Smallpox—beware!" and when he returned they were right there in the field. But they were twenty feet under ground, buried by health officers. Oh, it takes a Chicago man to be smart.—Boston Post.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, APRIL 21, 1881.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

Friday, April 8.—Senate.—It was a field day in the Senate for the ladies and Prohibitionists. The prohibitory amendment came first under consideration, and finally passed—26 to 20. The joint resolution proposing to amend the constitution so the Senate shall be composed of thirty and the House of Representatives of sixty members, was rejected by yeas, 9; nays, 32. A lively discussion sprung up over the resolution to amend the constitution so that the members of the Supreme Court could be increased from five to nine, and several amendments were offered, but they were voted down and the resolution passed. The Female-Suffrage amendment went through (27 to 18), and the result was greeted with rounds of applause by the numerous ladies present. A bill was introduced authorizing cities to loan their sinking funds. The proposed amendment increasing the regular sessions of the Legislature to 100 days and limiting special sessions to thirty days passed. The Tenure-of-Office bill was amended so that all State and county officers shall be elected for four years and be ineligible to re-election for eight years after their terms of office expire. The Public Offense bill consumed the afternoon. Bills were passed: To grant a revocable license to a street railway from the Union Depot to the Insane Hospital; concerning bridges over streams forming county boundary lines; to amend the act establishing the State line near Green River island. The Governor nominated, and the Senate confirmed, Mrs. Mary E. Burson, of Delaware county, as a member of the Board of Managers of the Indianapolis Reformatory Institute for Women and Girls, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mrs. Coffin.

House.—Bills passed: Defining the duty of the Adjutant General, and allowing him a clerk; to transfer the Center Township School Library to the Trustees of the Marion County Library; to authorize the removal of drifts in streams; legalizing the town of Lagro and the town of Syracuse: the revision act concerning corporation and the carrying of baggage and freight by carriers; authorizing the appointment of a Commission of Claims against the State; providing for a Bureau of Statistics; also the Senate bills giving City Marshals the same fees and powers of constables; providing that in the counties of Allen, Marion and Vigo the Circuit Prosecutors shall perform the duties of prosecuting attorneys in Criminal Courts; providing for a commission of claims consisting of the Governor and State officers, and creating a board of visitors for the institutions. This last was adopted by a strict party vote—53 to 35. The bill failed providing for a commission to superintend a survey of the Kankakee region. A joint resolution favoring a constitutional amendment limiting all State and county officers to terms of four years was adopted. The resolution was referred instructing Members of Congress to use all possible effort for the suppression of polygamy.

Saturday, April 9.—Senate.—The Senate spent considerable time this morning over the consideration of the bill providing for a Police Judge in Indianapolis, and it finally failed for want of a constitutional majority. The Senate deferred action on the amendment exempting regular racing associations from the prohibition against pool-selling. The Governor transmitted a message vetoing the Codification bill, regulating the adoption of heirs, for the reason that if the bill became a law it would be competent for a court to order the adoption of a child upon the application of the petitioner, if the Trustee of the township would consent in open court, notwithstanding the parent of the child might be well known, might be able to support it, might be ignorant of the pending of the application for adoption, and might be within easy reach of the process of the court. The Governor considers this too dangerous a power to confer upon any tribunal.

House.—The bill for the reorganization of the benevolent institutions passed the House by a strict party vote, with the exception of Westfall, of Tippecanoe, who sided with the Democracy in the negative. The codified insurance bill, known as Finch's, was killed by reference to a committee. The bill passed prohibiting the sale of poisonous drugs to children under 14 years of age, except upon medical prescription, and a large number of measures were advanced to engrossment. The bill concerning the benevolent institutions contemplates putting the management in the hands of the dominant political party, with the appointing power in the hands of the Governor. Bills passed: To enable towns and cities to surrender or disannex a portion of their corporate limits; to authorize cities and towns of 4,500 and over to construct and maintain water-works; to separate the manufacture and sale of commercial fertilizers; to authorize a levy of 10 mills on each $100 for every ten miles to construct and repair free gravel roads. The bill to protect sheep passed both houses too hastily, and the Governor has been requested to return it, as it is found out that it imposes a double tax on dogs.

Monday, April 11.—Senate.—The Senate passed the bill authorizing cities and towns to disannex territory from corporate limits. It then engrossed the Public Offense bill and accepted the report reimbursing former employes of the Soldiers' Home who were turned out. The House bill doing away with constructive mileage of Sheriffs was passed. The most of the afternoon was taken up with the codified Election bill. A special committee recommended that section 7 be stricken from the constitution, thereby enabling women to practice law in the State. The Public Offense bill was amended before engrossment, so as to impose heavy penalties for the sale of diseased meats, or for any article of food or drink, the quality of which is misrepresented. This last clause is intended to check the sale of "bull butter." There is also an amendment imposing heavy penalties for attending prize-fights. No exemption is granted newspaper reporters. Pool-selling at horse races is also prohibited. Among the bills introduced was one by Senator Wilson for the purpose of organizing the two houses of the Legislature, the Lieutenant Governor, or, in his absence, the oldest Senator holding over, to organize the Senate, the Speaker of the last House of Representatives to organize the House, or, if he be not present, some member-elect to be designated by the Governor.

House.—The House passed the codified Decedents' Estates bill, and worked much on specific appropriations. Mr. Cauthorne offered a resolution that the joint Assembly declare its fidelity to the General Government of the United States, and that it indorse the political ideas of Adams and Jefferson, declaring the several State Governments sovereignties, etc., etc. He moved that the resolution lie on the table until Friday afternoon, when it be taken up. He did this in order that the minds of the Legislators might be occupied upon the last two days of the session, when it would be unable to pass bills, and when a discussion of the resolution would be more seemly than the usual hilarity and mud throwing.

Tuesday, April 12.—Senate.—The Senate wasted the entire forenoon in forcing a fight on the Fee and Salary bill, an issue being made on a motion to indefinitely postpone. Senator Brown headed the opposition upon the ground that the bill was an open violation of the constitutional amendment thereon, for the reason that it ignored "services rendered," and makes the estimate entirely on population. Senator Chapman, Republican, pressed the question, but noon came without change in the situation. During the afternoon the bill providing for the payment of war-loan bonds passed unanimously. The terms of the General Appropriation bill were accepted. No effort was made to resume the fight on the fee and salary question.

House.—The House passed bills: Relative to the estates of decedents (57 to 59); to encourage the improvement of live stock by requiring license on stallions and jacks; to make the face of insurance policies the amount of damage to be paid in case of fire, and regulating fire insurance companies, making the face of the policy the amount of damages to be paid in case of fire, unless the company prefer to rebuild. The House refused to take up the Specific Appropriation bill or make it the special order for to-morrow. The Metropolitan Plate-Glass Insurance Company's bill, allowing them to do business in this State, was voted down. Several bills of minor importance were passed, and the remainder of the day was given to consideration of the measure relative to office. Contrary to expectation, the House fought shy of the fee and salary question.

Wednesday, April 13.—Senate.—The Senate passed the Revision Committee bill on public officers and House bills concerning roads and highways, relating to the organization of the General Assembly, providing for the publication of the Revised Statutes of 1881, establishing a department of geology and natural history, appropriating money for the relief of the State Board of Agriculture and authorizing a loan of $60,000 and appropriating money for the relief of the Soldiers' Home employes. Much of the time was spent in committee of the whole in consideration of the bill providing a reserve fund for the completion of the new State House. The Yawter bill passed, making Township Trustees Superintendents of Roads and Highways, and assessing a poll-tax of $2. The night session was used in advancing bills to final passage.

House.—The influence of the Republican caucus last night was felt immediately upon the opening of the House session this morning, and came in the shape of a motion to attach the Fee and Salary bill as an amendment to the Public Offices bill. A strict party contest at once developed, the Democratic members interposing motions to take up the Specific Appropriation bill and to lay it on the table, etc., while the Republicans voted as a unit, according to caucus agreement. Various amendments to the amendment were offered and voted down. A protracted and lively discussion was one of the features. During the afternoon the discussion became personal, and there were several intensely-exciting episodes. Toward evening a vote on the final passage of the bill with the amendment attached was reached, and it passed, 57 to 36—a strict party vote—with only three absentees. Another row was expected at the night session, but the House contented itself by passing several hours in considering the Specific Appropriation bill.

Thursday, April 14.—Senate.—The House fight over the fee and salary amendment to the Public Offices bill was transferred to the Senate to-day. Several abortive attempts were made to take it up during the forenoon, and it was not until every parliamentary subterfuge possible had been sprung in the afternoon before the Senators faced the issue. The debate was animated and at times personal. Just before adjournment for the night session a vote was reached, and four Republicans joined with the Democrats and Nationals in defeating the measure, by a vote of 29 to 20. Previous to the Fee and Salary discussion the Senate passed numerous bills, among the most important of which were the following: House bills concerning elections and the contest thereof; to enable owners of wet lands to drain and reclaim the same; to amend section 24 of the Fee and Salary bill so as to increase the pay of witnesses to $2; also, to regulate the manufacture and sale of commercial fertilizers; also, regulating insanity inquests; also, concerning Grand and petit Jurors; also, prohibiting partnerships for insurance business. Also, the following Senate bills: Appropriating $973.70 to Benton county for extraordinary expenses incurred in the conviction of James McCullough; appropriating $2,503 for losses sustained in the burning of the Soldiers' Orphans' Home at Knightstown; Mr. Chapman's bill concerning the laying out of streets and alleys; also the bill making appropriations for the new State House, with the amendment increasing the appropriation $100,000, the vote being yeas 28, nays 17. A night session was held, owing to the constitutional limit prohibiting the passage of bills within two days of final adjournment. The session was disorderly. A strong fight developed over what is known as the Supreme Court bill, a faction of lawyers endeavoring to substitute the bill creating an Appellate Court, but the former finally prevailed. At 11 o'clock the Senate began on the Specific Appropriation bill. Shortly before 1 o'clock Friday morning the Senate suddenly adjourned, leaving the Specific Appropriation bill unfinished and the Public Offices bill a dead letter, owing to a failure to agree with the House amendments. The failure of the Appropriation bill leaves several of the benevolent institutions in an embarrassing condition.

House.—The House occupied the entire morning session in the discussion of the Specific Appropriation bill, which, after being amended by reducing the appropriation for a bath-house in the Northern prison from $15,000 to $5,000, finally passed by only two votes more than the necessary constitutional majority. In the afternoon the House passed the following Senate bills: Amending the act concerning the acquisition of Green Island in the Ohio river; appropriating $45,000 to be paid the city of Indianapolis for sewering the Female Reformatory and Deaf and Dumb Institute; also, providing for a system of levees, and enabling owners of wet land to drain the same; also, fixing the time of meeting of County Boards of Equalization after the fiscal year; also, half a dozen legalizing acts; also, appropriating $6,000 for the removal of a sandbar in the Calumet river. The House also concurred in the Senate amendments to Mr. Barnett's Fee and Salary bill, abolishing constructive Sheriff's fees; to the bill, for the reclamation of wet lands; relating to the organization of the General Assembly; relating to the sale of property by infants; as to Grand and Petit jurors; regulating elections and contests. Several House employes appointed by the Clerk, the Hon. Cyrus Nixon, presented Mrs. Nixon to-day with a handsome easy-chair, and in their note accompanying the chair they took occasion to happily express their regard for her husband.

People Who Forget They Have Money.

One would hardly believe that there are many who forget they have money or that there is money or interest due them, and yet it is a fact. There lies in the Treasury Department to-day $1,400,000 of unclaimed interest on government bonds. The sum is getting larger every day. This seems strange, but it is true. This vast sum of money, or much of it, can be drawn by simply applying for it by whoever is entitled to it and has the registered bond on which the interest is due and not paid. There are thousands of persons who have bought bonds, and not knowing how to get the interest on them, prefer to lose the same rather than to expose the fact that they have the bonds. Others have interest due them, and actually forget the fact, and it lies in the Treasury vaults waiting for them to apply for it. Should one of the clerks of the bond division inform a person to whom interest is due of the fact, and the same is discovered, he would be instantly discharged. Our government is like that of other countries, dishonest in matters of this kind, and is always willing to keep that which belongs to others, if it is not called for. Should one of its clerks be honest enough to give out a hint, he is discharged on the ground that it is not probable he would be engaged in volunteering information unless he received a certain percentage for his services; and this he has no right to do. The government takes the ground that the person to whom the interest is due should not be required to pay for the information; at the same time the same government will not itself volunteer the information.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Our youth and our manhood we owe to our country, but our declining years are due to ourselves.—Pliny.

THE SENATORIAL DEAD-LOCK.

Synopsis of the Speech of Senator Bayard, of Delaware.

Mr. Bayard believed, he said, there was a justification for the thirty-eight Democratic Senators in maintaining the attitude before the country which they had maintained for the past ten days. He wished to try the justice of their position by the light of law and reason, so that when they were called into that court of last appeal, the bar of public opinion, they should be willing to submit to it the case which they were making now.

He dwelt at some length upon the rights conferred upon minorities by the constitution and laws made in accordance with it. Instances had occurred when he felt it his duty—when he thought that a question was fatal to the welfare of the country—to interpose in order that the question might stand over for the sober second thought and action of the people. There was no precedent for the present election of Senate officers. The action of the Democrats two years ago in no respect presented a parallel case. The Chinese treaty was before the Senate, and it ought to be considered; but what were the million people that lined the Pacific coast compared with the matter of whether the present Secretary of the Senate should give place instantly to another man? That was but one feature. The United States Supreme Court stood to-day enfeebled in numbers until the Senate should displace four Senate officials and put four others in their places. United States Circuit and District Courts were waiting, unable to proceed with public business until the Senate should displace four officials. Postmasters were waiting confirmation. Collectors of Customs, and especially the Collector of the great port of New York, a position second only in influence and position to the Secretaryship of the Treasury, were awaiting action on nominations, in order that four subordinates of the Senate might be turned out and four others put in. When business facts were looked at, they would be found all on one side of the question, all in one scale of the balances. It was as Mount Olympus to a wart to talk of passing by these great objects of public interest, and to stoop down to displace four acceptable officials. Now, as to the nominations for officers. As he had stated before, there were thirty-nine Senators who had voted for Hancock. One of them had, in this chamber, voted with the Republicans. Then had come a list of committees, and the Senator from Virginia (Mahone) had figured as Chairman of one and member of three other important committees, while four Republican Senators were left without Chairmanships. Then had come a list of appointments, and Riddleberger had been brought forward as a candidate for the office of Sergeant-at-Arms at the instance of the Senator from Virginia. These were the facts of the case, and from these facts the ordinary deduction of mankind must be formed, and would be formed. He (Bayard) now put into the scale of the balance which induced him to vote for the transaction of business the addition that, in view of such facts as those, his views and education of political morality and duty made him lend his opposition to the consummation of the reward to Riddleberger or the Senator who had nominated him. The Senator from Pennsylvania (Cameron) had stated that this question had great significance, in view of the coming fall election in Virginia. That he (Bayard) asserted to be a dangerous step in centralization. It would be an attempt on the part of the Senate, sitting as part of the executive branch of the Government, to interfere with and control an election in Virginia. It was a usurpation; it was an invasion; it was, in the strongest sense of the word, a revolutionary attempt by unlawful and illegitimate methods to control the free election of a State in regard to matters solely submitted to its own cognizance. And how controlled? Indirectly and without law. To usurpation was added the terrible danger of corruption. Because, if this man Riddleberger was to be chosen an officer of the Senate in order to influence the election in Virginia, how could he do it in the line of public duty? Put that also in the scale. There was another feature to the transaction. What was the contest in Virginia which the Republicans expected to decide by appointing Riddleberger?

The issue was "repudiation," and it was on the repudiating side of that issue that the Republican party in the Senate proposed to identify itself by choosing Riddleberger as one of its officers. It was to him, to his doctrines, the Republicans stood committed. It seemed to him (Bayard) that if the Republican party assisted in sowing the seeds of repudiation of admitted and honorable obligations, it was sowing a crop worse than that of Cadmus, and one which would bear dangerous fruit to posterity. What was credit? It was the honest poor man's capital. It was because he was trusted that a poor man could outlive his period of poverty and distress, and await the time of the fruition of his labors. Virginia was poor, and she needed credit to-day more than in her time of opulence and plenty. Leave to people the right to be believed and trusted; leave them the sense of self-respect and manhood that an unbroken word gave to any man, however poor! There stood his case before his conscience, and there he stood before the country.

MAHONE AND KELLOGG.

Mahone, the repudiator, and Kellogg, the carpet-bagger, are now absolute masters of the Republican majority of the Senate. The defection of either of the two would leave the Vice President powerless, and throw the Republicans into a minority. These two men are therefore able to dictate the policy of the party in the Senate and to name its candidates for office.

Mahone and Kellogg actually did nominate for Secretary of the Senate George C. Gorham, who in 1879 bolted the Republican candidate for Governor in California, and took the stump for Glenn, the Democratic candidate. The Republicans of that State openly denounced Gorham's treachery, and demanded that his name be stricken from the National Committee.

But, now that Gorham is supported by Mahone and Kellogg, the Republican caucus has been told plainly that he must be nominated, or no Republican can hope to be elected. The two votes of Mahone and Kellogg decided that question. Gorham was himself the negotiator between Mahone and the Republicans for the control of the organization.

H. H. Riddleberger is publicly known as Mahone's next friend. Mahone has glorified him before the Senate, as "a gallant cavalry Captain in the Confederate service." He was a Hancock elector on Mahone's ticket last November, and the author of the bill in the Virginia Legislature to repudiate one-third of the State debt, and to discredit the bonds for the remaining two-thirds.

The Republicans have done many discreditable things to retain power. They have used the army, corrupted the ballot box, seated bogus Senators and Representatives, sustained carpet-bag thieves, stolen States, and rewarded perjurers and forgers in Louisiana, South Carolina and Florida with office. But heretofore they have always attempted to cover up transactions of this sort, and to plaster them over with deceptions and falsehoods. In the present case they have openly bought the vote necessary to give them what is called "a constitutional majority," and they have as openly paid over the price in the shape of the nomination of Gorham and Riddleberger.

Neither of these men could have been nominated had not Mahone held in his single vote the key to the situation; and he was backed by Kellogg, who holds a seat in the Senate by virtue of the grossest fraud.—Washington letter.

Senator Brown's Menagerie.

In the United States Senate, Mr. Brown, of Georgia, said it was a peculiar coincidence that the Senator from Virginia, who, up to a late period, had always been a Democrat, should vote with the Republicans on the organization of every committee, and that in a very short time afterward the Republicans should meet in caucus and nominate his intimate friends, Gorham, who bolted the party and had been read out of it, and Riddleberger, who had always been a Democrat. It might have been no bargain, it might not even have been an understanding, but he would call it a "peculiar coincidence." The situation reminded him of the story of the coon and the skunk. The coon had left home one day, and on his return found some other animal in the hollow of his tree. He thought it was a cat, and challenged it as such.

"No," said the polecat, "I am a coon."

"You don't look like a coon."

"But I am a coon."

"You don't talk like a coon."

"But I am a coon."

"You don't smell like a coon and you ain't a coon." [Laughter.] This transaction did not look exactly like a proper transaction and it did not smell like a proper transaction. [Laughter.] The Republican side reminded him of the man who had caught a wolf and then had to call a friend to help him to let it go, or rather it reminded him of the man who had won an elephant at a raffle and did not know what to do with him. The Republicans had won the elephant in this case and were not in a very good condition to get rid of him. If they did not stand by his friends he might turn and rend every Chairman of theirs. [Laughter.] He also likened the Republicans to the astronomer who fell into a state of great excitement at discovering an elephant on the moon only to find that there was a mouse between the lenses of his instrument. Possibly his Republican friends had not caught the elephant they thought they had, for possibly it might turn out to be a diminutive form of a little mouse.

Was Logan a Secessionist?

The St. Louis Republican bluntly questions the truth of John A. Logan's recent denial of the current tradition that at first his sympathies were with the secessionists, and that his loyalty was a case of sober second thought. If he did not do all in his power to injure the Union cause during the last two months of 1860 and the first four months of 1861, then, says the Republican, the Illinois Democrats and Republicans of that time were the victims of a most extraordinary delusion. The late R. M. Knapp has said that he was present, in company with several other prominent Democrats, at an interview between the late Stephen A. Douglas and Logan, an hour after the former made his great Springfield speech for the Union, and that Logan then said to Douglas in substance: "You have sold the Democratic party, but, by ——, you can't deliver it. You've got the Lincoln collar round your neck, but you can't put it round mine." Later that same night, Mr. Knapp said, Douglas had a private talk with Logan, and the next day the latter left Springfield to raise a regiment of "Lincoln hirelings."

In his speech in the Senate, referring to this story of his leaning at the outstart toward the Southern side, Logan said: "Sitting right in this chamber is a Senator who knows this insinuation is false." It is now in order for the Senator thus appealed to by Logan to give his testimony.

Garfield's Happy Thought.

President Garfield says that in appointing Judge Robertson Collector he was guided by a desire to promote harmony in the Republican party of New York.

It was a happy thought of the President's that he would promote harmony in the Republican party. Harmony in the Republican party of the State of New York needs a great deal of promoting just at present; but the President's way of doing this most desirable thing cannot be complimented as eminently successful. On the contrary, he hit the big hornet's nest a powerful blow; and he is likely to learn that some of the occupants can sting.

It is pleasant to be informed that Mr. Blaine had nothing whatever to do with Judge Robertson's appointment. Oh, not he; why should he have had anything to do with it? What should he care? It is nothing to him.

Poor Blaine! He is a little lamb, and would like to be out in the pastures, verdant as himself, climbing the rocks and skipping about with the other little lambs, if only he was not shut up in that horrid, dingy, old State Department. He to have anything to do with the appointment of Judge Robertson! Never! He scorns the imputation. It was the cat, or Gail Hamilton, that did it.

We sincerely believe that Mr. Blaine had no more to do with the matter than he would have had if he himself had been President of the United States, in his own name.—New York Sun.

Goody Massachusetts.

Mr. Hoar, of Massachusetts, replying to Mr. Lamar, of Mississippi, in the United States Senate, made the following extraordinary declaration:

> It is the heart-wish of the people of Massachusetts to have a rich, prosperous and contented South. To accomplish that they would shut up their factories, let the grass grow in the streets of their commercial cities, and let poverty haunt their counting houses.

"Heart-wish" might be excusable in the love letter of a sentimental miss, while it is hardly the terse language in which the speech of an august Senator may tastefully be couched. But what sheer fiction, what transcendental nonsense, is the substance and idea of Mr. Hoar's sentence!

There are many genuine philanthropists in Massachusetts, many men and women of intelligence and of the highest character; but when we are told that the people of the State in general would prefer the prosperity of the South to their own prosperity, we are told what no one in his senses can be expected to believe.

Shut up their factories; let grass grow in the streets of their commercial cities; and let poverty haunt their counting houses; all for love, preferring others' welfare to their own! Why, Mr. Hoar would have us believe that the Massachusetts people are really Christians.

Mahone in the Side-Lights.

Mahone entered the chamber a trifle before 12, carrying under his arm a bundle of papers. Behind him, loaded with books, was Riddleberger, Mahone's candidate for Sergeant-at-Arms, and third in the line limped a stout old gentleman, dressed like a farmer, with a long white chin whisker, the Clerk of the Committee on Agriculture, of which Mahone is Chairman. Riddleberger dumped the reference books on Mahone's desk and then stood aside until, the Senate having opened, Mahone stepped down in front, when Riddleberger took Mahone's seat and began to arrange his references. Mahone had provided himself, under Republican advice, with a written speech, the purpose being to keep him within bounds. So long as he confined himself to the text he was as temperate as could be wished, but occasionally he left the track, each time giving promise of liveliness ahead and each time being recalled to his manuscript by Republican signals.—Washington Cor. New York World.

A New Fashion of Sleeping.

The Chicago Tribune lately contained a lengthy article on the new fashion which is rapidly coming into vogue, of husbands and wives occupying separate beds. The practice is said to be an European one, and is being received in New York with great favor. It has long been held by physicians that the habit of two persons occupying the same sleeping couch was a vicious one, as the superior magnetism of one would draw the vitality out of the other; and while one would awake in the morning refreshed with new energy, the other would be enervated and listless and hardly able to drag the body around during the day. Acting upon this European theory, it is supposed that the dealers in beds and bedding have secretly organized a boom in their business, and knowing how a fashion will be followed by people, they are preparing for a season of prosperity. But, be this as it may, there is little doubt that the fashion of sleeping singly has its good as well as bad points, and it will be hailed with delight by those husbands whose wives are troubled with chilly feet. It will also come as a sweet boon to the tired wife whose husband is a beautiful dreamer and habitually kicks her out of bed as he yells, "I'll sell two thousand March at six seven-eighths." But on the rich old husband, whose young wife is kept awake by his asthma, and who will avail himself of the new fashion for a night of undisturbed repose, it will fall with a leaden hand, and his supply of magnetism being cut off he will droop and die and leave his cash so much the sooner. There are, as we said, many good features which will recommend themselves to different people upon reflection. Acting upon the new fashion, it is said that landlords are already providing the bridal chambers in their hotels with two beds, thus aiming to leave nothing undone that will be conducive to the comfort of guests. Upon the whole the new fashion is one possessed of great merit.—Peck's Sun.

A truly good man had rather be deceived than be suspicious, and rather forego his own right than run the venture of doing even a hard thing. This is the temper of that charity of which the apostle says that it shall never fail.

THE SYMPTOMS

of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels alternately costive and lax; Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; Debility, Low Spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a dry Cough often mistaken for Consumption.

Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the Liver, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

COSTLY BOOKS.

One Sold for $900, Another for $800.

NEW YORK, April 7.—At the Brinley book sale to-day, Elliot's Indian bible, one of the twenty royal or dedication copies sent to England for presentation, was offered for sale. It was started at $500, and was bought by Dr. Ellsworth Citot, of this city, for $900. The Gutenberg bible, the first book printed with types, by Joannes Gutenberg, in 1450-55, was started at $500, and finally brought $800 by Mr. Hamilton Cole, a lawyer of this city.

If You are Sick, Read

the Kidney-Wort advertisement in another column, and it will explain to you the rational method of getting well. Kidney-Wort will save you more doctor bills than any other medicine known. Acting with specific energy on the kidneys and liver, it cures the worst diseases caused by their derangement. Use it at once. In dry and liquid form. Either is equally efficient, the liquid is the easiest, but the dry is the most economical.—[Interior.

An Old Doctor's Advise.

It was thus: "Trust in God and keep your bowels open." For this purpose, many an old doctor has advised the habitually costive, to take Kidney-Wort—for no other remedy so effectually overcomes this condition, and that without the distress and griping which other medicines cause. It is a radical cure for piles. Don't fail to use it.—Translated from the New Yorker Zeitung.

Death of a Victim of the Luddites.

Wm. Powell, of Cincinnati, whose death at ninety-two, the News noted on Monday, had a remarkable history. He was a native of Leicestershire, England. He was a man of remarkable inventive powers, and, with John Heathcote, constructed the first machinery for the manufacture of lace. The working classes of England fearing that the substitution of machinery would eventually encroach upon the rights and opportunities of making a living by curtailing the needs of manual labor, began to manifest a turbulent spirit. Meetings were called, speakers denounced all such inventions as innovations on their privileges and the discontent and threats at length broke into open riots. One of the principal leaders, named Ludd, headed a mob of malcontents and proceeded through different parts of the country, destroying machinery and committing excesses of every kind. This band of Luddites, as they were called, did not fail to visit the factory of Mr. Heathcote, and it, with many others, was completely destroyed. Immediate steps were taken to crush the rebellion. By an act of parliament the malicious destruction of machinery was made a capital offense. The mob was finally overpowered, and seven of the ringleaders were hung at Leister.

After this disturbing element had ceased to exist, the manufacture of lace became an extensive business. Powell then formed other business connections, and met with great success in the manufacture of these machines, his factory at Ghent being favored with a visit from the king of the Netherlands in 1828. The revolution two years later drove Mr. Powell, with his family, to this country.

Making Watches.

Defective Watch Cases are one of the chief causes of so many watches not being good time pieces. The cases being thin and not fitting well, admit dust and dirt to the movement, which soon interferes with the running parts of the watch, necessitating cleaning, repairing, etc., and the amount thus paid out, if applied toward buying a good case in the beginning, would have saved all this trouble and expense. We have recently seen a case that meets all these requirements, it having been carried for over twenty years and still remains perfect. We refer to the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, which has become one of the staple articles of the Jewelery trade, possessing as it does, so many advantages over all other watch cases, being made of two heavy plates of solid gold over a plate of composition, and we advise all our readers to ask their Jeweler for a card or catalogue that will explain the manner in which they are made.

It is the only STIFFENED CASE made with two plates of gold, seamless pendants, and center, solid joints, crown pieces, etc., all of which are covered by letters patent. Therefore buy no case before consulting a Jeweler who keeps the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, that you may learn the difference between it and all imitations that claim to be equally as good.

For sale by Abright the Jeweler. Ask to see the warrant that accompanies each case, and don't be persuaded that any other make of case is as good.

CROWN
SEWING
IS THE BEST

It is the result of 20 years' experience and experiments in Sewing Machines. It combines the good points of all present and former makes, and is not a "one man" or "one idea" machine, as others are. It avoids the defects of others, and possesses new and valuable features and conveniences. It is large, light-running, noiseless, handsome, convenient, durable, and simple. Warranted and kept in repair free for 5 years. Circulars with full description sent free on request. It is surely the best. A trial will prove it. Don't fail to see it before you buy. MANUFACTURED BY FLORENCE MACHINE CO., Florence, Mass.; WHOLESALED BY GEO. P. BENT, 81 and 83 Jackson St., Chicago, Ill.

A SPRING SONG.

O spring-time sweet!
Over the hills come thy lovely feet;
The earth's white mantle is cast away,
She clothes herself all in green to-day;
And the little flowers that hid from the cold
Are springing anew from the warm fresh mold

O spring-time sweet!
The whole earth smiles thy coming to greet;
Our hearts to their inmost depths are stirred
By the first spring flowers and the song of the bird;
Our sweet, strange feelings no room can find.
They wander like dreams through heart and mind.

O spring-time sweet!
How the old and the new in thy soft hours meet
The brightness and beauty that could not last—
Their fair ghosts rise with the ending of snow—
The springs and the summers of long ago.

O spring-time sweet!
How thou once wert dear and fair and complete!
No sweetness of woods nor of music could tell
The gladness that once made my bosom swell;
And thou art not the same as the spring of yore,
For the beauty and blessing that come no more.

O spring-time sweet!
With silent hope thy coming I greet;
For all that in winter the bright earth lost
Doth rise, new-born, with the ending of frost;
Even so shalt thou bring me—at last, at last!
And the hope and the joy and the love of the past.

A Dead City.

St. Joseph, Florida, was at one time a busy seaport, had a railroad to Iola, on the Appalachicola, shipped cotton to the extent of hundreds of thousands of bales annually, and was the enterport of supplies of western Florida, southern Georgia and northeastern Alabama. Railroads from the Mississippi to the Atlantic at length deprived it of its commerce, and made its own railroad worthless. The track was taken up and used elsewhere. The inhabitants gradually abandoned their homes. Yellow fever visited those who remained, and the living were unable to bury the dead. What few escaped fled, and not a soul was left to claim property or home. A tornado completed the ruin. Every house was leveled to the ground, and to-day, there is not a chimney to mark the spot where, not long ago, stood a busy little city.

Bob's Talking Leg.

"That wooden leg of yours must be rather inconvenient."

"May be, sir, but I walk with it better than when I had the natural pair complete."

Bob, was our crossing-sweeper, and a sort of public messenger—self-established, but recognized in time, as one of the institutions of the bank. The road just opposite our main entrance was rather wide for a country town, and it was here Bob, kept a path carefully swept in all weathers.

When employed by the bank or one of the trademen with a message, Bob, would leave his broom leaning against the letter-box, and go on his way, quite certain that the most mischievous boy in the place would not interfere with it. Bob, was so good-natured and kind to all, and even his broom was respected.

He was a bit of a character, and generally wore a post-boy's cap and an old red hunting-coat when on duty. But these were only a sort of trade sign, and, work done, Bob put his "uniform" aside and resumed the garb of a respectable laborer.

And a laborer he had been once upon a time—a man well known in the town, and not a little notorious for his drinking. But he shall tell his own story. Listen to him as he tells it to me:

"Walk better with a wooden leg than with two sound ones!" I said, "how can that be? I can not fancy that a wooden leg would be better than either of mine."

"I was not speaking of your legs, sir," replied Bob dryly, "but of the pair I had. They were not given to walking very straight."

"That must have been your fault, Bob?" I said.

"Well, yes sir," he said, "of course it was, but I was speaking in a sort of meddlefor, you see."

"I hear you are fond of metaphor," I returned, "but tell me about that leg of yours. How did you get it?"

"Drink gave it to me," replied Bob, "and I must say that I ain't very grateful to drink in return; for although it makes noise enough in ordinary, it knocks double as loud whenever I am nigh a public house.

It says 'don't' as plainly as you can sir—meaning don't go in. I was once nearly led back into the old ways, and was going into 'The King's Head' with a friend who I had not seen for years, but this leg wouldn't go in; t'other went over the step right enough, but the wooden one tipped up, and down I went. 'All right,' I says, 'you know how I got you, and I'll not go in.'"—Selected.

A LOOK AHEAD.

Coming Events Casting Their Shadows Before, and Growing to be the Most Interesting of All Questions.

The interest in the summer and fall elections is commencing to crop out, and within a month, the chances of the different aspirants for the suffrage of the sovereign people will be discussed pro and con with constantly increasing animation. The all potent argument as to the party probabilities will be the figures of the last contest, and none will be more earnestly canvassed than those of the congressional struggle, and this being the fact, the new B & O. Red Book congressional edition becomes almost indispensible. No publication of political statistics ever made equals it in extent of information given, or in comprehensive argument. It shows not only the result of the election of 1880, but the result as well of the election of 1878. The republican, democrat and greenback vote for the two elections is presented separately, and comparisons made of gains or losses of the different parties. Total votes are also the subject of comparison, and this exhaustive showing is made of every congressional district in the Union by counties. The book is one of one hundred and twelve pages, is a marvel of typographical beauty, being printed upon an elegantly finished paper, and the cover is one of the most exquisite things in the way of artistic design issued for many a year. The Red Book is a B. & O. publication intended for something above the ordinary circulation, and to this end is sent only where requests are made to C. K. Lord, G. P. A., Baltimore, Md., for it by mail and enclosing a three cent stamp. The Red Book will thus be mailed to all who may write to Mr. Lord for it, and certainly those who receive it will not part with it for almost any money, so exceedingly valuable a text-book is it for all who are interested in or care aught for political statistics.

Fighting Women.

Female soldiers have been more numerous in foreign armies than in the English service. I may mention a few. In the French army, for instance, there were, among others, Louise Houssaye de Bannes, who served from 1792 to 1795, and was at Quiberon; Angelique Brulon, nee Duchemin, for she was married, sous-lieutenant of infantry, and decoree with the Legion of Honor, who was born in 1772, and died, I believe in the Invalides about 1859; Therese Figuer, who served as a dragoon for fourteen years, from 1798 to 1812, and had four horses killed under her; she died in 1861, at the age of eighty-seven, in the Hospice des Petits Menages at Paris; Virginie Chesnieres, who served during the Peninsular war as a sergeant in the Twenty-seventh regiment, and died in 1878. Louisa Scanagatti was a lieutenant of infantry in the Austrian or Sardinian army during the Napoleon wars; Marietta Giuliana and Herminia Manelli fought under Garibaldi in 1866; Herminia was at the battle of Custozza. Augusta Kruger fought in the War of Liberation against the French as a subaltern in the Ninth Prussian regiment, and was decoree with the Iron Cross and the Russian Order of St. George; she, after leaving the army married a brother officer in 1816, and in 1869 her grandson received a commission in his grandmother's regiment. Bertha Weiss is said to have fought at Spicheren in 1870, but I am not sure that her case is genuine. The most recent instances that I know of is the following three: A young Russian officer (her names is not given) whom the Times correspondent, on September 29, 1877, reported to have fallen at Kacelyevo, after displaying the most brilliant gallantry in rallying her men against the Turks; Sylvia Mariotti, a private in the Eleventh battalion of Bersaglieri, who served from 1866 to 1879, and who fought at Custozza; and Dolores Rodriguez, corporal at the age of eighteen in the First regiment of Peruvian Sappers. She, it appears, fought in the present South American war, and is still in service. —Notes and Queries.

Quite a number of darkies, young and old, were fishing down on Kuhn's wharf, when a boy about twelve, fell off and would have met with a watery grave had it not been for the energy and presence of mind of old Uncle Mose. After the boy was safely landed, a bystander took occasion to praise old Mose for the heroism he had displayed. "Is the boy your son?" asked the sympathetic speaker. "No, boss, but he mout jest as well a been. He had all de bait in his pocket."

A Man Picks up a $90,000 Package.

Our readers will remember the case of James E. McCann, who a few days since, found a pocket-book, containing $230 in a water-closet on Sixteenth street. Having spent a portion of the money under the impression that it had been lost for some time and would find no claimant, he was arrested, but subsequently discharged, on agreeing to refund the portion appropriated.

McCann has a peculiar history as a lucky man in finding lost property. He is a brick-layer by trade, and formerly resided in Chicago. Going to his work one morning in that city, he saw a parcel, neatly done up, lying on the sidewalk in front of one of the national banks, and thinking it contained somebody's lunch, he picked it up and carried it with him to work. At noon he ate his own lunch, and thinking of his find he opened it to see what it might contain. To his surprise he found $70,000 in bank notes. He was, of course, somewhat astonished and alarmed, too. On his way home in the evening he saw some men putting up posters announcing the loss by a bank messenger of a valuable package, and immediately proceeded to report to the parties, who proved their property and paid him the $1,000 offered in the hand-bills.

At another time subsequent to this he found a package containg $15,000 on the ice in the Missouri river, for which he also found the claimant.

Yesterday after he had been discharged from the police court, he found a package containing $90,000 worth of land certificates of the Union Pacific railway, which he returned to the owners and received a reward for so doing. He is certainly a lucky fellow, and if he were only entitled to salvage on all his discoveries, he would soon be as rich as Rothschilds.—Omaha Bee.

Cities and Their Godfathers.

Most cities were founded by accident. There was no deliberate plan. A hut or two grew into a village, a village into a town, and a town into a city. London, for instance, had no godfather. The first barbarian who landed from his canoe and fixed his habitation under the hill now crowned by the cathedral of St. Paul, little knew he was the founder of a city, to which Rome at the height of its glory was insignificant in its proportions, its numbers and its wealth. A place sometimes derived its name from the physical features which distinguish it. Oxford, Cambridge, Milford, Newport, Redhill, Blackwater, Yarmouth, are instances in point. At times some natural advantage it possessed was the occasion of its name. Thus the Spaniard Pedro de Mendoza named the capital of the state he founded in South America Buenos Ayres, to celebrate the excellent climate; and Valparaiso was so called as an intimation that its position is such as to be the very valley of paradise.

The cities founded by the godfathers after whom they were named are the most famous in existence. No man seems to have been above the ambition of perpetuating himself in that way. Alexander the Great gave his name to the Egyptian city which he founded, and which the Ptolemies made one of the most magnificent of the ancient world. In Candahar, too, we recognize the Asiatic name (Iskander) of the great conqueror who founded it. Cologne (Colonia Aggrippina), which has come to be regarded as the symbol of German unity, owes its name to the mother of Nero, who was born there. Saragossa, capital of the old kingdom of Aragon, is only a corruption of Cæsorea Augusta, so called after Augustus, who rebuilt the Carthagenian town formerly on its site, and named the new city after himself. This re-founding an old town and giving it a new name was common in antiquity. When Adrian restored what the ancient writers called Uscudana, he imposed upon it his own name, and thenceforward it was known as Adrianople, just as when Philip III. of Macedon, formed a new city on the site of Eumolpias, it was converted into Philippopolis. In the same way Constantine, when transferring the seat of empire to Byzantium, re-named the city on the Bosphorus Constantinople. The representative of the modern Byzantine empire has its seat in a city also called after its founder—St. Petersburg. When adventurers from this country named the chief town in Nova Scotia, they were virtually addressing a prefatory dedication to the Earl of Halifax, first commissioner of trade and plantations. Charleston was so named in honor of Charles II., the reigning monarch. Baltimore received its name in 1768 after Lord Baltimore. It was only just that when, in 1793, the foundation stone was laid of the Federal capitol of the United States, the forthcoming city should be named after the father of his country—Washington. In the same way the capital of Victoria was named after the prime minister of the time, Melbourne; that of South Australia, Adelaide, after the Queen Dowager; that of the New South Wales after the then secretary of the colonies, Sidney; and that of New Zealand after Lord Auckland.—London Globe.

Correspondence.

ALLEN CREEK, MICH., April 8, 1881.

EDITORS COURIER: I will write a few items for the columns of your paper. We have good sleighing to-day, and the prospect is good for two or three weeks more. The snow is two feet and a half deep to-day. We had a few soft days and it settled the snow. Before that the snow was four feet deep on a level. I will give a sketch of the pine logs that have been put into the different rivers. In the Muskegon river there are six hundred million feet of logs; in White river sixty millions; Pere Marquette river, one hundred millions; north branch of Pere Marquette, eighty millions.

There was a dog run a big deer into a field near us and we caught him and put a rope on him and led him into the barn. When he got rested he went for the dogs, and the other boys ran out of the barn, and I had hold of the rope and he came for me and I gave him a jerk and threw him down and I fell at the same time he did. We then let him loose and set the dogs on him and they killed him. We began to think it was time for us to quit fooling with him. He was a five year old buck, and was a big one. The snow was so deep that he could not run very fast.

Herewith I send a tooth-pick for each of the editors of the COURIER, so that you can judge whether he was a big one or not. WM. DRAGOOO.

NOTE.—Accompanying the above letter were the tooth-picks taken from the deer's leg. Any one can judge as to the size of friend Dragoo's deer by calling at the COURIER office and inspecting them. They will remind hunters of the olden time.—ED.

Obituary.

Died, at Butler, DeKalb county, Ind., April 5th, 1881, at 5 o'clock p. m., Nicholas Rench. The subject of this sketch was born in Germany, on the 7th of May, 1829. At the age of 14, he was confirmed a member of the E. V. L. church, and remained a consistent and dutiful subject of the church order until 22 years of age—about the year 1851—when he emigrated to America, stoped in New York about nine years, and from there he moved to Butler, Indiana, (which was about twenty-one years ago) where he remained most of the time until death translated him to the higher glories of the faithful. He remained a single man, had many friends and a pleasant home, always prompt and strictly honest, industrious and strongly attached to the church of his choice. He was consistant in all bearings of his life, not only as a christain and Godly man, but as a citizen so scrupulously honest that his acts during life were highly respected by all who were acquainted with him. His life was full of the most certain and unaffected friendship which gathered for him a great many warm friends, which fact was clearly shown by the entire community gathered, as it were, to show their appreciation of this man. The members of the household, over which he presided so kindly as uncle, feel that they have suffered an irreparable loss, as his place in any particular will be difficult to fill. Any eulogy that might be prepared, doubtlessly would detract largely from the brilliancy of the picture drawn in the even and consistant life of Nicholas Rench. The funeral services were held in the Lutheran church of Butler, and a very appropriate and able discourse was delivered by Rev. J. Shaffer, who was formerly the pastor of the Lutheran congregation in Butler, and who had endeared himself in the hearts of the deceased and friends. The remains of Brother Rench were followed to the place of burial by a large concourse of sympathizing friends. Those best acquainted with him, feel the most sure that their loss is his eternal gain, and hope that this visit shall be so governed as to work, to those afflicted a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. A Man Attacked by a Pack of Curs.

A Charlotte (N. C.) special of a recent date to the Chicago Inter-Ocean says: A very remarkable occurrence at Shoeheel, a small town between this city and Wilmington, has just stirred up the whole section of country contiguous thereto. Mr. William D. Baldwin, a highly respectable citizen, was returning Saturday night from a trip on horseback to the country, when on nearing the town about midnight he was furiously attacked by a pack of fifteen or twenty dogs. They bit the horse he was riding, caught the bridle in their teeth, pulled the stirrups from Mr. Baldwin's feet, and made frantic efforts to tear him from the saddle. Finding that he could not scare them off, he put spurs to his horse and rode for his life, followed by the yelping, barking, biting pack of curs, into the heart of the town, their glaring eyes and protruding tongues proclaiming them bent upon his destruction. The citizens were aroused, and came to Mr. Baldwin's rescue with guns and pistols, and the infuriated brutes were compelled to take to the woods, where they remained until Sunday, attacking and killing grown cattle. By that time the excitement had greatly increased, and the danger was so manifest that the Shoeheel Rifles, the military company of that place, were called out to hunt the dogs, the people of the neighborhood joining in the pursuit, and after a whole day spent in the effort, the pack was broken up, many of the dogs being killed. The curious part about the whole story is that the dogs belonged to the people in and around Shoeheel, and no one has yet been able to explain their conduct or to account for their combination. Hydrophobia was suggested, but those who witnessed their behavior say that it was not such as to justify this theory.

WHY THE WRINKLES COME.

Little Bo Peep climbs on to my knee—
Little Bo Peep is four years old,
And what her bright blue eyes don't see
Would need a microscope to behold.

She pulls my beard—that's one of her tasks;
She pinches my cheek with her little fat thumb,
Then looking straight in my face she asks:
"What is it that makes the wrinkles come?"

Ah, little Bo Peep, you cannot guess
How hard is the question you thus propound;
It calls for greater wisdom (or less)
Than ever philosopher yet has found.

There was a time, my little Bo Peep,
When my face was as smooth as yours is now,
When never a line or wrinkle deep
Had left its imprint on my brow.

A time when I woke from balmy sleep
To find life always a glad surprise;
When I laughed as you laugh, my little Bo Peep,
And looked on the world with the same big eyes.

Ah, well, I laughed and loved and grew old,
Working away at life's hard sum,
And half was dross that I dreamed was gold—
And so the wrinkles began to come!

Yes, that is the way, my little Bo Peep—
As near as I can tell you now—
That is the way the furrows deep
One by one crept over my brow.

When I saw the glad, bright dreams of youth,
Like the roses of summer, wither away;
When I learned how the fragrant flower of truth
By the thistles of falsehood were strangled one day;

When the faith I placed in man was returned
By man's ingratitude, blacker than night;
When the hard and bitter truth had been learned
That might, in this world, too often makes right;

When I saw the good borne down and oppressed,
The wicked triumphant in their shame,
The Samaritan scorned and the Pharisee blessed—
Then, little Bo Peep, the wrinkles came!

But may you in the sunshine forever bask,
So that, when the years shall have made you gray,
Some future Bo Peep, gazing at you, shall ask:
"What is it that keeps the wrinkles away?"

ON A BLACKBOARD.

Mildred Parmenter sat in the little parlor, beating her feet impatiently on the striped rag carpet. Two neighbors had dropped in to see her aunt, and the three ladies, with their knitting-work and occasional resort to their black papier-mache snuff-boxes, were discussing the probable fate of a disagreeable farmer in the vicinity, whose theft of "a yearling" was the chief topic of conversation in all the farm houses within a radius of a dozen miles.

Miss Mildred caught up her hat and sauntered out of the front door. Only a few rods away were the pine woods—cool, still and fragrant.

A wagon came rattling along the crooked, sandy road. Her uncle was returning from a trip to the village, and, as he drove into the shed, he called out to her:

"Letters, darter."

It was always his name for her—she was so like a daughter he had lost. She waited for the letters, not very impatiently. There were only two of them. The one from her sister she opened first.

"And Mr. Elson came yesterday," ran one of the paragraphs. "We told him of your fancy to bury yourself all summer in the rural districts, but assured him you would join him for a week, at least, before we returned to New York. Of course that is the only thing that prevents him from leaving the Springs at once. By the way, he heard before he came up that it is all over between you and Oscar, who is engaged to that cousin of his, Ella Hunt, who was always held up as a model of all the virtues. I don't doubt that she is exactly suited to him. Mamma is delighted that Mr. Elson is going to stay with us. You know, Milly, what she has set her heart on, and of course you won't disappoint us all."

Yes, Mildred reflected, she was altogether the proper person for Oscar Brant, and with a queer little laugh she thought of the hopeless difference between herself and this most admirable woman. But the laugh was so near akin to a sob that she dared not trust herself to go on thinking. She caught up the other letter, from a young lady sojourning at Saratoga. It was addressed in a large, dashing hand, covering the whole envelope. "Why will she use violet ink?" was Mildred's thought as she opened it. It was as dashing inside as out.

"You are certainly a gay deceiver, my dear. To think that your health required rest and mountain air, so that you could neither give your family nor me the pleasure of your society. I understand it all now, and really I can't blame you. Oscar Brant is more entertaining than a hotel full of people and handsomer than ever. I saw him for just a moment en route for Champlain with his party. Camping out must be such fun. And to think you have an uncle so conveniently near. Of course you see Oscar every day or two."

"More news!" How little her Saratoga friend guessed at the truth in the case. And Oscar Brant was only four miles away. She could not help it now if the tears came. Why could they not let her alone, she thought. She had come up to the New England hills to gain some of the strength and peace she had lost after she and Oscar Brant had parted. She must try for it harder than ever now that the time drew near for her return to the city.

Her mother and sisters would wait for her at the Springs. Mr. Elson would wait, too—Mr. Elson, worth half a million, 60 years old, his head bald and shiny; a short, fat, fussy man, who had "grown a little stouter." Ugh! They would all go home together, to the fall fashions and dinner parties and formal calls.

She went back to the house presently. She would conquer this foolishness, so she told herself, as she had kept saying over and over again the whole summer long. She would conquer her temper, too; grow humble and docile and patient.

Supper was nearly ready when she came in; a beautiful appeal to an artistic eye, with its heap of snow-white biscuits, deep golden butter and purple grape jelly, but the flowers with which she always decked the table she had forgotten that afternoon. She went at once into the garden, meeting her uncle as he passed by with the foaming milk pails.

"Don't forget my hollyhock, darter," he called out as he passed along. Hollyhocks were a standing joke between them.

When she came again her uncle was carrying on a spasmodic conversation with his wife, who, out of sight in the buttery, was straining the milk.

"An' if they can't find some one to take the school," he was saying, "it'll hev to be shut up awhile."

"What school?" Mildred asked, caring less for the answer than for the effect of a great pansy she was setting among the china-asters.

"Here in our own deestrict. Teacher's sick, an' they can't seem to find no one to take her place."

"How many scholars are there?" she asked, a sudden impulse taking possession of her.

"Not more'n twenty, I reckon. It's a summer school, 'tain't never very large."

"Uncle, would they let me take it?"

"You, darter!"

"Yes, I believe I should enjoy it and it would do me good, beside giving the teacher a little help. She looks as if she needed help."

So it came about that Mildred Parmenter, meeting the children in the road early next morning, introduced herself to them as the lady who would take care of them till their teacher got well.

It was a queer little log school-house to which they went, one of the primitive sort. From all the windows were magnificent views of the mountains, but Mildred improved even on that advantage by occasionally having recitations out of doors, a departure from the orthodox fashion very gratifying to the youthful mind. She had little contact with the country people, and the peculiar dialect, the homely simplicity of life and marked characteristics of her pupils continually amused her.

Bobby Whitman, her youngest scholar, had a strong propensity for chewing gum, a habit which seriously interfered with a naturally defective articulation, but one which he sacrificed for the good graces of his teacher.

With Maggie Wetherbee, one of her oldest pupils, she formed almost an intimacy, listening with interest to the long confidences twanged through a very pretty nose about the trials in tending the baby, picking the "garden sass" and laying down pickles.

Poor Maggie, she learned, was also the victim of an ardent attachment, severely disapproved at home, for "a hand" employed during haying on her father's farm. Between these two extremes in age, she found almost every variety of taste and disposition, realizing that she had entered on a fertile field of usefulness and enjoyment.

She wrote to her sister a very comical account of her experiment, laughing loud as she pictured the disgust of her lady mother, indulged in the wildest dreams of an independent career, and in a few weeks had become convinced that there was really a great deal in life worth living for.

It was little Harley Jones' turn that week to "rid up" the school-house, as he termed it, and Mildred wondered for two successive days at the cluster of flowers which she found on her desk. The great double geraniums seemed to flash their scarlet glory all over the room; and the heliotrope, too, her favorite flower, in masses of purple beauty, filled the air with its fragrance.

A spray of it, with a few delicate ferns, another of her delights, was laid upon the Bible opened at the chapter with which she began the day's exercises. Harley Jones had certainly a taste and appreciation for which she had never given him credit.

He was vigorously cleaning the blackboard one morning, and she came in just in time to see the last few words as he erased them. The writing struck her peculiarly.

"What did you rub out, Harley?" she asked, hanging up her hat in the corner.

"Something you writ yesterday, Miss Carpenter. I was writin' it over."

She smiled at the name. He never could get it right, but she corrected the other slips in his speech.

"You mean something, Harley, and you should say I wrote it. Can you remember?"

"He just done it hisself," piped up a voice behind them. "I seen him when I come in."

"O, Johnnie Mack!" was the teacher's exclamation, "after I have told you so many times." Yet no possible mutilation of verbs seemed to affect her love for the offenders, or to diminish her patience with them, and in the course of the day she noticed that Harley Jones had really made vast improvements in his copy-book. But she had occasion to reprove Maggie Wetherbee as they walked home together that night.

"I saw you talking with a man this morning, Maggie, when I came across the lot. Is it possible that you meet any one in that way outside your father's house?"

"But it wasn't him," stammered Maggie, growing red.

"Him! Who?"

"Why, Bill, that I told you about. I didn't expect to meet him," she added, growing redder under the consciousness of how easily the stranger could make her false to Bill. "He's boarding somewhere round, and just asked how soon school would be out. He's drawing a picture of our school-house—and that's all. He had lots of pictures in a big flat book."

A strolling artist, Mildred thought. She knew nothing about artists, but had an idea they were rather inoffensive people. Still she determined to watch Maggie. She must not drift into any danger.

Mildred went earlier to school the next morning, earlier even than Harley Jones. Fresh flowers were on the desk again, but with a great start she saw the figure of a man at the blackboard writing. "I am here," were the words he was rapidly tracing with the chalk, "and must see you if—"

Just then he turned, conscious of a presence, but not before she had recovered her self-possession.

"Good morning," she said, quietly, extending her hand, and, with a smile, glanced from his face to the blackboard.

He caught her hand and held it.

"Mildred, are you ready to forgive me yet?"

She drew her hand away and stepped back. "I have nothing to forgive in you, Oscar. I was angry when I saw you last, but I was the one to blame. Forgive me."

He looked at her in astonishment; she seemed so utterly unlike herself.

"And have you got over your love as well as your anger, Mildred?"

The quick color flashed all over her face. She looked like herself once more as she answered:

"That question is in poor taste, Oscar Brant. I have not congratulated you on your engagement to your cousin Ella. I do so heartily," she went on, plunging along into a chaos of words lest she should break down utterly; "she is good and gentle and—and everything that I am not. She—" her voice failed her after all.

"Why, Mildred, what in the world are you talking about?" His arms were around her. She was sobbing on his shoulder. "Where did you hear such a ridiculous story?"

Maggie Wetherbee entered breathlessly, "Miss Parmenter—" then stopped, bewildered at the sight before her eyes. Bobby Whitman and Harley Jones had been quarreling. They came up behind Maggie, each eager to exonerate himself. But the wet eyes and flushed face of their teacher made friends of them instantly. "Is it her beau?" whispered Harley, as he nudged Bobby; but Maggie hustled them both out of the room without ceremony, hurrying after herself, and before the teacher recalled them the question appeared to have been satisfactorily answered.

It was well that the regular teacher could resume her duties the next week, for by that time Mildred was abundantly willing to give them up. Yet she always declared that teaching was the most delightful work in the world, and that she found the happiness of her life on a blackboard.

Preserving Farmers Wives.

"We have seen a great many kinds of preserves, but we have the first well-preserved farmers' wife yet to see. There are well-preserved old maids, and old bachelors. We have heard of the latter being pickled, but have never seen a specimen, though it strikes us they would make a better pickle than preserve. But the poor, tired farmer's wife never finds time to preserve herself. It is always peaches, pears, plums, &c., standing over the hot stove all the the time. If it were not for stopping to take the baby now and then, she would certainly be a perpetual motion, and all this just to tickle the palate of her liege lord and his male friends, for certainly women's alimentive bump is so benumbed while standing over the steaming, roasting mess of conglomerated victuals, that she has no appetite for the same when done.

"Now, we come before you with a recipe to preserve farmer's wives. Never worry, take all the rest that is needed to recuperate your strength, that has been wasted over the preserving pan. Get you a washing machine, a sewing machine and an organ. Read, and keep yourself posted so you can talk with your husband; have something new to tell him, and don't always be under the constrained duty of keeping silent and learning of him. Go to all the public gatherings with him. This gives you the change that is so much needed. Do not think you can not spare the time. If he can, you certainly can. You will find it will add years to your youth and health.

"According to statistics there are more farmers' wives in the insane asylums than of any other class. This is simply because there is not enough change in their lives, as they have but one round of duties to be gone through with, year in and year out. We have read that you could put a sane person in a walled-up room and confine him there and he would soon become insane; and we have come to the conclusion that it is the want of this change that drives farmers' wives to insanity. The average farmers' wife has not even reading matter provided for her. The farmer generally takes a paper that gives the markets and his political views. This satisfies him, and he never takes a thought but what it is all sufficient for her. There are very few women who have been educated to take an interest in politics, and they should have something suited to their tastes. We heard a farmers' wife say, not long since, that she had never read a word in a newspaper since she had been a married woman. If that woman is preserved physically, she certainly is not mentally. Farmers' wives, take more time to preserve yourselves, and let some of the other preserving go. Your families will be just as healthy, and you will be able to serve them better.—Read by a Lady before a Missouri Grange.

The Devil's Bridge.

It is an enchanting drive to the baths of Lucca. The white road, dazzling and dusty, first runs across the flowery plain to the foot of the hills, and then follows the Serchio far into their recesses. Picturesque villages, with widely overhanging roofs and pergolas of vines bowed with their purple grape clusters cling to the side of the hills. Roses, especially our common China roses, are formed into hedges amid which a shrine with a picture or an image of a saint peeps out here and there. The corn fields are red with gladiolus and poppies or blue with corn flowers. High above the olives, tall cypresses shoot up into the sky. At length, in the narrowest part of the valley, we come upon the old bridge, the Ponte della Maddalena, built by Castruccio more than 500 years ago, with one of the highest and widest arches in Italy, raised even far higher than the roofs of the neighboring houses to be out of the way of the sudden floods which characterize the river. So high it is that the peasants believe that it is impossible that it can have been built by human hands, and it is often known by the name of Ponte del Diavolo. When the builder was in despair, they say, the devil came by night to help him, but demanded the first passenger across the bridge as his reward. In the morning the bridge was finished, but the man outwitted the fiend by making a dog cross the bridge first. So furious was the devil at his disappointment, that he seized the animal and dashed it with such force upon the ground that it went through the center arch, and was carried away by the flood, "in proof of which," says the contadini, "the hole which the dog fell through might be seen under the present pavement of this day."

Mica has been applied to a new use, that of fashioning it into middle soles to boots and shoes. A sheet of mica is embedded in thin coatings of cement, and placed in the boot or shoe under and adjacent to the insole, the upper leather of the shoe lapping over its edges, or next under the filling, or between the filling and the outer or bottom sole, and covering the upper space from the toe to the instep.

It is useless for physicians to argue against short-sleeved dresses. The Constitution of the United States says: "The right to bear arms shall not be interfered with."

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

The eyes of a child under a year old should not be allowed to meet the blaze of an unshaded light.

If we take the word of Dr. Curschmann, consumption may be cured by inhaling pure carbolic acid and oil of turpentine.

Simple Drink for Dyspeptics.—A most palatable drink for a weak stomach is a pint of the best milk and a pint of cold water, adding a well-beaten egg, with salt to suit.

Get Your Sleep.—Nothing gives more mental and bodily vigor than sound rest when properly applied. Sleep is our great replenisher, and if we neglect to take it naturally in childhood, all the worse for us when we grow up. If we go to bed early, we ripen; if we sit up late, we decay; and, sooner or later, we contract a disease called insomnia, allowing it to be permanently fixed upon us, and then we decay, even in youth. Late hours are shadows from the grave.

How to Cure a Cold.—A medical journal tells how one man was cured of a cold: "He boiled a little wormwood and horehound together, and drank freely of the mixture before going to bed. The next day he took five pills, put one kind of plaster on his breast, another under his arm, and still another on his back. Upon advice from an experienced old lady he took all these off with an oyster-knife in the afternoon, and slapped on a mustard-plaster instead. Then he put some hot bricks on his feet and went to bed. Next morning another old lady came in with a bottle of goose-oil, and gave him a dose of it on a quill; and an aunt arrived about the same time with a bundle of sweet fern, which she made into tea and gave him every half-hour until noon, when he took a big dose of salts. After dinner, his wife, who had seen a fine old lady of great experience in doctoring, gave him two pills of her own make, about the size of a walnut and of similar shape, and two teaspoonfuls of home-made balsam to keep them down. Then he took a half-pint of hot rum, at the suggestion of an old sea Captain visiting in the next house, and steamed his legs with an alcohol bath. At this crisis two of his neighbors arrived, who saw at once that his blood was out of order, and gave him a half-gallon of spearmint tea and a big dose of castor-oil. Before going to bed he took eight of a new kind of pills, wrapped about his neck a flannel soaked in hot vinegar and salt, and had feathers burned on a shovel in his room. He is now cured and full of gratitude."

Nasal Catarrh.—We condense some leading points from an excellent paper on the subject, read by Dr. Bosworth before the New York Academy of Medicine: The nasal cavity and the pharynx (the cavity of the mouth back of the soft palate) are alike covered with a mucous membrane; are alike traversed by the current of air in respiration; are alike exposed to inflammation from changes of temperature and from inbreathed dust, and are alike without means of cleansing from hurtful accumulations. The mucous membrane keeps itself moist and soft by its own peculiar secretion. Its inflammation is the source of nasal catarrh. When inflamed the secretion is either increased or diminished. In the latter case we have "dry" catarrh. In both cases the inflammation tends to become chronic—the liability to "colds" constantly increasing, and each new one helping toward the chronic condition. In both cases—and this is the worst fact about it—the membrane is thickened by the inflammation, and in time may become permanently so, to the extent of closing up the passages. When the inflammation causes an increased flow of mucus it may also cause the white blood corpuscles to exude from the blood vessels, and thus render the mucus purulent or pus-like. This finds exit into the pharynx, where it either accumulates between its roof and the palate, or falls into the throat. The nasal passages becoming obstructed, the patient is forced to breathe through his mouth, whereby the disease is extended to the larynx and toward the lungs. In dry catarrh the thickened membrane crowds upon the mucous glands and arrests their natural activity. In this case the mucus is thick, dries rapidly, and forms a tenacious crust, beneath which the imprisoned secretions undergo degeneration, and become fetid and offensive. The disease should have the early attention of a physician. When the membranes have become hypertrophied (thickened) it is difficult to reduce them except by painful operations, and then the result is not certain. In many cases round masses of flesh develop far within the nostrils, which wholly close up the passages, and can be removed only by instruments.

Capturing Monkeys.

The monkeys are frequently captured in nooses and traps built in the shape of houses. The only entrance is a trap-door in the roof, which communicates with a trigger set upon the ground. Food is spread about inside, the monkeys enter, and, skirmishing around, disturb the trigger, and the trap shuts them in. The third method for catching them is a most ludicrous one. An old, hard cocoanut is taken, and a very small hole made in the shell. Furnished with this and a pocketful of boiled rice, the sportsman sallies into the forest, and stops beneath a tree tenanted by monkeys. Within full sight of these inquisitive spectators he first eats a little rice and then puts a quantity into the cocoanut with all the ostentation possible. The nut is then laid upon the ground, and the hunter retires to a convenient ambush. The reader may be sure that no sooner is the man out of sight than the monkeys race helter-skelter for the cocoanut. The first arrival peeps into it, and, seeing the plentiful store of rice inside, squeezes his hand in through the tiny hole, and clutches a handful. Now, so paramount is greed over every other feeling connected with monkey nature, that nothing will induce the creature to relinquish his hold. With his hand thus clasped he cannot possibly extract it, but the thought that if he leaves go one of his brethren will obtain the feast is overpowering. The sportsman soon appears upon the scene; the unincumbered monkeys fly in all directions, but the unfortunate brute, who still will not let the rice go, is thereby handicapped beyond hope with a cocoanut as large as himself—a state of affairs quite fatal to rapid locomotion, either terrestrial or arboreal. The sequel is that he falls an easy capture to the hunter, a victim to his own greed. Even when caught he reads in the actions of his captor a design to rob him of his rice, and he clutches it all the harder; and the very first thing he does when the nut is cracked and the hand released is to cram its contents into his mouth. Thoughts of escape come afterward.—London Field.

Pet.

The little wizened up man, who brought us eggs and butter all winter, furnished the motive power of this creed as he furnished us amusement all the long stormy season, with his tri-monthly comings and his quaint sayings.

"Pet made this," he would say, taking out a roll of yellow butter, as sweet and delicious as if made of June clover-fed cream. "She's a master hand at butter, Pet is, though I churned it. She don't do any of that work, you may be sure, now."

Sometimes he would bring a batch of eggs larger and dearer than usual.

"Pet's been two weeks saving them," he would say; "her speckled hen laid every one—they're rich—they are. Pet wants ten cents more for them, to buy fal-lals with."

We got to calling her Pet, too, before the winter was through, and by degrees we learned that our butter-and-eggs man had not been of much account until Pet took hold of him—in fact, he had been a hard drinker and was running a farm to waste when he met an angel of deliverance in his wife.

"She were a colledge graduet, too. I heard her speak her piece the last day. Lor'! wasn't she fine—hair as yaller as gold, and all kind o' puffed out. Poor little thing! She don't get time to fix it up that a way now," and he sighed meekly.

We drew pictures to ourselves of "the sweet girl graduate in her golden hair" chasing the speckled hen, and milking the brindle cow, and we made a little heroine of her, wondering how she could give up her school life to redeem such an ordinary man; and yet there were good streaks about him, too. He was so good humored, so patient, and loved his little wife so devotedly.

We often pictured her to ourselves as a frail little thing, struggling with milk-pans and churns, and consoling her starved soul with glowing sunsets, or ideal dreams that enveloped her in rose-colored glory as she toiled in the life she had chosen.

We hoped her lord and master was not a hard task-setter; but blue eyes and a benevolent smile do not always denote a good heart, and we sometimes feared that he shirked his duties, and only came to town with the produce because it was pleasanter than staying at home. Once we were going to send a book—a new story—to Pet, but her husband discouraged us. "She hain't time to bother with readin'; the minute she gets through she goes to bed," and we concluded she must have a hard time of it, though the little man did sound her praises so loudly.

One day we happened to go into the country, and as it was in the direction of our egg-and-butter man's house, we determined to call and see Pet, taking for an excuse the fact that we were just out of butter. As we drove up we noticed the scrupulous neatness of everything, and had reached the front door, when it opened, and a tall woman stood in the way, with arms-a-kimbo.

She was the tallest woman we had ever imagined, and as we looked at her aghast, the youngest of our party observed sotto voce:

"We should have brought a step-ladder with us."

"Well," said the woman, looking at us with the coldest china-blue eyes, that were intensified by a crown of fiery-red hair, "what do you want?"

We closed ranks for protection and murmured in concert something that had a sound like "butter."

"Well, you can't get any butter here. My man is down sick with influenzy, and as soon as he's up he'll take it all to the city to some folks that never can get enough. I wish they had to churn it, I reckon they'd eat less grease then."

"Pet," piped a feeble voice that we knew, from the interior of the house: "Who be you talkin' to?"

"Never you mind! jest shet up and go to sleep; there's a big churnin' waitin' for you."

She never asked us in—she was as clean and neat and narrow and vixenish as she could be, and her long, muscular arms were bare to the shoulders, and she stood before us like grim fate. We, slowly backed off the door step, looked up and up to the freckled face and cold blue eyes, then turned and incontinently fled!

As we scrambled into our carryall the youngest cast one look at the inexorable figure in the doorway and murmured: "O, Pet, Pet, wherefore art thou, Pet!" —Detroit Free Press.

On an Ocean Steamer.

The principal change I remarked in the manners and customs on the voyage was the marked increase of playing and betting on board. When I first crossed, ten years ago, there was nothing more than an occasional game at whist in the saloon or smoking-room. This voyage it was not easy to get out of the way of hard play, except on deck. The best corner of the smoking-room was occupied from breakfast till "Out lights" by a steady poker party, and other smaller and more casual groups played fitfully at the other tables. There were always whist and other games going on in the saloon, but of a soberer and (in a pecuniary sense) more innocent character. There were "pools" of sovereign or half-sovereign on every event of the day, the "run" being the most exciting issue. The drawer of the winning number seldom pocketed less than £40, when it was posted on the captain's chart at noon.

I heard that play is rather favored now than otherwise on all the lines, as a percentage is almost always paid to the funds of the Sailors' Orphans' Asylum, for which excellent charity a collection is also legitimately made during every passage. We were good supporters, and collected nearly £70 at our entertainment, which I attribute partly to the fact that we had on board an American actor, who most good-naturedly, "turned himself loose" for us, and that the plates at the doors were held by the daughters of an English Earl and an American Ambassador of great eminence.—The Spectator.

SCRAPS OF SCIENCE.

M. Fermot recently stated to the French Academy that wormwood proves remarkably effective as an insectifuge, driving away every kind of insect, as well as rattlesnakes and other serpents.

A new method of reproducing photographs in colors on China will, it is predicted, completely revolutionize that art. By the new process a dinner-plate can be converted into a veritable work of art at a slight expense—not one-twentieth of the cost by the plan of hand-painting.

An invention which must prove of much importance in architecture and sculpture has recently been made by Dr. Gehring of Landshut, Bavaria. By means of an enameling liquid, he claims to be able to render any kind of stone or cement harder than granite, and gives it the appearance of any other mineral desired. The enamel may also be applied to metal, and is said to effectually preserve it from rust.

Meteorologists have found that United States storms usually advance from the Upper Mississippi Valleys toward New York and New England, less frequently toward Virginia, and seldom toward the Carolinas. American storm centers most frequently pass off the coast between 45 and 50 degrees north latitude. The great waves of high barometer, with fierce northwest winds in their front, usually advance from the Rocky Mountains toward Virginia and the Carolinas, but less frequently toward New England.

Sig. G. Bignami Sormani, of Milan, finds that the density of snow at time of falling varies remarkably. During his observations he has found snow so dense that it weighed over thirty pounds to the cubic foot, being nearly half as heavy as water, while the lightest snow weighed by him showed but a trifle more than two and a half pounds per cubic foot. It is assumed that the density of new-fallen snow is ordinarily about one-eighth that of water, or, in round numbers, eight pounds each cubic foot.

M. Blerzy describes an interesting experiment in physics which is readily performed by any person. Place an iron pot full of water on the fire. When the water is boiling vigorously, remove the pot; then, if the hand be brought into contact with it, only a moderate heat is felt. But immediately the water ceases to boil, the sensation of burning is received. The only risk attending the experiment, states M. Blerzy, is that of blackening one's hand.

Dr. J. Holetschek has lately given a review of the world's knowledge of the asteroids, or the group of bodies which revolve in orbits between those of Mars and Jupiter. Of the 200 planets of this group which had been discovered up to July, 1879, 63 were discovered in the United States, 60 in France, 28 in Germany, 17 in Austria, 15 in Great Britain, 11 in Italy, 5 in Asia, and 1 in Denmark. Professor Peters, of the Clinton Observatory, has discovered more (36) than any other single observer. The orbits of 117 were calculated in Germany, those of 48 in the United States, and those of the others in Austria, France, England Russia and Sweden. No satisfactory theory has yet been advanced to account for the existence of these remarkable little worlds.

German Court Ceremonies.

In plain-going England a Prince has to be married very much like anybody else. But in Prussia the Court still lives in an old-fashioned world, which lower mortals have not yet presumed to enter. A King's marriage is a ceremonial of itself, and a Prince must submit to a wearisome ordeal of forms. The Hof-Prediger's duties are at an end, the Hof-Marschall's begin, and doubtless that stern functionary will scorn to intermit on this one jot or title of the medieval ceremonies which three years ago attended the weddings of Prince William's sister and cousin. "La Cour" is a form which has ever been dear to the Hohenzollerns. While the Emperor and Empress sit in state the guests walk past them in silent file—the ladies first, the gentlemen next, and the less distinguished courtiers in the order which has been assigned them. At one time the sovereign, to indicate his superiority, used to play whist and chess while the procession swept along on its stately march. But of late years he has contrived to bear the irksome ceremony without recourse to any pastime. Supper is a less undesirable form; but it, too, is a ceremony. The place of every human being is fixed in Prussia by some law, written or traditional, and at the royal table is apportioned in exact accordance with the particular individual's rank in the table of precedence. Even the great nobles and Princes who hand the soup and plates and pour out the wine are as much hereditary officials as is the Grand Carver in the Queen's Scottish household or the Pipe-bearer in the Seraglio of the Sultan. There being now no Holy Roman Empire, there are, of course, no Electors to surround the Emperor as he "sits in kaiser pomp and pride;" but the duty of attending on his wants is too lofty to be yet trusted to the ignoble hands of untitled footmen. Supper over, the medieval "Fackeltanz" begins. As the royal personages sit on the dais—the ladies on the right, the gentlemen on the left, of the Emperor and Empress—the Grand Marshal, bearing a lighted taper, approaches. Behind him are the Cabinet Ministers, and at their backs come the married couple. After they have solemnly walked around the room to the music of a polonaise, the Emperor takes up the march as the escort of the bride. Then follows the Empress, and so on until the hall has been paced in circuit 22 times, and every guest has conventionally danced with the bride and bridegroom. The last ceremony of all is the most curious. The bride's garters are distributed to the assembled guests. But as these articles of toilet are limited by nature, scarlet ribbons embroidered with her initials serve their places, and enable the royal lady to gratify every assistant in the laborious operation of marrying an imperial husband.—London Standard.

Home-Made Candy.

All children are fond of candy, and if pure, a moderate amount is not injurious. In these days of adulteration, that made at home is safest to give them. It is a simple matter to make chocolate caramels; all that is needed is one cup of sweet milk, one cup of molasses, half a cup of sugar, half a cup of grated chocolate, a piece of butter the size of a walnut; stir constantly and let it boil until it is thick, then turn it out on to buttered plates; when it begins to stiffen, mark it in squares, so that it will break readily when cold. Cocoanut caramels are made of two cups of grated cocoanut, one cup of sugar, two table-spoonfuls of flour, the whites of three eggs beaten stiff; bake on a buttered paper in a quick oven. Nice white candy is easily made. Take one quart of granulated sugar, one pint of water; two table-spoonfuls of vinegar; boil just as you do molasses candy, but do not stir it; you can tell when it is done by trying it in cold water. Pull it as if it were molasses candy; have a dish near by with some vanilla in it, and work in enough to flavor it as you pull; put it in a cold room, and the next day you will have delicious candy.

We All Have Faults.

He who boasts of being perfect is perfect in his folly. I have been a great deal up and down in the world, and I never yet saw perfect man or horse, and I never shall until I see Sundays come together.

You cannot get white flour out of a coal sack, nor perfection out of human nature; he who looks for it had better look for sugar in the sea. The old saying is "Lifeless, faultless." Of dead men we should say nothing but good; but as for the living, they are all tarred more or less with a black brush, and half an eye can see it. Every heart has a soft place in it, and every heart has its black drop.

Every rose has its prickles, and every day its night. Even the sun shows spots, and the skies are darkened with clouds. Nobody is so wise but he has folly enough to stock a stall at Vanity Fair. Where I could see the fool's cap, I have nevertheless heard the bells jingle. As there is no sunshine without some shadows, so all human good is mixed up with more or less evil; even poor law guardians have their little failings, and parish beadles are not wholly of a heavenly nature.

The best wine has its lees. All men's faults are not written on their foreheads and it is quite as well they are not, or hats would need wide rims; yet as sure as eggs are eggs fault of some kind nestles in every man's bosom.

There's no telling when a man's faults will show themselves, for hares pop out of a ditch just when you are not looking for them. A horse that is weak in the knees may not stumble for a mile or two, but it is in him, and the rider had better hold him up well.

The tabby cat is not lapping milk just now, but leave the dairy door open, and we will see if she is not as big a thief as the kitten. There's fire in the flint, cool as it looks; wait till the steel gets a knock at it, and you will see. Everybody can read that riddle, but it is not everybody that will remember to keep his gunpowder out of the way of the candle.

Yes, and the very ones who cry the loudest over one's faults have grosser failings in themselves. It is a much easier thing to point out and speak of a man's faults than it is to say you are sorry he has them. Together hand in hand with faults and failings, should go sympathy. Then we could say that we had soberly reflected on these faults of others, and then how much the sum of human happiness could be advanced by sympathy.

We get cheerfulness and vigor, we scarcely know how or when, from mere association with our fellow men, and from the looks reflected on us of gladness and enjoyment. We catch inspiration and power to go on from human presence and from cheerful looks. The woman works with additional energy having others by. The full family circle has a strength and life peculiarly its own. The substantial good and effectual relief which men extend to another is trifling. It is not by these, but something far less costly that the work is done. Our Maker has insured it by a much more simple machinery. He has given to the weakest and the poorest, power to contribute largely to the common stock of gladness. The child's smile and laugh are mighty powers in this world. When bereavement has left you desolate, or misfortune bowed you to the earth, what substantial benefit is there which makes condolence acceptable? It can bestow on you nothing permanent. But a warm hand has touched yours, and its thrill told you that there is indeed a living response there to your every emotion. On look, one human sigh, has done more for you than the costliest present could convey.

How much better then would it be for us all to eschew altogether calling attention to each other's faults, and practice sympathy strictly and entirely.—Unknown Exchange.

Mr. Lane's Mistake.

It is amusing how knock-kneed some people are in their hearing—never get anything exactly right. The other morning, up at the revival meeting, while urging the "almost persuaded" among his hearers to come forward and join the salvation army, Mr. Moody said:

"Let any still doubting sinner among you come right up on the platform here, and I will wrestle with him."

In the fervency of his invocation, Mr. M. did not perceive a man climb up out of the audience and take off his coat with scientific calmness. The stranger was Mr. Homer Lane, the champion collar and elbow wrestler of the United States, and he had just caught the great revivalist a catch-as-catch-can hiplock, and was about flipping him over the melodeon when Mr. Sankey interfered and the matter was explained, Mr. Lane being much impressed by the jolly and amiable manner in which his apologies were accepted by the great campaigners against the old original spine twister himself.—Derrick Dodd.

Two country spinsters were stopping at a friend's house in Boston, after their return from a scientific lecture. They occupied the same apartment, and shortly after midnight one of them started up, and awakening the other, exclaimed in great trepidation: "Betsey, I believe there is a man under the bed!" Betsey merely raised her finger in an admonitory way, and replied: "Don't make a noise then, Jane, you may scare him away."

Our Knowledge of Shakspeare.

It is the man Shakspeare who really influences us in reading "Hamlet" and "Othello," and not the less because critics generally repeat the assertion that we know very little of the man who retires so carefully behind his characters. We have, it is true, next to nothing of the kind of information about Shakspeare which Boswell gave us about Johnson. But surely we know a good deal about a man if we know only this—that he is capable of sympathizing impartially with a vast variety of characters, and in some very important respects it seems to me that we know more of Shakspeare than of Johnson. If we know less of his domestic relations and his taste in cookery, we know what he felt and thought about some of the most profoundly interesting of all the problems of life. But, whether we have or have not framed any theory as to Shakspeare's personality, or have or have not constructed a theory of the man from his books, it is not the less the man who really influences us. For what really impresses us in Shakspeare, or in any great writer, is the extraordinary force and vividness with which he has embodied certain general truths and deep emotions, and his power of achieving that feat clearly depended upon his own emotional and intellectual temperament. The nature of the influences is not the less clear that it acts as from behind a cloud.

Can Consumption be Cured?

Read what Mr. William C. Digges, a merchant of Bowling Green, Va., writes under date of April 4th, 1881. He says: I firmly believe that Allen's Lung Balsam will and has cured consumption if taken in time and proper care be taken of the Patient both in suitable food and clothing. Six years ago my mother was attacked with pneumonia. The attending physician "some time after" told me that the disease had settled on her Lungs and that she had the consumption. Not believing that a permanent cure could be effected, but thinking I might be able to get an expectorant not containing opium, which would afford some relief, I inquired of a druggist at Richmond, Va., if he had any medicine not containing opium, that was a good expectorant. He then recommended Allen's Lung Balsam, which I purchased and induced my mother to try. Before she had taken the first bottle, the improvement in her condition was so marked that I purchased three more bottles. The attending physician, seeing the beneficial effects, recommended its continued use, and in about twelve months her lungs were pronounced cured. Upon my recommendation many others who had the consumption have been cured. I think you can claim for your medicine the following: Expectoration without irritation, and healing of the lungs by keeping them free from foreign substances, thus arresting and curing this dread disease. Mr. Digges says he writes because he wants it known that Allen's Lung Balsam is doing good.

Sailing on a Sea of Fire.

One of the beautiful revelations of a summer night to a dweller in the country is the myriads of lights flashed forth by fire-flies. "But they that go down to the sea in ships" gaze upon a light that never was upon land—the illuminations of the deep by countless millions of fire-fish, invisible to the naked eye.

An English clergyman, while voyaging in the Indian ocean, was called on deck one night to see the ship sailing on a sea of fire.

There was no moon, the night was pitch dark, and yet it was as light as day. Before, behind, on the port and on the starboard side, as far as the eye could see, the surface of the ocean was one blaze of light.

The clergyman ran down to his cabin and brought up a small-type Bible. Opening it he read with ease and aloud several verses. The mate informed him that the ship, going at ten knots, had been sailing for an hour over that phosphorescent sea.

Determined to do what he could to solve the scientific question, the clergyman had a bucket of the liquid fire hauled on board.

The bucket came up full of bright sparks; and, picking up some of the brightest with the tip of his finger, he fixed them, while wet, to the object glass of a powerful microscope.

The next morning there were minute specks of something on the glass. On being examined through the microscope, they proved to be fish, dead, of course, and doubled up like shrimps. He drew and painted them in their magnified form.

Whether there may be animalculæ in other forms which carry light at sea, he does not know. But he does know that those which turned night into day before his eyes were minute shrimp-like forms, with heads and legs and transparent bodies.

A Jest Ending in Earnest.

A young gentleman and young lady who were acquainted met on the street and commenced bantering each other about marriage. He offered himself in a jesting way, and the conversation was kept up until they reached the young lady's home. Neither had the slightest idea of getting married at the time, but Cupid was at work shooting arrows, and the discussion was resumed in the parlor. He again offered himself, and dared her to marry him that day. She replied, as she caught up her hat, "Let us go." He seized his hat and assented. They visited the County Clerk's office, secured a license and repaired to the residence of a clergyman, stating the object of their visit. He asked if it was a runaway match. The young man replied, "Not exactly." The clergyman wished to know if the young lady's parents had agreed to the marriage. The young man said "No, but that he could send for her mother." It was done, and the mother, after objecting, was induced to say "Yes." They were married, and are now as happy as any of those who married after long courtships, and more so, perhaps. May they live long and prosper.—Memphis, (Tenn.) Appeal.

Vanity of Highwaymen.—A Galveston lady was reading a newspaper account of a stage robbery that recently took place west of San Antonio and was very indignant on reading that besides robbing the passengers they had opened the mail and read the letters, among them, possibly, a letter the lady herself had written to a friend. "You needn't be alarmed," remarked the lady's husband, "I dare say they did not read a word in any of those letters, as those fellows don't know B. from bull's foot." "Why, then, did they make out that they read them?" "Oh, they made out they could read so as to make a favorable impression on the passengers."—Galveston News.

HOLMAN'S PAD CURES Without MEDICINE Simply by Absorption. TRADE MARK. The Only True Malarial Antidote.

Dr. Holman's Pad is no guess-work remedy—no feeble imitative experiment—no purloined hodge podge of some other inventor's idea; it is the original and only genuine curative Pad, the only remedy that has an honestly-acquired right to use the title-word "Pad" in connection with a treatment for chronic diseases of the Stomach, Liver and Spleen.

By a recently perfected improvement Dr. Holman has greatly increased the scope of the Pad's usefulness, and appreciably augmented its active curative power.

This great improvement gives Holman's Pad (with its Adjuvants) such complete and unfailing control over the most persistent and unyielding forms of Chronic Disease of the Stomach and Liver, as well as Malarial Blood-Poisoning, as to amply justify the eminent Professor Loomis' high encomium: "It is nearer a Universal Panacea than anything in Medicine!"

The success of Holman's Pads has inspired imitators who offer Pads similar in form and odor to the genuine HOLMAN PAD. Beware of these Bogus and Imitation Pads, gotten up to sell on the reputation of the GENUINE HOLMAN PAD.

Each Genuine Holman Pad bears the Private Revenue Stamp of the HOLMAN PAD COMPANY with the above Trade Mark printed in green.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, IND.: APRIL 28, 1881.

J. A. BARNS, D. Y. HUSSELMAN, EDITORS.

AT McArthur, Ohio, the Journal heretofore one of the republican organs of that county, has repented the evil of its ways, and is now democratic to the core.

OUR legislature ought to meet every fifteen years and remain in session thirty day, and make the appropriations and go home. We have got plenty of law now.

GEN. JOE LANE, formerly a prominent citizen of Indiana, and candidate for vice-president on the Breckenridge ticket, died at his home in Roseburg, Oregon, April 21, aged eighty years

THE democrats in Ohio are looking up a suitable candidate for governor. Several names have been suggested, among them that of Gen. A. V. Rice, and Mr. Means, the new mayor of Cincinnati.

EARL BEACONSFIELD died the 19th of April. He was one of the ablest statesmen of modern times. "He had been in public life over twenty-five years, and was the leader of the tory or conservative party, as Gladstone is of the liberals.

THE Goshen Times says the democrats of Indianapolis had to go outside of Indianapolis and take a citizen of Fort Wayne for candidate for mayor. Don't he know that Prof. Smart has been a resident of Indianapolis for the last six years? The boasted intelligence of these republicans is so perplexing.

EMIGRATION this year bids fair to exceed anything heretofore known. Already, although so early in the season, several ship loads have arrived. The arrivals in Baltimore alone amounted to nearly 4,700 last week. Those who landed there last Saturday were sent to Cincinnati and points south and west, on three special trains.

A Merited Promotion.

David McEntarfer, who has for years, been a faithful employe of the Ft. Wayne & Jackson rail road as section boss was last week promoted to be trackmaster of the road. We have known Mr. McEntarfer many years, and know him to be worthy of the trust reposed in him by the officers of the road. We learn that he is soon to remove his family from this place to Angola, to be more convenient to his work. Shake, Dave, shake; it does us good to see you prosper.

THE senate deadlock still continues. Democratic members are willing to go into executive session, so as to confirm the nominations made by the president, but the republicans refuse to do this until the senate officers are elected, as the candidate for door-keeper is a friend to Mahone, and it is their desire to elect this man so as to pay Mahone for voting with them. This the democrats do not intend to allow, as they claim that Mahone must get his pay of those who made the bargain, and not ask democrats to help do it.

REMENYI, the celebrated violinist, while playing at Pike's opera-house in Cincinnati recently, closed the performance one evening for a singular reason. Soon after beginning to play, one of the violin strings twisted, and he had to stop. When he started again the E string broke. He went off the stage to put on another, and while doing so, the bridge of the violin broke. He became frightened, and believing some great misfortune was about to befall him, came upon the stage and dismissed the audience. The next night the concert came off as usual.

IT is the opinion of many that the democratic senators will sustain Conkling in preventing the confirmation of Robertson as collector of the port of New York. If they do this, it will be for the sake of sustaining what is called "senatorial courtesy." This means that nominations by the president for any appointed offices must have the approval of the senators of the state in which the appointment is made. If the doctrine prevails, it might perhaps give the democratic senators in the southern states a partial chance to get control of the Federal patronage in those states.

WE see from our exchanges that some are still under the impression that township trustees are entitled to $1.00 a day as overseers of the poor, by virtue of their office. If our brethren will turn to page 680 of volume one, Indiana Statutes, (Davis' revision,) and read section 20 they will find that the trustees are entitled to $1.00 per day for each day necessarily employed. The section reads as follows: "The overseers of the poor in each township in the state shall be entitled to receive each one dollar per day for each and every day during which they shall be necessarily employed in the discharge of their several duties, to be allowed by the board of county commissioners on being satisfied of such service having been performed."

Neighborhood Nippings.

Hicksville had quite an extensive fire recently.

Max Nirdlinger, of Fort Wayne, has invented a self-adjusting car-coupler, and applied for a patent.

Three stores and their contents were burned at Edon, Ohio, recently. Loss about $8,000. Insurance $5,000.

The people of Columbia City think of starting a pleasure resort on the banks of Loon Lake in that county.

W. H. H. Rutter, a prominent citizen of Columbia City, and at present county auditor of Whitley county, died Friday and was buried Sunday. He had some army comrades in this county. He went to the army from Millersburg, Ohio, and was lieutenant of company A. 102 Ohio volunteer infantry.

An old man of seventy went to town at Lumberton, North Carolina, recently with a wagon drawn by one ox. When he started home the ox gave out, but nothing daunted, the old man adjusted the yoke to his own neck, took a big drink of whisky and started for home, leaving the ox, but hauling his wife, who remained coolly seated in the wagon. It was more than six miles, but he made it, and insists he could have gone ten miles if necessary.

A Dangerous Accident.

Last Friday evening, while Mr. Edward Buckmaster and a boy named Shafstall, of Hudson, were on their way to this place to inform some friends of a death that had happened at the above village, their buggy struck a stump that stands on the narrow grade just above Mr. Mader's, when the horse became frightened and ran away. Only a few moments elapsed until the animal was loose from the vehicle, and came down through town at a rapid rate. He ran up to Casebeer & Matheny's livery stable, where Joe. Ruffner took care of him. Mr. B. was not injured, but the lad had one of his shoulders dislocated and was otherwise bruised. He was placed under the care of Dr. Matheny, and on Monday was taken to his home at Hudson. It would be very gratifying to a number of people who travel this road if the supervisor would act in the capacity of a stump-puller, and remove this dangerous obstacle.

Democratic Caucus.

The caucus announced for last Saturday evening, was largely attended. Hon. D. D. Moody acted as chairman, and Clerk Baxter and F. E. Davenport as tellers. Everything passed off harmoniously, and all were well satisfied with nominees.

M. Boland was nominated trustee for the first ward. The choice was an excellent one, and the voters of Auburn can console themselves that Mike will keep things straight in his end.

C. C. Shaffer's smiling countenance represents the second ward. Chris. is a live, energetic fellow, and will work hard for the interest of our people.

J. C. Henry, the happy, jovial notion man, was selected for the third ward, and received the loud applause of the audience.

Mr. Wilson, of the firm of Shearer & Wilson, stands before the people of the town for trustee of the fourth ward.

D. Z. Hoffman was chosen for the fifth ward. And with these five men at the head of the democratic ticket, it will only be a waste of time for our republican friends to vote. Better make garden.

For several years past, our young and popular attorney, Thomas H. Sprott, has been steriotyped for the office of town clerk. Tom is again the nominee, and we anticipate for him a rousing big majority.

Geo. Schaab, the accommodating fellow of the firm of Schaab, Beugnot & Co., cleared the track for treasurer, and consequently the next town treasurer will be George.

Thos. P. Scott was again re-nominated for marshal. Tom has been a good, efficient public servant, and has our streets in a good condition. If he can't beat the republican nominee he better give up political aspirations. Echo answers, "just so."

Next Monday the election will be held in the old jail building as usual, and we hope every democratic voter within the corporation limits of the town will cast his slip. It is not that the election is so important that we ask for a full vote, but the interest of the party is at stake, and not only that, but republicanism must and shall be kept under the strong arm of the democratic party in old DeKalb. Vote on the way to and from your labor, and have your friends do the same.

WARK.

Things that have Sprung up During the week.

—Plowing.

—Garden making.

—Plow your lots.

—Election Monday.

—Delightful weather.

—Get down your dusters.

—Stone masons are busy.

—The ice wagons are out.

—Good sale for straw hats.

—Put up your screen doors.

—Joe. [illegible] has a new horse.

—Ef. Watson drives a new horse.

—This is the last week of school.

—Have you got a touch of it yet?

—The town pump is out of whack.

—Rain and thunder Monday night.

—Tom. Mays will not move south until fall.

—Butchers complain of the scarcity of stock.

—The buggy riders were out enmasse Sunday.

—A new sidewalk along the Dills property.

—Now, the spring time has come, gentle Annie.

—Did you settle that account due Billy Rainier.

—The Eckhart Carriage Works are very busy now.

—L. Bowers is painting his house on Jackson street.

—Have you seen Sam pommert grin since he shed?

—Time to open up the Presbyterian "billiard gardens."

—Jim. Pearce is too "high tempered" to make a good Marshal.

—Stick a hoe-handle through Kib's hat and you have an umbrella.

—Hi. Rasley is "tugging it through" at Sheffer & Rush's harness shop.

—Dr. Matheny has patients at Hudson. He goes via the Saginaw road.

—Men are filling in dirt at the end of the Seventh street bridge. Sensible.

—Mr. Brinkerhoff has re-roofed his residence and built some new sidewalks.

—Del. Locke, of Waterloo, will be cashier of his father's saloon, opposite the court-house.

—Mr. Barberett, of dramatic attainment, is now with the painting firm of Canon & Murphy.

—Hollister had ice cream Saturday evening, but I scream that it is too early in the season.

—Joseph Raub made a purchase of an Eckhart buggy on last Saturday. Who will be the next?

—There was scarcely standing room along the creek Sunday. Half of the population took a fish.

—F. M. Philips, the new barber over Tarney's meat market, commenced business last Monday.

—Wm. Murphy has joined the "soldiers' hard-tack social." He was out in a navy-blue suit Sunday.

—A carpet-weaver named Mrs. McClure, living in the north end, died very suddenly last Friday.

—The Odd Fellows' entertainment Tuesday evening was very much appreciated by the audience.

—Pleasure riders from Waterloo turned out largely Sunday. They come here to drive upon our streets.

—Tom. Scott and Judge Picker have placed their swords back in their cases, and now we are all Scott men.

—Geo. Weamer purchased a pitchfork and a shovel Monday, and will begin garden making immediately.

—A German girl, named Cruse, aged about 18 years, living east of town, was buried in the cemetery Saturday.

—Mr. Henry Martin, not Gee Line understand, has a contract for setting out five hundred trees, for one man, at Garrett.

—Hank Yesbera's horse, Hank, is now under the care of Bill Helmns, and will be fitted for the roads as soon as possible.

—Call at the Eckhart Carriage Works before you purchase, where you can select from the largest stock in the county.

—Three drunken umbrella repairers have been lounging about town all week. Now, if Jim. Pearce was only marshal. Whew.

—The boiler at the hub-and-spoke-factory had to be cleaned Sunday so as to enable the machine to be in running order on Monday.

—Tom Gross accidently put his coat-tail through one of his "French plate" glass windows the other day. It was a Gross act on the window.

—A small republican "caucus" was held in the court-yard Sunday morning. The "Okolona Statesman," of the Butler Record, was chairman.

—Some parties, name unknown to us, are negotiating for the upper rooms in Case's building, for the purpose of opening a photograph gallery.

—An old gentleman named Peters, who will be remembered by our citizens as being confined in the county jail for insanity, died at Garrett Tuesday, and was buried here yesterday.

—McQuiston and Ralston have just received a car-load of choice Early Rose and Peach Blow potatoes from Michigan.

—We have long been at loss to know the real value of a hammock swing. We have been led, by the sayings of others, to think that they were manufactured expressly for the infant to kick up its heels and enjoy the balmy breeze of a summer day. But it is not so. As our reporter was strolling about town, the other evening, he had an occasion to learn by experience the importance of the h. s. By the dim light of the moon we were enabled to recognize two objects (young man and lady) who were swinging lazily backward and forward, and upon their countenance one could plainly read: "The hammock swing should be in every family." Now we know just where the real benfit of the hammock lies, and take this way to explain it for the benefit of our readers.

—We take the following from a Grand Haven paper of a recent date: The floral decorations at the Presbyterian church last sabbath, were very beautiful and appropriate for the occasion, and reflect much credit on the floral committee. Rev. Henry Johnson preached a very able, interesting and instructive sermon. He chose for his text these words: "Why Seek Ye the Living Among the Dead?" His sermon was listened to with the closest attention by a large and appreciative audience. We are pleased to notice the increase in the attendance at this church within the last few months, and regret to see so many people having to leave every sabbath evening for want of room.

—The Anderson Bro. carriages are taking the lead, and are giving better satisfaction than any other carriages in the county. Our sales this week were as follows: Conkle & Carpenter, of Pleasant Lake, one extension carriage; Andy Rowlinger, Auburn, one three seated carriage; Irwin Haag, Garrett, 1 open buggy; Elmer Ditmar, LaOtto, one top carriage; Elmer Straub, LaOtto, one top carriage; Pete Freeman, one open buggy; Wm. Reed; Jackson township, one top carriage; John Coy, formerly of Auburn, but now of Angola, one open buggy; Peter Coyle, Corunna, one top carriage. Remember the place, three doors north of post-office.

ANDERSON BROS.,
Auburn, Indiana.

—The COURIER has always advocated the principles of the Democratic party and worked earnestly and faithfully for the best interests of the our citizens and county. A few weeks ago we called the attention of our authorities to the conduct of some "spotted doves" who inhabited the "haunted house" on the Avenue. Our officers investigated the matter and found our item to be substantial. One day last week Sheriff Leas ordered the Marshal to "pull the dive" and he did so. They were told to leave, and obeyed most cordially.

—Auburn has three north and south streets that are a mile or over in length and each one is as level as a "race track." Also a number running east and west that are a half a mile or over, making one of the nicest driving parks in the west. Beautiful shade trees decorate many streets; there are several churches, some of which are very attractive, together with a live, prosperous people, and a Democratic majority. Talk about your loviest villages of the plain, will you.

—Jacob Bowers, father of our towns man, Lewis Bowers, of Bucyrus, Ohio, died the 15th of this month at the age eighty-five years. Deceased was born in Maryland, and afterwards moved to Stark county, Ohio, and from there to Crawford county, where he resided for the last fifty-three years. His son Lewis, of this place, was with him a few days before his death and attended the funeral, returning home last Wednesday evening.

—Last week we stated that tramps stole some goods of Chris. Baker, but a further investigation of the matter has revealed diffrent facts. The parties interested are known and probably the next session of the grand jury will find out all about it. We suppress names for the present, hoping that a satisfactory settlement will be made.

—Our compositor made an item read last week, that Mrs. Houghton had chopped down the locust trees in front of her residence. Mrs. Houghton did not do any such a thing; it was Albert who swung the axe. We have placed the typo on the discharge list, and his vacancy will be filled by the first printer who walks into town.

—One of Ben. Williams' horses fell through a bridge near H. Shull's residence and received a slight injury. It was only a matter of chance, however, as the animal might have been ruined. Our officers should be very particular and see that bridges are substantial and will endure the weight of heavy loads.

—Billy Little has purchased Frank Strebe's shoe-shop, and will continue the manufacture of boots and shoes in this room. He will employ a first-class workman to assist him, and bows to the public, in the roll of all new establishments, asking a share of the general trade.

—Several fellows were driving about town Sunday, filled to the chin with malt liquors, wines, &c., and succeeded in making a disgusting spectacle of themselves. We hear that they abused the horses shamefully and Neal Decker is rathy.

—There was a nigger show in town Tuesday evening. Our citizens have been greatly annoyed with one-horse troupes and it is a difficult matter to get out a crowd when a good company appears.

Personal Mention.

Will. Sheffer is at his post again.

Mrs Jno. Reesch and one child are quite low.

J. A. McKay went west again last Monday.

Mrs. Biglow will visit in Garrett for several weeks.

Dr. Murphy, of Waterloo, looked over town Saturday.

Mrs. A. J. Little made a business trip to Ft. Wayne, Tuesday.

B. H. Weamer, of the Butler Record, was in town over Sunday.

Frank Leas Sundayed at Angola. "He won't tell what for."

Wm. Schrader, living in the north end, is quite low with fever.

Mrs. B. and W. Showers returned from a visit to Freemont Monday.

Frank Dills and Joe Ruffner were buzzing about Hudson the other day.

Misses Alice McKay and Louie Henry gave the COURIER a call Saturday.

Mrs. J. Ruffner is visiting friends and relatives at Fort Wayne this week.

Mr. Wood, a typo in the Steuben Republican office, called on us Saturday.

Mrs. Dr. Rother has returned from her visit in the land where the buckeyes grow.

Charley Groscop left for Leo, Monday, where he will act as foreman on a brickyard.

Miss Ida Bell left for Grand Rapids, Mich., this morning to be gone several days.

Mr. Marshall Mahurin, of Fort Wayne, is in town visiting his sister, Lizzie, who is ill.

Miss Mate Brimerman returned home from Detroit this week, and will spend the summer here.

Rev. J. A. Reynolds, of Eaton, Ohio, will preach in the Presbyterian church next sabbath.

Miss Irena Allen, of Plymouth, Ohio, has been paying Mrs. Hi. Weaver and Mrs. T. P. Scott a visit.

George Staley, one of the daubers at Anderson Brothers' carriage factory, went to Angola to see his Jane last Saturday.

"Dr." Humphrey and Charley Casebeer went to St. Joe. Sunday, to see 'em; but there was another fellow saw them first.

Albert Spacht, formerly of this place, and now conductor of a freight train on the B. & O. road, was in town last Saturday.

F. S. Allen, a graduate of Ann Arbor, Mich., and a brother to our popular young doctor of the firm of Cowan & Allen, was in town last week. He will open a "pill shop" at Mark Center, Ohio.

Play to Those.

—There has been some talk among the members of the band that the organization was about to "blow out," but we are glad to state that further continuance of the band is very favorable. The trouble arose from the difficulty to secure some one to take the horn made silent by the death of Granville Baldock. M. F. Long has come to the rescue, however, and the boys are in hight spirits. They marched through the streets Saturday evening and play some delightful pieces.

—After the band had paraded about the streets Saturday evening they pulled up to the COURIER and gave us several fine selections of music. Chris. Baldeck played his favorite lead piece and the walls of the Kiblinger block trembling under the sharp notes.

—We move that Ora Shaffer be appointed guardian over Johnny Picker. Some of these times he'll blow that bass horn so high that it will—never come down.

—The renters in Case's block and the weary drummer who stops at the Swineford, will make an effort to get the boys a uniform, and what they lack Sim. Tarney will make up.

—Mike Long can hardly play for laughing.

—Frank Myers keeps time with his left eye.

—Charley Groscop ought to have the lead—by the left ear.

—Charley Weaver plays too loud. Soft, sublime music is the sweetest.

—Erv. Hoffman puts on the Presbyterian gesture.

—Sam. Maxfield "pumps" well.

—Geo. Staley don't like to march. The bass drum gets tired.

—Conny Little don't have much respect for the head of a tenor drum.

Caucus Notes.

The band played for Sim, Tarney.

Will J. C. Henry please set 'em up.

Bill Sthair didn't have anything to say.

Peggy took the medal in the stomping act.

Bob. Showers did the cheering. 'Rah for Bob.

Chris. Felt didn't understand how things were running.

The hall was so crowded that Tom Sprott had to stand up.

Cal. Houser (rep.) occupied a prominent seat sucking a three cent orange.

Everybody was "boss," and consequently there was not the best of order.

Davenport, Moody and Baxter have a dramatic appearance when on the stage.

When John Bunch's limb gets well he will put a head on the fellow who voted for him.

Some talented gentleman wrote John Bunch for John Berg, or else William Dills can't read.

A number of the "trundle bed" brigade were acting the part of a man (in their mind) to the disgust of all.

—We notice a tasty new wagon just below the COURIER that has a ply-card attached to it which reads: "Sold by W. H. Kiblinger & Co." Now, if this wagon is sold why in the duce don't the fellow take it home?

It has been decided to hold a nine weeks normal school. It will begin about the twenty-fifth of July, and will be in charge of Prof. Lamport and H. E. Coe. This school will be organized for the benefit of teachers only, and those preparing to teach.

A question of veracity has arisen between Bro. Baxter of the Press, and the other boys. The boys say he ate 31 eggs at S. Beck's on Easter Sunday. This we are told Bro. B. indignantly denies, and says there were only 18. We should hate to see any trouble about so small a matter as 13 eggs.

The town treasurer, J. A. Shull, reports over $3,000 paid on the principal of the school house debt during the past year, and $1,100 of interest. The debt still unpaid is $7,800, of which $6,000 is held by eastern parties, and the balance by the DeKalb Bank. The last bonds fall due in 1884, and by that time the money will be ready to pay them off. This is a very encouraging showing.

Obituary.

John K. Forsythe was born at Burlington, New York, January 23, 1806, and died at the residence of J. M. Kimsey, in Waterloo, April 21, 1881. So that his age was 75 years, 2 months and 28 days. At an early age, Mr. Forsythe removed to Cooperstown, New York, his father buying his land of J. Fennimore Cooper, the well known writer of Indian stories and other novels. Forsythe was acquainted with "Leatherstocking" and other originals of the characters described in Mr. Cooper's novels. In 1836 he removed to Indiana, coming up the lakes in a boat, and landing at Detroit. He was shipwrecked on the lake, and his goods lay under water several days. With four other families he settled in Otsego township, Steuben county. Of these five families who made the first settlement in that township, Mrs. Forsythe is the only survivor. Had Mr. Forsyth lived until April 30 they could have celebrated the fifty-fifth anniversary of their wedding. Mr. Forsythe was the youngest of the family, and only one survives him, a sister living at Lyons, New York.

—The following marriage licenses have been issued by Clerk Baxter since our last issue: Harry W. Cissel and Marah Cissel, Geo. W. Patterson and Della Brooks, Peter Peterson and Sarah E. Bishop. Success to 'em.

—Some scoundrels set fire to a lot of empty cars on the side track of the Eel-River railroad at Logansport the other day. The fire was put out, but not until one car was consumed, and several injured.

—The Kendallville Standard says: Mrs. J. H. Zeis, of this city, died last evening. The remains will be taken to St. Joe, DeKalb county, for interment.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

A BILLIARD contest of 4,000 points, lasting five days, was played between Schaefer and Slosson at New York, and won by the former. Score: Schaefer, 4,000; Slosson, 3,798.

THE leading clergymen of New York who have had the opportunity to gather definite knowledge regarding the revised New Testament appear to be greatly in favor of the new version.... The presence and spread of typhus fever in New York are viewed with much alarm by prominent physicians, especially as the streets of the city are in so filthy a condition that even ordinary diseases, which generally yield to simple remedies, are now aggravated and malignant. Fears of an epidemic are expressed.

WILLIAM A. PARKER, the oldest printer in Boston, who served in the War of 1812, has gone to his reward.... Joseph E. Temple, of Philadelphia, heads with $25,000 a subscription to erect a monument to Gen. John F. Reynolds, who was killed at Gettysburg.

A RIOT, growing out of last fall's election, occurred in Troy, N. Y. Michael Quinn, John Mackey, and a man named Stapleton were fatally shot, and John Reynolds and one or two others dangerously wounded.

SOME months since a monkey escaped from a museum in New York and bit off part of the nose of a little girl. An action for $50,000 was brought by her guardian, and the jury awarded $3,500.

THE WEST.

A GENTLEMAN, who lately arrived at Dubuque from Dakota, tells a pitiful story of the sufferings of the people living along the river bottom. The severe winter has run them short of wood, and, owing to the heavy snowfall, the roads were impassable, causing them to suffer with cold and hunger. A large number of people died from exposure, and others have contracted diseases which will terminate in consumption..... The sixteenth anniversary of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln was commemorated at Springfield by exercises by the Guard of Honor, after the sarcophagus had been decorated with flowers. Speaker Toomas delivered the chief address, and Rev. R. O. Post the benediction.

COL. HENRY W. FARRAR, for many years, until recently, business manager of the Chicago Evening Journal, died of apoplexy at his home in that city.... In a test case to determine the legality of the celebrated Anti-Treating law of Wisconsin, it was found that the law was inoperative, because of error in the text of its supposed enactment. The bill as drawn specifies the repeal of an old law that was dropped when the State statutes underwent their recent revision. Judge Mallory, of Milwaukee, held the law to be inoperative and void.

JIM DEVINE, an escaped convict from California, was lynched at Las Vegas, N. M., for an attempt at murder.... The Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce has leased Pike's Opera House for three years, and will remove in January..... The Exodus Committee in Kansas has distributed over 100,000 negroes and turned 10,000 into other States.

A MALIGNANT form of hoof disease has broken out among the horses in Chicago.... The north wing of the Insane Asylum at Anna, Ill., was burned, causing a loss of $200,000. One patient perished.... Mrs. Catherine Evans, who died at Mendota, Ill., is said to have been 111 years of age. She was born in Philadelphia, and had seen Gen. Washington and other leading characters of the Revolution.... L. L. Gilbert, a Pittsburgh lawyer, lost in a Chicago hotel a mortgage for $20,000,000, which had been quietly executed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. A detective secured the aid of an Italian rag-picker, and, after a tedious search, the precious document was found in a junk-shop.

FLOODS in the rivers of Illinois and Wisconsin have caused great damage to property and some loss of life. A part of the Rock river dam at Beloit, Wis., was carried away, and five men who attempted to cross the river in a row-boat were drowned. A bridge spanning Rock river, at Rock Island, Ill., went down, carrying with it seven persons, two of whom were drowned. At Watertown, Wis., one bridge was destroyed and two others injured. The Chicago and Desplaines rivers, at Chicago, were higher than they have been in twenty years.

THE Elkhart paper-mill, at Elkhart, Ind., has been partially destroyed by fire. Cause of the fire, spontaneous combustion. Loss estimated at $15,000; fully insured. The mill was owned by the Hon. Rufus Beardsley and the Hon. John Cook. The work of repairing the building will begin at once, and the mill will be ready again within a few weeks.

AN appalling accident occurred near Albany, Ill., on the Rock Island division of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railway. An express train going south was suddenly and without the slightest warning precipitated into Meredosia river. As the engine struck the north end of the bridge it gave way with a terrible crash, heard for miles around. The engine and tender, with the engineer and fireman, went down out of sight, and have not since been seen. The train was composed of an engine and three cars, the forward car, with the usual quantity of baggage, mail and express, together with the passenger coach, going down and floating off in the current of the stream. The passenger coach floated against and lodged at an island forty rods from the scene of the disaster. The engineer, William West, and fireman, name unknown, residing at Freeport, were drowned, together with six passengers, making the loss of life eight. Conductor Thomas Fuller climbed out of a window and escaped over the top of the brakes in a miraculous manner, as did brakeman Henry Meyers, baggageman Sam Flanagan, and messenger Dan Eutthorpe, who were rescued, the three latter in an injured condition. The sleeping-car was left hanging over the brink at an angle of forty-five degrees, half out of water. It had three occupants beside the porter. All climbed out of the rear end. A woman and two children were in the forward coach, and one child was drowned, the other two being saved. Eleven passengers were in the coach. Among the missing are three men who were in the coach. They got out on top as it floated by the approach to the wagon bridge, which had been washed out, and tried to jump off, two succeeding, one falling back into the river and sinking out of sight. A boy, who was traveling with his brother-in-law from Pine river, Wis., to Omaha, was also rescued from the roof of the coach after it had stopped at the island. A woman and child were also taken from the top of the coach at that point. As soon as possible help was procured from Albany, whither the wounded train-men and some of the rescued passengers were removed.

THE SOUTH.

A DISPATCH from El Paso, Texas, says: Two young Mexicans of high standing were killed near the town by Sam Purdy and Frank Stevenson. This aroused the Mexican residents of the town, who demanded revenge. The excitement ran high and trouble was feared. All the Americans turned out on the street and a regular pitched battle ensued, which resulted in the killing of John Hall, G. W. Campbell, and one Gus Americus, and a Mexican.

NEAR San Antonio, Tex., Mrs. John Symmons, her young son and mother-in-law were murdered by Symmons in a manner so atrocious that the citizens threaten to burn him at the stake when caught.... The fruit crop in Delaware, it is reported, has been entirely cut off by the severe winter.

A TERRIBLE storm swept the northern part of Drew county, Ark., leveling houses, trees, and destroying human and animal life. ....Jewett, a Kentucky colt, with a record outstripping anything of his age in the United States, has been sold to Peter Schatz, of Pittsburgh, for $15,000.

THE Texans are wild with enthusiasm over the advent of a party of Chicago capitalists, representing $30,000,000, who have broken ground at Dallas for the Chicago, Texas and Mexican Central railroad.... Mrs. Nutt, living near Camden, Ark., while in a fit of insanity, killed five of her children by throwing them into a well. The elder was 12 years and the youngest 11 months.

ADDITIONAL particulars respecting the killing of her five children by Mrs. Nutt, near Camden, Ark., mentioned heretofore, are, that the frenzied woman called her eldest child, a boy 12 years old, from a field where he was plowing, knocked him on the head, and threw him into the well, where she had previously thrown her four other children. Finding that one of the children was not drowned, but was clinging to the side of the well, she descended into the well and tore away its grasp and thrust it down into the water, thus completing her diabolical work.... At Uvalde, Tex., a shooting affray occurred between Gen. John R. Baylor and son on one side, and Mr. Gillhurst and two sons on the other. Baylor escaped unhurt, but his son was wounded. Gillhurst was killed; one son was fatally wounded and another well filled with buckshot.... An incendiary fire at Meridian, Miss., destroyed a block of business houses valued at $250,000. ....Thomas De Jarnette, who killed his sister in a brothel at Danville, Va., to protect the honor of his family, has been acquitted on the ground of temporary insanity.

FLAMES which broke out in Fontenot's Hotel, in New Orleans, destroyed nearly every building on St. Denis street, causing a very heavy loss.

CHARLES DUFFEY, a traveling salesman for Enos Richardson & Co., dealers in jewelry in New York, was robbed in a Baltimore hotel of about $10,000 worth of gold chains.

WASHINGTON.

THE situation in Dakota was a theme of discussion at a Cabinet meeting last week. President Garfield called attention to the destitute condition of hundreds of homeless sufferers by floods, and expressed an earnest desire to have every needed relief extended with the least possible delay. It was decided to authorize the issuing of army rations for two weeks, and clothing and supplies. An arrangement was also made by which salt meat, which cannot be furnished at needed points in sufficient quantities by the War Department, be furnished through the Interior Department from the Indian supplies, to be replaced eventually by the War Department.

KUTZ, a Socialist leader of Chicago, has written an impertinent letter to President Garfield, in which he says the President is as "much of a despot as the Czar of Russia;" that in all republics the people are oppressed by the rulers, and this is particularly true of the United States. This Socialist concludes his letter with an opinion that President Garfield ought to be served with a big dose of dynamite and nitro-glycerine. A Washington dispatch says "the President read the letter and was amused at its impertinence.".... It is expected that several changes in the military divisions of the Southwest will soon be announced. Indian Territory is to be put back into the Department of the Missouri, and Arkansas into the Department of the Gulf. It is also thought Gen. Schofield will be given headquarters at St. Louis.

THE table of receipts and expenditures of the Government for the nine months ended March 31 compare very favorably with those of the corresponding nine months of the last fiscal year. The total gain in receipts is about $22,000,000. The surplus for the nine months is nearly $30,000,000 more than that for the first three-quarters of the last fiscal year. As the surplus for the current quarter can hardly fall short of $38,000,000, the close of the fiscal year is expected to show the very remarkable surplus of $100,000,000.... The Treasury Department has issued $10,000,000 of new bonds, bearing 3½ per cent. They differ only from the old 6's in having the new conditions printed on the back.

THE new Postmaster General promises to reform the system of letting mail contracts, and to make the department self-sustaining within two years.... Mrs. Belva A. Lockwood, a Washington lawyer, has filed an application for an appointment as Minister to Brazil.... Postmaster General James decrees that postal cards are unmailable with anything on the address side beside the direction.

GENERAL.

THE class of immigrants arriving this season is far above the average. A steerage passenger who came from France recently had $10,000 in gold belted around his waist. One German banking house in New York has cashed drafts for over $100,000 for immigrants who arrived by the last three steamers.... A dispatch from the City of Mexico says: "Gen. Grant and Senor Romero have arrived. The movements of the former are regarded with apprehension. The latter is in bad odor with the President. There was no reception whatever."

THE International Sanitary Conference, in session at Washington since January, has adjourned sine die, without accomplishing anything definite in the line of the purpose for which it met. Want of harmony prevailed from the beginning, and the few rules agreed on will not be ratified by all the Governments participating in the conference. Twenty-eight Governments were represented, and the truth is it came to naught, as all the nations would not agree to a general sanitary policy.... For the first time in many years there is not a war in the world, nor an immediate prospect of war.... Col. Frederick D. Grant has tendered his resignation as an officer of the United States army, having accepted a position in connection with a Southern railroad.

A NEW counterfeit $10 gold piece has appeared in San Francisco. It is made principally of base metal, but is very heavily plated with gold. It resists the acid tests. It has to be cut pretty deep before the true nature of the coin is discovered.

THE exports of breadstuffs from the United States during the nine months ending March 31 were valued at $204,692,100.... Leon Chotteau, recently arrived in New York, announces that he has formed a company in Paris, with a capital of 20,000,000 francs, for the importation of American live stock. An English steamship has been chartered, and an agent is already buying horses and cattle in the region of Chicago and St. Louis. Another of Chotteau's schemes is an organization to supply the French with all kinds of American products.

POLITICAL.

A DELEGATION of influential Republicans of Virginia waited on the President and urged that he neither recognize Mahone nor encourage any Republican coalition with him. Representative Jorgensen asserted that Col. John S. Mosby would be nominated on a straight Republican ticket, and no partnership with Mahone is desired.

GREAT interest was excited at Bloomington, Ill., by the municipal election. John W. Trotter, Democrat, was chosen Mayor.... The election of officers by the Tammany Society resulted in a victory for John Kelly.

THE HON. Daniel F. Beatty has been re-elected Mayor of Washington, N. J. This will be his third term.

FOREIGN.

FIVE of the assassins of the Czar were hanged at St. Petersburg. Detachments from all the regiments in the city surrounded the scaffold. The prisoners kissed the cross and embraced each other. Russakoff fainted at the last moment. The rope around Michailoff's neck broke twice.... Bismarck has declared against the anti-Jewish agitation, and the 225,000 Germans who petitioned to exclude Jews from certain occupations and offices are doomed to disappointment. The Crown Prince, Frederick William, is even more opposed to the agitation than Bismarck.... The Rothschilds refuse to aid Italy in resuming specie payments until all diplomatic questions with France are settled.

ADVICES from Bagdad state that the ravages of the plague are terrible, though not extending beyond the sanitary cordon. Four thousand inhabitants have quitted Nedjed, and encamped in salubrious localities. Nedjed and Djahara were burnt. The disease became virulent, the afflicted dying in ten hours after being attacked.... It is stated positively that Adalina Patti has signed an engagement for America with Bilveau, and that the diva and the new impresario will sail in October.... In the southern half of the island of Scio are encamped 50,000 people, with nothing but their tattered clothing. The relief organization is being systematized.... No male Russians between the ages of 10 and 18 will be allowed to go abroad without permission of the Government.

LORD BEACONSFIELD'S transition from sleep to death was so quiet and peaceful as to be almost imperceptible to those around him. He fully expected to die, though his friends were hopeful. A cast of his face was successfully taken.... The International Monetary Conference began its session in Paris on the 19th of April. Fifteen nations are represented.

THE National Convention of the Irish Land League assembled in Dublin, Parnell presiding. Resolutions declaring that Davitt should be released, and thanking Irishmen in America for their support, were adopted. The opinions expressed by the delegates were strongly averse to the Land Bill, but it was generally held that the measure should not be rejected unless efforts to amend it fail.... Dervish Pasha, with 10,000 troops, attacked and defeated the Albanians near Uskup.... The powers of Europe have received a circular note from Russia, proposing a conference for the purpose of adopting common measures against anarchists.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

Both parties in the Senate appeared determined to continue the dead-lock indefinitely, on reassembling after the recess, on Monday, April 18, and talk and dilatory motions consumed the entire session. Mr. Beck declared it the purpose of the Democrats to continue the opposition to Riddleberger even after next December. He said Riddleberger was obnoxious to the Democratic Senators, and the latter could never hold proper official relations with him; that next December there would be nominated for Sergeant-at-Arms a gallant Union soldier, who bears the wounds received in leading troops on the field of battle, and every Democratic Senator will support him, and he believed the nomination would be made by a Republican Senator. Beck declared that Riddleberger would never be elected Sergeant-at-Arms.

Senator Blair offered a resolution in the United States Senate on Tuesday, April 19, which declares that the public interests require Congress to be convened immediately. In support of the resolution, Mr. Blair stated that a recent decision of the United States Supreme Court meant the ruin of the hosiery and knit-goods industry of New England unless amendatory protective legislation covering that point is adopted. He also urged in favor of his resolution the necessity of Congressional action in reference to the De Lesseps canal. The dead-lock continued throughout the day, with no prospect of a break. The President nominated Gen. James Longstreet (now Minister to Turkey) to be United States Marshal of Georgia, and Philip H. Emerson to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Utah.

The time of the Senate was mainly occupied on Wednesday, April 20, by a discussion between Messrs. Dawes and Jonas as to whether Massachusetts or Louisiana was most free from crime; a speech from Senator Frye, in which he arraigned the Democrats for knowingly acting contrary to the constitution; a brief but excited discussion between Messrs. Butler and Burnside, during which the latter repeatedly, excitedly, and emphatically stated that Butler's assertion that there was a corrupt bargain between Mahone and the Republicans was false; and the usual sparring between Brown and Hoar. The Senate adjourned without doing any business. President Garfield sent the following nominations to the Senate: Richard A. Elmer, of New York, to be Second Assistant Postmaster General, vice Thomas J. Brady, of Indiana, resigned; W. A. M. Grier, of Pennsylvania, Third Assistant Postmaster General, vice A. D. Hazen, appointed Assistant Attorney General of the Postoffice Department, and George B. Everett, Collector of Internal Revenue of the Fifth district of North Carolina, vice W. H. Wheeler.

There was the usual waste of time in the Senate on the 21st inst., and more than the average number of petty wrangles. Messrs. Dawes and Cameron had a dispute about a question of adjournment; Dawes had a discussion with Call about the freedom of voters in Massachusetts; Dawes had a dispute with Saulsbury on some trivial matter; and Wade Hampton and Jonas glorified their sections. No business of any kind was done.

Milton, the Great Poet.

John Milton was a blue-eyed, yellow-haired Saxon boy, the type of the English race. He was somewhat short, stout and healthy; his eyes were bright and sparkling in his youth, before he became blind. But he inherited weakness of sight from his mother. He was born in 1609, in a pleasant house in Bread street, London, almost under the shadow of Bow Bells. It was back in a court. His father, who had made a fortune as a scrivener, was fond of music, books and literature, and his son was carefully educated at St. Paul's school. Milton relates that he frequently studied in the house in Bread street until after midnight, and his head ached and his sight grew dim with these late vigils. He was then about 12 years old.

He was one of the best scholars at St. Paul's school, and loved study as most boys like play. He was eager to know how men lived and acted in Greece and Rome, what they thought of, and what they discovered. He studied the rise and fall of empires and republics, and became a republican in the midst of Kings and Princes. He was always fond of poetry, and soon began to write fine verses. One of his earliest is his "Ode on the Nativity."—Harper's Young People.

Are Skipping-Ropes Injurious?

The Board of Education at Springfield, Ohio, have made a powerful discovery, viz: that "the use of the skipping-rope is physically injurious to girls;" that it causes "decay of vitality to the legs," etc. The mothers and grandmothers of the Springfield School Board could doubtless have told them a great many things of which they seem to be ignorant. Among these that the jumping rope was a favorite amusement of girls for generations past, and no one has before discovered any "decay of vitality to the legs." Out-door amusements are few enough for girls, and a moderate use of the skipping-rope is a good exercise. The best way for Springfield girls to show they have not lost "vitality to legs," is to kick against the foolish rule and demolish it.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

OBITUARY.

Lord Beaconsfield.

The Earl of Beaconsfield, England's most brilliant statesman and diplomat, expired at his home in London on the morning of Tuesday, April 19, after a long and painful illness. —Benjamin Disraeli was the son of Isaac Disraeli, an English author, a descendant of a family of Spanish Jews. He (Benjamin) was born at Islington, London, in 1805. After an education at a private school, he was placed in an attorney's office, where he continued for some time as a preparation to an appointment in a Government office, which, however, he did not obtain. In 1826 he became a contributor to a paper started in the Tory interests, and called the Representative. This paper lived only five months, but it seemed to have had some effect upon the mind of Mr. Disraeli, in so far as to give it a political bias. In 1826 appeared his novel of "Vivian Gray," which was at various times succeeded by "Contarini Fleming," "The Young Duke," "The Wondrous Tale of Alroy," "The Rise of Iskander," "Henrietta Temple," "Venetia," "Coningsby," "The Sibyl," and "Tancred." Beside these, he produced, in 1834, a quarto poem entitled "The Revolutionary Epic;" and, in 1839, "Alarcos, a Tragedy." While thus actively engaged in the world of letters, he was continually before the public as a politician. In 1837, after many defeats, he was returned member from Maidstone. His first speech in the House was like his first attempts at political representation—a complete failure. His speech was laughed at throughout, and he was compelled to sit down before it was finished. This, however, he did not do until he had said, "I have begun several things many times, and often have succeeded at last. I shall sit down now, but the time will come when you will hear me." Those words proved prophetic. The time did come when he was listened to with anxious eagerness. By his marriage with the wealthy widow of Mr. Lewis, who had been his colleague in the representation from Maidstone, he became independent in position, and by 1841 he was recognized as the leader of the "Young England" party. Between that year and 1846 his attacks upon Sir Robert Peel were as frequent as they were often brilliant and severe. He was then member from Shrewsbury, and in 1847 was elected member from Buckinghamshire. In 1848 his friend Lord George Bentinck died, when he became leader of the old Tory or Protectionist party in the House of Commons. In 1852 he became Chancellor of the Exchequer, under Lord Derby, but in the same year that administrater fell upon his own budget. In 1858 Lord Derby again came into power, and Mr. Disraeli was again appointed Chancellor of the Exchequer, and in 1859 introduced a measure of Parliamentary reform, the rejection of which led to the resignation of the Ministry. On the return of the Earl of Derby to power in 1866, Mr. Disraeli resumed his position as Chancellor of the Exchequer, and carried the Reform act of 1867. The Earl's health failing, he retired in February, 1868, and Mr. Disraeli succeeded him as Premier, and his wife was created a Peeress as Viscountess Beaconsfield. The Ministry resigned the following December, but Mr. Disraeli returned to power in 1874. In 1876 he was raised to the Peerage as Earl of Beaconsfield. His party having suffered defeat by the general election of 1880, he resigned office.

Materials for History.

If the history of the War of the Rebellion is ever fully and impartially written, the facts must be gathered not only from official reports and pretentious volumes, but from the thousands of letters written from the field to newspapers or sent by officers and soldiers to their friends. These waifs will often supply an explanation to events imperfectly or incorrectly set forth elsewhere. There is no doubt a mass of valuable material in the unpublished correspondence to be found in many private households. However trifling in interest it may appear to those who wrote or those who received the letters, it should be carefully noted wherever there is a possibility of its being important, and copies or the original be deposited in public libraries, or sent with due attestations to the Adjutant General's office at Washington.

These remarks have been suggested by an incident within our own knowledge. In October, 1863, Captain E. O. Hurd, of the Thirty-ninth Ohio Regiment, wrote to his father in this city a very spirited account of the sharp fight at Colliersville, Tenn. It was furnished to the Gazette for publication, and appeared in our issue of October 21, 1863. It was thence copied into Frank Moore's "Rebellion Record." Captain Hurd was not told of, or at least had forgotten, the printing of the letter in the Gazette, and knew nothing about its reproduction in the "Record" until recently he received from the Adjutant General's office a manuscript copy of his letter, handsomely engrossed, with an accompanying request that he should sign the copy and indorse its correctness as published by Moore. This action shows the earnestness with which the Government is collecting materials and its appreciation of Captain Hurd's admirably written though unofficial report. The authorities should be assisted in their researches by all who have matter that can be of service.—Cincinnati Gazette.

A Quilt of 55,552 Pieces.

A more comfortable, old-fashioned, quiet looking home for old ladies than the Union Home, at Forty-eighth and Lancaster avenue, could scarcely be found. On donation day at the Home, the presents which poured in attested the friendship of those who have its welfare at heart. Barrels of flour, cases of canned tomatoes, hams, tongues, all kinds of groceries, fruits, etc., were piled up in the outkitchen until it looked like a wholesale grocery store, and gave promise of relieving the purchasing committee of all work for a time. A large number of the friends of the institution called during the day, and the managers gave a tea in the afternoon. Among the interesting objects made by the inmates and exhibited was a quilt of 55,552 pieces, sewed together by a lady who had been blind from her infancy—Miss Kate Smith. She worked three years on the quilt, used 100 spools of thread, and threaded every needle herself. She thinks she could make another such quilt in two years.—Philadelphia Press.

Something About Bricks.

In the antiquity of the brick as a building material, says the Builder, it is needless, nor is it indeed our intention, to insist. The great national collections of Europe, the British Museum foremost in number, show us bricks, sun dried and baked, from the ruins at Ninevah, and from the days of that city to the present moment bricks have never ceased to be an important instrument in the hands of the builder. That throughout Asia Minor they were largely employed we have seen, only very recently, proved in these columns, M. Bayet, in his work on Miletus, having shown that the far-famed palace of Crœsus was built of no more costly materials than honest bricks. What those bricks were, and their quality, are even to this day appreciated by the natives, who for many centuries have plundered the ruins to build or to patch up their own even more ruinous houses. The use of bricks among the Romans, who largely employed them as building materials, as we see in the familiar instance of the Temple of Concord, has been more than once the subject of the inquiry of industrious antiquaries, for the Romans were not content with producing the flat, tile-like brick which is so often to be met with in the lower portions of antique structures scattered over the empire, and that are known in England, but their bricks were indelibly stamped with the mark of their maker, the names of the reigning Consuls, and sometimes the year. From this source, then, more than one patient archæologist has gathered a rich store of information. But few inquirers have ventured far on the apparently arid and difficult road, which has hence remained little explored.

Naturalizing a Negro.

Jefferson C. Davis, a native of Senegambia, Africa, applied for citizenship in Department 1 of the Superior Court. A question has been raised in regard to the eligibility of aliens of the African race to the operation of the naturalization laws. Judge Belden examined the United States naturalization laws, and then prepared an opinion, of which the following is the full text: "In the matter of the application of Jefferson C. Davis to be naturalized. The applicant appeared in open court, accompanied by his witnesses, and established to the satisfaction of the court that he was a native of Senegambia, Africa; that he came to the United States when he was about twelve years of age; that he has ever since resided in the United States, and that he possesses the moral requisits to entitle him to naturalization. Much question having been made as to whether other persons than those of the white race were eligible to naturalization, the court postponed the oath of citizenship to consider this question. An examination of the naturalization laws places the matter beyond even discussion. In 1874 the naturalization laws of the United States were revised, amended and re-enacted by Congress, and a general and comprehensive system of naturalization provided, taking the place of all antecedent legislation upon this subject. As part of this general law Section 1,179 provides: 'The provisions of this title shall apply to all aliens of African nativity and to persons of African descent.' No argument is needed to explain this provision, nor could the most elaborate discussion render its purpose or purport clearer. The applicant is entitled to naturalization, and will be sworn in as a citizen upon presenting himself before the court. It may be added that in my opinion the decisions which deny this privilege to individuals of the Mongolian race are greatly strengthened by this special clause above quoted. It clearly implied the construction of the law-makers that in the general provisions of the act, other than the white or caucasian race were not included, for had they been this section would not have been required, and it further clearly indicates its legislative purpose as between those races not included within the general scope of this act, to make a special discrimination in favor of the African race. The rules of construction, by which this purpose is here indicated, are the axioms alike of the books and of common intelligence. Judge Spencer, who occupied the bench with me when this application was made agrees with me in the expressions here expressed." San Jose (Cal.) Mercury.

The Story of a Blighted Life.

There stands in Sharon (near the Easton line), half a mile from any dwelling house, and a quarter of a mile from any road, in an old cow pasture on the southern slope of a hill, surrounded by a few birch trees and scrub oaks, a little shanty. One small window looks out upon the meagre scene. The house contains but one room; an old cook stove in one corner; in the further end of the room is a bunk containing some straw and a few old ragged bedclothes; a shelf that serves the purpose of a table, and on it are some pieces of crockery and tinware; an old axe and hatchet leaning against the smoke-begrimed wall, and a well worn Bible were all the room contained, as we one day visited it and lifted the log that was braced against the door and looked within.

This building has been for many years the house and home of a recluse. He is now nearly eighty years of age. In early life this eccentric man conceived the idea that he had a call to preach the gospel; he, however, was never recognized as a preacher, but was given permission to "exhort." Like many a young man before him, he in early life fell desperately in love with a fair and comely damsel; his love grew into a passion, and he studied how he should woo and win her; but the time and place he chose to ask her to become a partner of his joys and sorrows were, as the sequel proved, most unfortunate for its success. Seated opposite to her at the tea-table of a clergyman, and in the presence of the family, he offered himself to her and asked her to become his wife. She was mad, and showed the fury of a woman scorned. She spurned the offer, and from that day to this he has avoided the society of women, and has always kept as far from them as possible, and has sought society where none intrude. For over half a century he has lived alone, and his Bible has been his constant solace, companion, and friend.—Correspondence Boston Journal.

She Had Been to Europe.

A New York gentleman was presented to the wife of a Western member of the House. She has been to Europe, and will never forget it.

"Yes," said she to the New Yorker, "yes, we spent a day in the picture stores in Florence. I do just go crazy over pictures, for, you know, everybody up our way says I'm a splendid common sewer of art!"

"Indeed!" said the astonished gentleman.

"Oh, yes; why we picked up ever so much bricky-bracky things and emetics all over Europe."

"GOOD morning Willie," said the pastor, saluting the boy affectionately. "I suppose the folks are all well at home?" "Pretty well," returned Will; "the cook's drunk, sister Sal's got the measles and ma jawed the old man sick last night."

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.

THE lobster has been known to attain the age of 20 years.

THE entire feathers of an owl weigh only an ounce and a half.

IT is said that the lion will suffer no other animal than the dog to live in the same den with him.

SNAKES have a great repugnance to carbolic acid, which acts as a sudden and fatal poison to them.

DR. SPARRMAN is of opinion that the lion is a great coward—or at least, that his courage is not proportionate to his strength.

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK once tamed a wasp. It ate sugar from his hand, permitted him to stroke it, and was inclined to be quite social.

ON more than one occasion sparrows have been seen to bury a dead comrade, and the funerals were largely attended. They cover the body with leaves and utter cries of distress.

BIRDS are very particular in choosing their mates. They are just like people in this respect. Even after they are mated, if the male gets hurt or loses his show feathers, the female will desert him.

BRITISH heads are gradually growing smaller. Within the last quarter of a century the dimensions of the head have sunken on an average one-seventh of an inch, at least so says a paper recently read before the Bristol Naturalist Society.

ALLIGATORS build nests about four feet high resembling haycocks. They are made of mud and herbage. The eggs are deposited in layers, separated by strata of mud about eight inches thick. One nest usually contains from 160 to 200 eggs.

IT is said that the railroad bridge over the estuary of the Solway, near Annan, is the longest in the world, being 1,940 yards in length. The next longest to it is that built for the Orenburg railway over the Volga, near Syzran, which is a few yards short of 1,624 yards.

IN Germany there are professional colorers, who hire themselves to pipe-sellers or connoisseurs by the week, or day, or hour, to smoke so many ounces or pounds of strong tobacco through meerschaum pipes, with a view of causing stains of tobacco to become visible on the bowls and stems of the pipes.

THE sea covers three-fourths of the surface of the globe. Its saltness is attributable to rivers and springs which are constantly washing into it chloride of sodium and other soluble salts. As evaporation carries none of these salts back, they naturally accumulate. The sea water in Arctic regions is less salt than in the tropics, owing to the melting icebergs. The color of the sea water when free from all colors is a pure deep blue. The color is due to the fact that the blue rays of the spectrum are less liable to be absorbed by masses of transparent substances than the others, thus predominating in the reflected pencil. The red, white and brown patches in the Pacific and Indian oceans are owing to the presence of swarms of animalcules, and the colors of the Red and the Yellow seas to materials of vegetable origin. The phosphorescence of the sea, best seen on a dark night, is due to the presence of innumerable forms of life contained in the water.

What Makes a Legal Marriage in New York.

The Court of Appeals, through Justice Folger, has clearly defined what constitutes a marriage contract in this State: By the law of this State a man and woman who are competent to marry each other, without going before a minister or magistrate, without previous public notice given, with no form or ceremony, civil or religious, and with no record or written evidence of the act kept, and merely by words of present contract between them, may take upon themselves relation of husband and wife, and be bound to themselves, to the State and society as such. And if after that the marriage is denied, proof of actual cohabitation as husband and wife, acknowledgement and recognition of each other to friends and acquaintances and the public as such, and the general reputation thereof, will enable a Court to presume that a bona fide marriage.—Troy Budget.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, APRIL 28, 1881.

SENATOR MAHONE weighs but ninety pounds, while Mrs. Mahone tips the scale at 200. Here is a chance for readjustment.

COL. THOMAS A. SCOTT's gift of $50,000 to Washington and Lee University is bestowed without the imposition of any conditions whatever. He had previously given the college $10,000.

BOUCICAULT declares that he really means to form a dramatic company of sons and daughters of successful actors. He has engaged two sons of Jefferson, a daughter and two sons of Sothern, a daughter of Lydia Thompson, and his own offspring. The project seems risky, for none of these has yet achieved much success on the stage, unless it to be Lytton Sothern, who has played a season in Australia as Dundreary.

BILLINGSGATE MARKET is celebrated all over the world for the choiceness and forcibility of its language. But it seems that there is something in this world that even Billingsgate can't stand. That is the electric light. They say that the glare makes the fish look putrid, and so the light has been removed. It would seem that if the fish could stand the talk of Billingsgate they ought to be able to stand the electric light.

AN Athens (Greece) newspaper publishes the names of President Garfield's Cabinet thus: "Secretary of State, Blanne; Treasury, Nin; Navy, Keinl; Interior, Verkovod; Postmaster General, Reames; Attorney General, Haevragh; War Secretary, Lincoln." While all the other names were too much for our esteemed Grecian contemporary, it had no difficulty whatever in correctly printing the name of Secretary Lincoln.

THE late Czar of Russia was very steadfast in his friendships; and, unfortunately, his friends were a very greedy and corrupt set. They were perpetually getting into debt, and he was perpetually paying their debts. In one case, having handed over a large sum of money to a friend, to free him from his creditors, he found that none of them had been paid. On this he, simply gave the sum to a third person and requested him to settle with the creditors.

PEOPLE have queer ideas as to the power of the President. A colored man called on President Garfield, the other day, and insisted on an interview. He was very indignant because they wouldn't let him in. His wife had run off with another man, he said. He came to see the President to appeal for advice in the premises and assistance in carrying that advice into effect. A small-sized boy from Georgia, who listened to his story as told the Doorkeeper, advised him to shoot the other man, and he finally went away to do it.

IT will hardly be credited that there are still people who have faith in the Keely motor, yet such is the case. A few days ago Keely gave an exhibition of his motor to a number of prominent gentlemen, who left Jersey City in a special car for the purpose of seeing the test. Keely exhibited his motor, ran a twenty-horse power engine, fired guns by means of the "vapor," and the distinguished party passed resolutions of congratulation, etc., etc., etc., etc. Now look out for some Keely motor stock on the market.

MR. RANIER, once Lieutenant Governor of South Carolina, and subsequently a Congressman from that State, is now a common laborer upon the streets of Charleston, and, though once wealthy, is not a bit ashamed of his present occupation, which is certainly an honest one. The contented pick-hand had a reminder, the other day, of the wickedness of his former ways. While engaged with a gang of laborers in opening a new street, a garbage cart drew up and dumped its load of rubbish, in which was a fragment of a Congressional Record containing a speech delivered by Ranier while a member of Congress. On the whole, the last case of this man is much better than the first.

THE Missouri Legislature has killed a bill to restrict the practice of medicine to the possessors of medical diplomas. The argument which defeated the measure was that a good doctor is known by his cures, and that a bad one is not improved by a certificate. "It is a grave mistake," said one opponent of the proposed law, "to consider medicine a science. It is essentially empirical, and its practice is simply a conformity with certain rules founded on experience. The experience of the individual is of vastly more importance as a guide than the recorded experience of others, and the only effective way to learn the practice of medicine is to practice it. A special preparation is not superfluous, and a certificate of competency is not objectionable, but they should stand for what they are worth. The people are able to take care of themselves, and, as a general thing, manage to starve out medical pretenders."

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

FRIDAY, April 15.—SENATE.—The Senate met as usual this morning and went through the motions of legislation. But, being without the power to pass bills, members became restless, then noisy, and finally boisterous. Crackers were thrown about the room, aimed at the bald heads of the more unfortunate, until the chamber resembled a school-room without a teacher. Pending this exhibition the House marched in and took forcible possession of the chamber, for the purpose of forcing upon that body consideration of the Cabbage Owl bill. Dr. Edwins took the chair, and the hilarity that ensued, resulting in the mock passage of the bill, was of that nature only evolved by Legislators when they unbend themselves sufficiently to be humorous. Several resolutions, however, were adopted—allowing Messrs. Darnell and Robbins $40 each for extra work on the Senate journals; to send acts and journals to members at their homes; to allow a number of claims; for a lounge, etc.; to allow the Principal and Assistant Secretary each for indexing the Senate journal by the letter, and making a calendar of unfinished business pending at the adjournment. Thanks were also voted to the Lieutenant Governor, to the retiring President pro tem., Mr. Viehe, and to employes of the Senate. The Senate also reconsidered its former vote and passed the joint resolution to so amend the constitution that the members of the Supreme Court might be increased from five to nine members. The Governor vetoed the bill amending the act regulating the adoption of heirs, because, if the amendment should prevail, the surviving wife of an intestate-adopted child would receive no part of the land of which her husband died seized, which he had inherited from his adopting father or mother.

HOUSE.—Mr. Ryan submitted a resolution setting forth at considerable length the necessity for another and immediate session of the Legislature, reciting precedents in the administrations of Govs. Willard and Baker, and declaring that public policy, in view of the bad shape in which legislation was about to be left, demanded that fifteen or twenty extra days should be allowed to finish the work. A lively debate ensued, in the course of which the Democrats charged the Republicans with endeavoring to shift the responsibility for calling an extra session from the Governor to the Legislature. The House, subsequent to the extra-session discussion, adopted the resolution to amend the constitution, fixing the term of county and State officers at four years, and rendering them ineligible for re-election until after a lapse of eight years.

SATURDAY, April 16.—The Fifty-second General Assembly of the State adjourned sine die after a short session of both houses. Resolutions were passed reaffirming the fidelity of this people to the General Government, etc., and feeling speeches were made by the Speaker and the Lieutenant Governor preparatory to the final separation of both houses.

Sir Roscoe O'Strutt's Last Call at the White House.

A gentleman just from Washington, who has the confidence of the administration, relates an incident in connection with Conkling's rampage that has not yet been made public. The Saturday or Sunday before Robertson's name was sent to the Senate Conkling called at the White House, and had a long interview with Garfield about the New York appointments. Garfield went over all the offices to be filled, and discussed this man's merits, and that man's availability, in connection with the best interests of the Republican party. Conkling had a suspicion that Garfield was pumping him, and he was amiable and foxy, but not backward in letting the President know just what he wanted, and whom he preferred. It soon became evident to the President that Conkling expected a full and complete surrender of all the patronage in New York, or the perfumed tyrant would sulk. All the offices had been canvassed except the Collectorship; Conkling seemed to wish to avoid the discussion of this subject for the present. As he arose and was taking his leave, the President followed him to the door, and said: "Oh, Mr. Senator! How about the Collectorship? Have you any suggestions to make in regard to who would be the proper person to fill it?" With a quizzical look, and a profound bow, Conkling said with a lordly air: "Well, Mr. President, we have not considered that subject at all, yet. Good day!" He left Garfield paralyzed. The President looked over the returns to see if Conkling had been elected President, and if so, if he was acting as his private secretary. After calm reflection, he arrived at the conclusion that if he was going to be President he could not begin to act in that capacity too soon, and, without consulting with any one, he threw Robertson's nomination into the Senate as a notice to Roscoe that Garfield was President of these United States and Conkling was still a Senator representing a fraction of the State of New York.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Republican Machine in New York.

The Republicans in the Legislature, and especially in the Assembly, are affording many proofs that they are as corrupt a body as their notorious predecessors were when they governed this city by commissions, or at a later period, when William M. Tweed used to buy the members like sheep in the shambles.

There are several exceptions to this sweeping condemnation in the Senate, and a few in the Assembly. But they drop out of sight in the mass of rascality. The controlling elements in both branches have again and again this winter shown themselves to be utterly rotten and reckless.

Spoils! spoils! spoils! seem to be the guiding star of the Republican machine at Albany. Not a word is said about the people's interests or the public good. The only question asked by the Republican managers is, will the thing pay us and our party a round dividend?

Some of the very worst men who run the machine in the Legislature are Republican leaders from this city. They astonish the members from the rural districts by their venality and audacity.

How shall we rid ourselves of this intolerable evil? A large and respectable portion of the Republican party in this city profess to be opposed to these corrupt leaders, and their degrading methods. But when the day of election comes, these protesting Republicans are wont to go to the polls and meekly bow their necks to the yoke, and vote for any and every candidate whom the drivers of the machine have put upon the ticket. If these honest Republicans really desire to correct these flagrant wrongs, they must lay their hands on the Republican machine, here, at Albany, and throughout the State, and kill it dead.—New York Sun.

THE VIRGINIA REPUDIATORS.

[Washington Cor. New York Sun.]

The first attempt of Don Cameron to rush resolutions through the Legislature of Pennsylvania, approving the corrupt coalition with Mahone, which he personally negotiated, had to be abandoned in the original form. Honest Republicans protested vigorously against indorsing the bargain with an avowed repudiator, and they were wise in that resistance.

The Richmond Whig is known to be Mahone's personal organ. The bondholders of the Atlantic, Pacific and Ohio railroad, of which he was President, until it was wrecked by mismanagement and worse means, publicly charged that this paper was purchased with money belonging to them and not accounted for.

Here are some of the sentiments of that organ, uttered during the campaign in which the repudiators, under the name of Readjusters, succeeded by a combination of the worst elements of both parties:

> Put a clause in the State and Federal constitutions that no contracts between individuals shall be enforced in any court.
>
> The truth is, that if Virginia should at once repudiate her whole debt it would be the most effective means possible to entice within her borders both capital and immigrants.

W. W. Newman was elected a Judge by the Readjusters last winter, and his notion of contracts is expressed as follows:

> The Government, before returning to gold and redeemable paper, is bound by every principle of justice to reduce all contracts to a gold basis and scale them accordingly.

Mr. Blair, who was Chairman of the Readjuster Convention at Richmond, declared in his speech:

> Having achieved a great triumph in the State on our view of the debt issue, I now favor a vigorous application of the readjustment principle to the national debt.

And the bill of Riddleberger, which repudiated out and out one-third of the State debt and made no honest provision for the payment of the remaining two-thirds, recites:

> That, in its direful operation upon Virginia, the reconstruction period was equivalent to the war, and equally exonerated the State from the payment of interest on a just debt.

Declarations like these might be multiplied indefinitely, but those given are sufficient to show the purpose and the so-called "principle" of this Readjuster party, of which Mahone is the acknowledged leader. Its main idea was repudiation of the State debt as a beginning, and of the national debt as the end. It was a summons to the worthless, ignorant, desperate and bankrupt of all parties to make common cause, as Communists, against honesty and good faith. The next step would have been for a division of property.

In the face of these facts, which are notorious and cannot be successfully disputed, Mr. Hawley and other Republican Senators who sustain the bargain with Mahone have the effrontery to speak as follows:

> It seems to an outsider casually glancing at it that the Senator from Virginia, who sits on this side (Mr. Mahone), now desires actually to pay a large portion of the debt, and the others are willing to owe the whole and pay none.

Mr. Hawley made that false statement with the knowledge that it was destitute of the color of truth in any form or in any part. It was, therefore, a willful deception without excuse or palliation. The bondholders and the State agreed upon a settlement known as the McCulloch bill, by which the whole debt, in round numbers, $32,500,000, was to be paid in a fixed term of years, with graduated interest at 3, 4 and 5 per cent.

Mahone organized the Readjuster movement in opposition to that measure, which he denounced then, and recently on the floor of the Senate, as the Brokers' bill. He antagonized it with what is known as the Riddleberger or Repudiation bill, and he was elected to the Senate on that distinct issue.

Hawley, Hoar, Dawes, Sherman and the Republican leaders, who have sold their political birthright to Mahone for a nasty mess of pottage, went into the trade with their eyes open. They wanted possession of the committees to shape legislation, and they did not stop to consider the means by which that object might be attained.

They found Mahone willing to sell, and they were desirous to buy. They paid the price he demanded in the nominations before the Senate, and in the exceptional honors conferred upon him. And now, when honorable Republicans would retreat from this unholy alliance, with which they are disgusted, and into which they were coerced by the caucus, Mahone, like the political Shylock he is, exacts the "penalty and forfeit of his bond."

He insists, and we do not blame him for it, that his candidates must be elected now; that the contract must be completed, and that the ceremony of nominating Gorham, Riddleberger and the rest of them is not a fulfillment of the agreement. And Mahone has let his allies understand plainly that he holds the key of the door by which they entered into the bargain.

The Republicans are shut in, and will stay in that condition until their present master lets them out. The business of the executive session, treaties, and a hundred important nominations, are dead-locked. Why? Because Mahone wants his pay or his pound of flesh. He will not budge from this demand, knowing full well that, unless his men are chosen now, they will never be elected.

He asks, with much frankness and force: "How can I face the Readjusters of Virginia if Riddleberger be cast aside? Expectant office-holders have thronged the galleries for weeks, until they have become weary. To send them back to old Virginia empty-handed would be to invite defeat in the coming campaign. Something must be done, and that quickly."

Under this appeal and threat the caucus decided to stand by the Mahone ticket, and, as Don Cameron started out by telling the Senate it was only a question of endurance, he will have a full opportunity to put his test to trial.

PAYING MAHONE.

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

The Senate of the United States has been in session one month, and it has accomplished nothing. It confirmed the Cabinet appointments on the 5th of March, as a matter of necessity and of course, and has done nothing since. The Republican Senators seem determined that Mahone shall be paid before any public business is done. Day after day the motion has been repeatedly made from the Democratic side to go into executive session and attend to the public business which a Republican President has laid before the Senate, and the Republican Senators have steadily refused to do this, but have insisted that Mahone must be paid before they will proceed to the public business. The affairs of the firm, Mahone & Co., must be adjusted before the affairs of the United States can receive their attention. Mahone & Co. insist that the other half of the Senate shall contribute to the payment of Mahone, and the Democratic half of the Senate, not being under any obligations to Mahone, decline to make any payment to the Virginia member of this "lop-sided," incongruous firm—Mahone & Co. It requires astonishing assurance on the part of the Republican Senators to ask the Democrats to help them pay Mahone; but because the Democratic Senators refuse to "chip in" and help to settle with the Virginia renegade a distinguished Republican Senator from Massachusetts chooses to call this Democratic refusal treasonable and revolutionary. It appears, therefore, that the Democratic Senators are guilty of "the very essence of treason" if they will not assist the Republican Senators to recompense the Virginia renegade for his treachery to the Democratic party.

We are not exaggerating or misstating the record when we say that the Republicans in the Senate are obstructing the public business for the sole purpose of discharging their obligations to Mahone, whose treason to his party, his constituents and his State they bought with the promise of a mess of pottage. Senator Hawley, of Connecticut, unwittingly confessed everything to a representative of the Enquirer on Saturday. The Senator said: "We organized the Senate in its committees with the aid of Mahone. Now that we have got the organization, it is not fair to adjourn and treat him with no equity. He has a candidate for one of the Senatorial places, and I think we must, for our word, as well as for general utility, go ahead." Here is a complete admission that the public business is obstructed by the Republicans for no other purpose than to pay Mahone. The Republicans desire to make the Democratic Senators a party to the corrupt bargain between themselves and the purchased Virginia Senator. The Democratic Senators have, so far, refused to take any part in the infamy, and do not feel under any obligations to aid in keeping any corrupt promise which Republican Senators have made to Mahone. When the firm of Mahone & Co. was formed, the partners should have looked far enough into the future to foresee that a contingency might arise in which it might be impossible for the Republican Senators—the "Co." of the firm—to deliver the promised mess of pottage to Mahone. A simple count of the Senate would have revealed this fact, and if the partnership had been intelligently formed this contingency would have been discussed, and, in the terms of the partnership, provision would have been made for it. If this was not done it certainly was not the fault of the Democratic half of the Senate. Why should the Democratic Senators be called upon to supply omissions in this iniquitous compact between Mahone & Co.? Why should the Democratic Senators be called upon to deliver the goods promised by the Republican allies of repudiation and treachery? Is it not the height of impudence to ask Democratic Senators to aid in any way to reward the treachery of Mahone? Mahone's treason stole the Senate away from the Democrats, and should the Democrats be expected to recompense him for the robbery.

The business of the Supreme Court and some of the Circuit Courts is so clogged as to be several years behind. There is a vacancy on the Supreme bench which should be promptly filled. But litigation, justice, must pause in their tracks till Mahone is paid. The President of the United States has sent to the Senate a large number of appointments—scores of them of prime importance. These nominations have accumulated to such an extent that the President will send no more till those already sent receive the attention of the Senate, and thus the executive department of the Government stands fettered in important respects because Mahone is not paid. This is the beginning of a new administration. The Republican party has the Executive and the House, and the Republican party and Mahone have one-half of the Senate, and the Republican party presents the spectacle to the country—the spectacle of a great national party saying that the public business shall stand still till it can pay a repudiator of debts and of honor for his great treachery. The national Republican party takes the position before the country that the only business of the United States is to pay Mahone. Every day since this session began the Democratic members of the Senate have been willing and eager to proceed to the public business, but they are not yet willing and eager to assist in paying Mahone.

A Faithful Dog.

A dog in New Mexico, returning one evening with his sheep to the fold, discovered that his master was still in his shanty, and kept very quiet. The next evening it was the same. But after penning up the sheep the dog smelled about the door, scratched, barked, and even howled, as he was getting very hungry, but his master did not move. The dog, true to his appointed duty, went out with the sheep on the third day, but that night when he drove the stock into their pen the last one to attempt to get in became the victim of the dog's appetite. This method of providing for his own wants became a part of the faithful dog's daily duty. Every evening the last sheep to try to enter the fold was seized by him and served for supper and breakfast, and for dinner the following day. The ranch to which the dog belonged was in a solitary part of the Territory, and out of the track of travel or visitation. For two years from the time of his master's death—as ascertained by data left by the latter—the faithful dog tended the flock committed to his charge, and had fresh mutton for his supper every night. The flock was not decimated by this steady drain upon its resources. On the contrary, it increased in numbers, and when, at the end of two years from the time of the death of the proprietor, the ranch was visited, and the remains of the owner found, the dog was still at his post of duty, jealously guarding his flock, and driving them to the best pasture every day and to the fold at night, before which he slept, to keep the wild sheep-eaters of the plains at a civil distance.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y

Is The Great Connecting Link between the East and the West!

Its main line runs from Chicago to Council Bluffs, passing through Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, West Liberty, Iowa City, Marengo, Brooklyn, Grinnell, Des Moines (the capital of Iowa), Stuart, Atlantic, and Avoca; with branches from Bureau Junction to Peoria; Wilton Junction to Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Eldon, Belknap, Centreville, Princeton, Trenton, Gallatin, Cameron, Leavenworth, Atchison, and Kansas City; Washington to Sigourney, Oskaloosa, and Knoxville; Keokuk to Farmington, Bonaparte, Bentonsport, Independent, Eldon, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Oskaloosa, Pella, Monroe, and Des Moines; Mt. Zion to Keosauqua; Newton to Monroe; Des Moines to Indianola and Winterset; Atlantic to Griswold and Audubon; and Avoca to Harlan and Carson. This is positively the only Railroad, which owns, and operates a through line from Chicago into the State of Kansas.

Through Express Passenger Trains, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, are run each way daily between CHICAGO and PEORIA, KANSAS CITY, COUNCIL BLUFFS, LEAVENWORTH and ATCHISON. Through cars are also run between Milwaukee and Kansas City, via the "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line."

The "Great Rock Island" is magnificently equipped. Its road bed is simply perfect, and its track is laid with steel rails.

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

The principal R. R. connections of this great Through Line are as follows:

At CHICAGO, with all diverging lines for the East and South.

At ENGLEWOOD, with the L. S. & M. S., and P., Ft. W. & C. R. Rds.

A Touching Story.

One rarely meets with a more touching romance than is found in the following story which comes from Wales: A number of years ago, some miners in exploring an old pit that had long been closed, found the body of a young man dressed in a fashion long out of date. The peculiar action of the air of the mine was such as to preserve the body so perfectly that the body appeared asleep rather than dead. The miners were puzzled at the circumstances. No one in the district had been missed within their remembrance, and at last it was resolved to bring the oldest inhabitant, an old lady long past her eightieth year, who had lived single in the village the whole of her life. On being brought into the presence of the body, a strange scene occurred. The old lady fell on the corpse, kissed it and addressed it by every term of loving endearment spoken in the language of bygone generation. He was her only love. She had waited for him during her long life, and she knew he had not forsaken her. The old lady and the young man had been betrothed sixty years before. The lover had disappeared very mysteriously, and she had kept faithful during the long interval. Time had stood still with the dead man, but had left its mark on the living woman. The miners who were present were a rough set, but very gently and with tearful eyes, they removed the old lady to her house, and that night her faithful spirit rejoined that of her long lost lover.

The Dismal Swamp.

The dismal swamp, says and exchange, is not a vast bog sunk low in the ground, into which the drainage of the surrounding country flows. On the contrary, it is above the level ground some fifteen or twenty feet, as was demonstrated by actual surveys. Instead of being a receptacle into which rivers and streams enter and flow, it is, in reality, an immense reservoir that, in its sponge-like bulk, gathers the waters that fall from the heavens and pours them into five different rivers, which flow onward to the sea. Any one would imagine that the "Dismal" was a veritable charnel-house that spread its miasma throughout the country. On the contrary it is the healthiest place upon the American continent. The swamp is formed entirely of green timber. There is actually no decomposed wood; one sees large trees lying all around in the forests and swamps. The two principal woods that grow in the place are juniper and cypress, which never rot. They fall prone to the ground like other trees, but instead of the wood decomposing it turns into peat, lies indissoluble by air and water for ages—perfectly sound. There is nothing in the swamp to create miasma; no rising of the tides and decomposition of rank vegetables; no marshes exposed to the burning rays of the sun. All is fresh and sweet, and the air is laden with as sweet odors as the fragrant woods in May, when the sweet odors of the flowers mingle with the pungent scent of the pine and dogwood.

In the ante-bellum days all the planters were anxious to hire their slaves to shingle-makers in the swamps on account of its health. Mr. Reddick, a well-known contractor, says he worked a gang of fifty hands fifteen years in the Dismal getting shingles, and in all that time there was not a single case of fever and ague. I have seen numerous affidavits of overseers and contractors who have lived in the swamp their lifetime, and they have never known of a death caused by miasma, or a solitary instance of ague and fever. The air is pure and sweet, and the water, tinged to a faint wine hue by the juniper, is as potent a medical drink as are the famous watering places of the Virginia "mountain pass." It is often used by naval vessels going on a long foreign cruise, on account of the healthful properties, and also because it keeps fresh and clear for years. It is a strong and invigorating tonic, with a very pleasant taste.

"I Don't Want a Plaster."

Said a sick man to a druggist, "can't you give me something to cure me?" His symptoms were a lame-back and disordered urine, and were sure indication of kidney disease. The druggist told him to use Kidney-Wort and in a short time it effected a complete cure. Have you these symptoms? Then get a box or a bottle to-day—before you become incurable. It is the cure; safe and sure.—Knoxville Republican.

CROWN
SEWING
IS THE BEST

It is the result of 20 years' experience and experiments in Sewing Machines. It combines the good points of all present and former makes, and is not a "one man" or "one idea" machine, as others are. It avoids the defects of others, and possesses new and valuable features and conveniences. It is large, light-running, noiseless, handsome, convenient, durable, and simple. Warranted and kept in repair free for 5 years. Circulars with full description sent free on request. It is surely the best. A trial will prove it. Don't fail to see it before you buy. MANUFACTURED BY FLORENCE MACHINE CO., Florence, Mass.; WHOLESALED BY GEO. P. BENT, 81 and 83 Jackson St., Chicago, Ill.

Making Watches.

Defective Watch Cases are one of the chief causes of so many watches not being good time pieces. The cases being thin and not fitting well, admit dust and dirt to the movement, which soon interferes with the running parts of the watch, necessitating cleaning, repairing, etc., and the amount thus paid out, if applied toward buying a good case in the beginning, would have saved all this trouble and expense. We have recently seen a case that meets all these requirements, it having been carried for over twenty years and still remains perfect. We refer to the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, which has become one of the staple articles of the Jewelery trade, possessing as it does, so many advantages over all other watch cases, being made of two heavy plates of solid gold over a plate of composition, and we advise all our readers to ask their Jeweler for a card or catalogue that will explain the manner in which they are made.

It is the only STIFFENED CASE made with two plates of gold, seamless pendants, and center, solid joints, crown pieces, etc., all of which are covered by letters patent. Therefore buy no case before consulting a Jeweler who keeps the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, that you may learn the difference between it and all imitations that claim to be equally as good.

For sale by Abright the Jeweler. Ask to see the warrant that accompanies each case, and don't be persuaded that any other make of case is as good.

I DREAM.

I have dreams. I sometimes dream of life
In the full meaning of that splendid word;
Its subtle music, which few men have heard,
Though all may hear it sounding through earth's strife,
Its lofty heights by mystic breezes kissed,
Lifting their lovely peaks above the dust;
Its treasures that no touch of time can rust
Its emerald seas, its dawns of amethyst;
Its certain purposes, its serene repose;
Its usefulness that finds no hour for woes;
That is my dream of life.

Yes I have dreams. I oftimes dream of love,
As radiant and brilliant as a star—
As changeless, too, as the fixed light afar
That glorifies vast worlds of space above.
Strong as the tempest when it holds its breath
Before it bursts its fury—and as deep
As the unfathomed seas, where lost worlds sleep,
And sad as birth, and beautiful as death,
As fervent as the fondest soul could crave,
Yet holy as the moonlight on a grave—
This is my dream of love.

Yes, yes I dream. One oft recurring dream
Is beautiful and comforting and blest,
Complete with certain promises of rest,
Divine content, and happiness supreme,
When that strange essence, author of all faith,
That subtle something, that cries for the light
Like a lost child that wanders at night,
Shall solve the mighty mystery of death—
Shall find eternal progress, or sublime
And satisfy slumber for all time—
This is my dream of death.

A Dog Died of a Broken Heart.

Dr. Martin, a gentleman living on Decatur street, tells us a remarkable story about a bull-dog who actually died of a broken heart.

"You remember," said the pleasant doctor, "that about two months ago my father-in-law, Mr. W. H. Harville, who had reached a green old age, died. Well, you may or may not know that my father-in-law owned at the time of his death a very fine bull-dog—a huge, fat, sleek fellow who went by the name of Ponto. For months before his death the dog was the constant companion of my father-in-law. There was something almost human in the devotion of the dog to his master, and, as a natural consequence, the master was particularly fond of his dog. The daily movements of the old gentleman, for a long time before his last sickness, were as regular as those of a clock, and Ponto followed him as surely as his very shadow. They were inseparable. When my father-in-law, as was his custom, took his morning walk up Decatur street, Ponto was always by his side; when toward noon, he walked out of the same street to his plantation a mile and a half in the country, Ponto was his companion; when he returned and took his accustomed seat in front of my store to rest, Ponto curled up before his chair, and patiently waited until dinner time, when he would follow the old gentleman to the house up there, and after the meal was over would watch by the side of the sofa in the hall, where my father always took his afternoon nap. When the old man died, Ponto tood his place by the coffin and did not budge until it was taken from the room. Then he got up and followed it to the hearse, and slowly followed it to the grave. Ponto came back to the house a changed dog. Every night he lay upon his rug on the porch and moaned most piteously all night long."

"I have never heard any expression of human sorrow that was half so plaintive and touching as the moaning of the dog, as night after night he writhed upon that rug. It was enough to melt the hardest heart. Every day found him making the rounds just as he used to do before the old man died. He would walk slowly up the street, and after awhile pass down the other side on his way to the plantation. He would come back to the store, and after lying under that chair a few moments, would get up, look in my face in the most pleading manner, and then pass into the back yard in search of something. Then he would go up to the house, and after taking his place by the sofa in the hall, suddenly spring up and walk through my father-in-law's bed-room. He was looking for his dead master. The family let him have his own way, and I did all in my power to console him, but all in vain. I tempted him with the choicest meat, but he refused to eat. I offered him the warmest milk, but he would not drink. He went around with his head down, the very picture of sorrow. He dwindled away to almost a skeleton, staggering around daily to places visited by his master in life, and at night giving vent to his distressing moaning. But this could not last forever, so one day, about five weeks after the old man died, Ponto came dragging his lank and weak body down the street—that same street he had traversed so many bright mornings with his master! When he got by the fence he stopped and sank upon the ground. I ran to him, and lifting him tenderly in my arms carried him into the yard. I laid him gently upon the ground—I wish now I had taken him into the house and placed him in the old man's room, for (and the kind doctor turned—there was a tremor in his tone), for he was dead."—Atlanta Constitution.

Where the Bowlders Come From.

All have seen the immense bowlders called "lost rock" in some sections, scattered over the northern part of the United States, which have little or no resemblance to any mass of rock anywhere in the vicinity, and have perhaps asked the question: Where did they come from? also the heaps of sand, gravel, and cobble stones of various sizes, which form many of our ridges, knolls and hills, and which are totally unlike any fixed rock near them. All these phenomena are attributed to a single cause, and that is the great sheet of ice which nature stored up years ago without the necessity of protecting it in an ice-house. According to Agassiz, the sheet of ice, extending in this country as far south as South Carolina or Alabama, was thick enough to cover all the mountains of the eastern part of North America, with the exception of Mount Washington. This peak projected, as a lone sentinel on that vast waste of ice, 200 or 300 feet. In the latitude of Northern Massachusetts, he conceives the ice to have been two or three miles thick. The bowlders were all torn off by the advancing ice sheet, from the projecting rocks over which it moved, and carried or pushed as "bottom drift," scratching and plowing the surface over which they passed, and being scratched and polished themselves in return, till they were finally brought to rest by the melting of the ice. They were not carried as far south as the ice sheet extended, seldom beyond the parallel of 40 degrees north. The native copper of Lake Superior was drifted 400 or 500 miles south; and the pudding stones of Roxbury, Mass., were carried as far south as the island of Penikese.—Scientific American.

Some Men's Luck

General Gordon was severely wounded four times in one battle and within an hour, and lived to fight again; and this is only a specimen of the singular good luck that attended some men. In 1864 a Michigan cavalryman named Drake was out foraging in the Shenandoah valley in company with a comrade named Cooper. Cooper was in a smoke-house after meat, and Drake was on guard at the door when thirteen Confederates suddenly appeared. They were mounted, and advanced at a gallop, part of them firing as they rode up. One bullet found a suitable opening in the stone wall of the smoke-house and flew in and killed Cooper dead in his tracks. Drake was standing beside his horse, and his saddle was hit by three bullets, one of which glanced through his hat. As soon as the trooper could realize what had happened he swung himself into the saddle and dashed at the circle around him. The moment he happened in view, he was a target for carbine and pistol. His horse made a rush at the line, but was driven back. Followed by Cooper's horse he galloped around and across a circle not over one hundred feet across, all the time under a steady fire by the Confederates. This fire was soon returned by Drake, who fired away seven cartridges and then drew his saber. His seven bullets, as afterwards vouched for, killed two men, wounded two more, and killed one horse. His fire broke the circuit and he got out of it, but for thirty rods, as he made off, he was exposed to the fire of nine or ten men. Cooper's horse was killed in the circle, while Drake's was hit no less than nine times and yet not disabled. As for the rider, his comrades, on his return to camp, counted up a record of a truly miraculous escape. Three bullets struck his scabbard, two his hat, four went through his clothing, one burned his cheek, one raked his knee, and two hit his left boot. While one single bullet killed the one trooper, the other had sixteen fired point blank at him and yet did not lose a drop of blood. Cooper's horse was killed by one bullet, while nine failed to disable the larger and more exposed animal.—Detroit Free Press.

At New Philadelphia, Ohio, there died recently, an aged German named Christian Zimmerman, familiarly known to the people of that section as the "old hermit who lived in the rock." He was a very eccentric old fellow, and for the past few years, has been living among the hills of Warwick township, where he died. For many years he has been living in a large rock in the woods on the Town Valley road near here. He had but one room, 8x10 and six feet high. His chair, bed, table and a small stand were all carved in the solid rock. His door was of the same material, with heavy iron hinges. It is said that he daily expected a fortune from his father's estate in the old country, and for fear that he would be robbed, conceived the idea of living thus protected and alone. His fortune, however, never came. The rock still stands as a monument to the old man, and it is an object of great curiosity to the passer-by.

A Colt-Killing Panther.

[San Diego Union.]

A short time ago, near San Dieguito, while two mares were staked out by the stage road with their colts, a panther sprang upon the latter, killing one. Next morning, pursuit was given by Mr. Parcell's sons, of National City. The panther had carried off one colt in addition to the one he killed, and his [illegible] were [illegible] along the track. The [illegible] found covered with brush. The boys put out strychnine, and Mr. Panther succumbed. His body was found next day near the colt. It was an immense beast.

A STRANGE FIND.

An Ancient Burial-Ground Unearthed.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., April 1.—During the recent freshet of the Coosa river it inundated the farm of Mr. Frank Perry, near Rome, Ga. As the waters receded, the current became very swift, and when they reached their normal channel, the soil of the farm had been swept away, and the clay came to the surface. In one of these wash-outs a burial battle-field came to view. Skeletons and parts of skeletons lay strewn upon the field, washed from their resting places by the raging flood, and bones of every portion of the human frame. In addition to the bones every variety of Indian beads were unearthed. A large Indian pipe, carved into the likeness of a human face, was also found. The field was also strewn with implements of war used by the Aborigines, and here and there could be seen remnants of fortifications. Many curious sight-seers and archeologists have visited the spot.

CIRCUS ACCIDENT.

The Cannon Man Fails to Go Off.

During the "side-show" entertainment given at Robinson's circus nightly after the regular performance, a man is shot from a cannon. At a recent performance, the fuse was applied to the gun, the explosion occurred, but no man appeared. This was a surprise to the audience, who did not understand the "hitch." After the smoke had cleared away and quiet was restored, a groan was heard to issue from the gun, and the pitiful cry of "O, my poor arm." Several attendants rushed to the piece, and, reaching in, drew forth the victim who failed to be shot out. It was found that the poor fellow, Henry John, was burned badly about the arms and body, and was suffering intense pain from a broken arm. He was carried to the dressing-room and cared for. He was not dangerously hurt, but he will hardly permit himself to try the experiment again. On the previous nights, it is said, his shirt was almost burned from his back in "doing" the act. Here is a good chance for the society for the supression of of cruelty to stop in and distinguish itself.

A Home Opinion of Logan.

[Indianapolis Sentinel.]

The Daily Bulletin, the leading democratic paper of central Illinois, published by Hon. John H. Oberly, formerly of Cairo, Ill., has the following concerning Senator Logan's defense:

Senator Logan has made another defense of his Unionism. This was unnecessary. No person doubts that Mr. Logan was one of the most gallant defenders of the Union. But it will not do for Senator Logan to say that he was not, at the breaking out of the war, opposed to coercion. He taught coercion was disunion, that secession was revolution, and that the republican party was responsible for the action of the southern secessionists. He denounced Douglas because of that patriot's celebrated war speech at Springfield, and declared, that while Douglas could sell the democratic party, he could not deliver it; and he is known to have declared, at the state capital, that if Lincoln's army ever crossed the big Muddy on its march south, southern Illinois would be dotted with the sepulchers of her sons. Afterward, Logan entered the Union army and fought gallantly; but Logan's crazy utterances against the supposed "Abolition War" gave the democrats of Egypt an unenviable reputation for loyalty.

Why Are You Bilious?

Because you have allowed your bowels to become costive, and liver torpid. Use Kidney-Wort to produce a free state of the bowels, and it will stimulate the liver to proper action, cleanse the skin of its yellowness, cure bilious headache, and cause new life in the blood. Druggists have it; both dry and liquid.—[Zion's Herald. 18

Indian Remains.

While workmen were engaged in hauling dirt from the sandy knoll lying between the two lakes at this place—Pike and Center—out for Thos. Jaques & Oldfather's large ice-houses, they came across the remains of several Indians who had evidently been buried their many years ago. In all fourteen skulls were found, all in close proximity. The remains of other portions of the body were also dug out of the knoll, and it is evident that the place had been a burial ground of more than ordinary size, and an investigation would doubtless prove interesting to those who take an interest in matters of this character. We feel quite sure that there are the remains of the aborigines under two or three small knolls that are yet quite plainly visible in Oakwood cemetery, and we have often thought of making an examination with the assistance of some one learned in Indian lore. We have examined a good many Indian graves in this vicinity, and we feel sure that Oakwood was used as an Indian burial ground long before the city of Warsaw purchased it for the same purpose.—Warsaw Indianian.

It was a singular occurrence that happened to the late Congressman Rainey, of South Carolina. Pursuing the upward destiny of his race, he arose, by successful degrees, from humble citizenship, first to the lieutenant-governorship of his state, then to a membership in congress, and lastly became an honorable laborer with pick and shovel on the streets of his beloved city of Charleston. It was while pursuing his vocation of this latter capacity that his poised pick unearthed from the garbage of the street a copy of the congressional record, with one of his own speeches. The incident was an impressive one, and suggests the possibility that in some one of life's vicissitudes some Detroit socialist, elevated to the dignity of an honest laborer, may unearth a copy of his late "black list" with some such feelings as that which thrilled the breast of the late congressman from South Carolina, when he found himself, unexpectedly, face to face with his record.

Mr. Willis, who lives in Oldham county, Kentucky, had a cat which daily remained away from the house several hours at a time. One day Mr. Willis was walking through a piece of woods about a mile from his house, when he saw his cat a few yards ahead of him, sitting in a kind of recess under a rock. It would sit still for a long time, then walk over to some object near it in the hole and rub its head against it, purring most contentedly. What was his astonishment when he came up to the edge of the rock, and saw that the object of the cat's attention was nothing more or less than a large black snake. The snake was curled up in a ring, and when the cat would approach it, the snake would thrust up its head to receive the cat's caresses. This continued for about a half hour, when the cat evidently grew weary, and, after turning around several times to insure a comfortable position, lay down beside the snake and was soon fast asleep. The next day Mr. Willis took a couple of friends with him to witness this strange spectacle. The maneuvers were repeated. At length they resolved to kill the snake, and did so. This seemed to completely overwhelm the cat with grief, and it used to visit the rock daily, as usual, for several days, without, however, finding out what became of its companion.

THE trouble in Dakota and the northwest, caused by the melting of the deep snows, still continues. Rivers are gorged with ice, and overflowing the country. The people, just emerging from the struggle to sustain life through a long and severe winter, are illy prepared to defend themselves against this new danger. Many families are surrounded by water, and all assistance temporarily cut off. It is feared that large numbers have been drowned or have perished by hunger and exposure. Aid is being extended to them from all available points, and as much being done to relieve their sufferings as possible.

A Losing Joke.

A prominent physician of Pittsburg said jokingly to a lady patient who was complaining of her continued ill health, and of his inability to cure her, "try Hop Bitters." The lady took it in earnest, and used the bitters, from which she obtained permanent health. She now laughs at the doctor for his joke, but he is not so well pleased with it, as it cost him a good patient.—Harrisburg Patriot.

MAN'S MORTALITY.

Like as the damask rose you see,
Or like a blossom on a tree,
Or like a dainty flower in May,
Or like the morning to the day,
Or like the sun, or like the shade,
Or like the gourd which Jonah had—
Even such is man, whose thread is spun,
Drawn out and out, and so is done.
The rose withers, the blossom blasteth,
The flower fades, the morning hasteth,
The sun sets, the shadow flies,
The gourd consumes, the man—he dies.

Like to the grass that's newly sprung,
Or like a tale that's new begun,
Or like the bird that's here to-day,
Or like the pearled dew in May,
Or like an hour, or like a span,
Or like the singing of a swan—
Even such is man, who lives by breath,
Is here, now there, in life and death.
The grass withers, the tale is ended,
The bird is flown, the dew ascended,
The hour is short, the span not long,
The swan's near death, man's life is done.

Like to the bubble in the brook,
Or in a glass much like a look,
Or like the shuttle in weaver's hand,
Or like the writing in the sand,
Or like a thought, or like a dream,
Or like the gliding of the stream—
Even such is man, who lives by breath,
Is here, now there, in life and death.
The bubble's out, the look forgot,
The shuttle's flung, the writing's blot,
The thought is past, the dream is gone,
The waters glide, man's life is done.

Like to an arrow from the bow,
Or like the swift course of water flow,
Or like the time 'twixt flood and ebb,
Or like the spider's tender web,
Or like a race, or like a goal,
Or like the dealing of a dole—
Even such is man, whose brittle state
Is always subject unto fate.
The arrow shot, the flood soon spent,
The time no stay, the web soon rent,
The race soon run, the goal soon won,
The dole soon dealt, man's life soon done.

Like to the lightning from the sky,
Or like a post that quick doth hie,
Or like a quarter in a song,
Or like a journey three days long,
Or like a snow when summer's come,
Or like the pear or like the plum,
Even such is man, who heaps up sorrow,
Lives but this day, and dies to-morrow.
The lightning's past, the post must go,
The song is short, the journey so,
The pear doth rot, the plum doth fall,
The snow dissolves, and so must all.

A PYRAMID OF CABBAGES.

"Why, where are you going, Isabel Eastman? Not into the farm-yard, surely?"

"Yes, Lottie Mayell, I am going into the farm-yard, surely," replied Isabel; with a mischievous light in her gray eyes, and a charming smile on her prettily curved lips, as she opened the gate leading to that place. "Nowhere else can we be confidential without running the risk of being overheard. The farmer's family are in the orchard; Charley and a half-dozen of his playmates are playing in the flower-garden; there's a young couple in the parlor at the piano, he making love, and she not making music, and a still younger couple whispering and giggling in the bay-window; auntie is in my room enjoying 'Splendid Misery;' and grandma is in a side-room darning stockings. And so, if you really want to hear 'right away' why I am here instead of at one of my usual summer haunts, you must e'en follow me to the farm-yard. Besides which"—speaking with increased animation—"I have lately, strange as it may seem to you, developed quite a passion for farm-yards."

"It doesn't seem at all strange to me, my dear, for during our ten years' friendship you've always been developing some odd passion or other. But I've never lost faith in you. Lead on; I'll follow."

And, stepping daintily and gracefully, unimpeded by trains or demi-trains, the young girls threaded their way through the crowd of hens and chickens holding a low and lively conversation preparatory to going to roost; past the cows waiting to be milked, and turning their heads to look after the intruders with great solemn brown eyes; and old Lowland, the white horse, slacking his thirst at the water-trough—to the extreme end of the yard, where a pile of cabbages, neatly arranged in the form of a pyramid, confronted them.

"Behold," said Isabel, stopping before it, "how nature lends herself to art! (That sounds well, though I don't know that it means anything). This mighty structure, formed of the green and succulent cabbage, is, no doubt, the work of some humble field-laborer, who, having heard of the pyramids of Egypt—incited thereto, no doubt, by the newspaper paragraphs about our own dear obelisk—has sought to vary the monotony of cabbage life by building as close an imitation as his material would allow. Let us hope that this flight of imagination may lead to a higher one, and that the cabbage man, like the butter woman, may meet with public recognition, and at last be crowned with a wreath of laurels. Often from the humblest sources spring great works of genius. Lottie—Lottie" (breaking off suddenly and assuming a reproachful tone), "why do you break in upon my eloquence with rude and unseemly laughter? I was about to repeat to you Longfellow's last poem; now I won't. See what your frivolity has lost you! And take a seat on the extreme base of the pyramid—I prefer the mound of sods in this secluded corner, sacred to somebody's rake and hoe—while I go back to the commonplace."

"Thank you, Bell, dear, I'll share the sods with you, if you please. I have an idea the cabbage would prove a very uncomfortable seat under any circumstances. And do go back to the commonplace, that's a darling, for I'm dying to know what has happened since we parted an age ago."

"An age ago. One year and a half exactly. I was then engaged to Claude Werner. Pretty name, isn't it? And he was a pretty little fellow, with nice curly hair and lovely blue eyes, with lashes long enough for a bang, small dimpled hands, and not an idea in his little round head. My mother—with all due deference I say it—and his mother—to whom I accord much less deference—made the match when I was but 18, and I unmade it at 20. I never loved Claude. How could I? And he never loved me. How could he? We were the victims of circumstances and match-making mammas, and two mortals more unlike it would be hard to find. He was the most conventional of men, and would have nearly died if at any one of those dreamy dinner parties, in which his soul delighted, somebody had whispered to him that his back hair wasn't parted straight, while I have often been strongly tempted to shock the full-dressed guests, at the very start, by asking for some more soup.

"Well, last June, at Newport, my diminutive friend, Eda Smythe, with a head the exact counterpart of Claude's appeared upon the scene, and she and my betrothed fell in love with each other at first sight. Mamma fretted and fumed, and scolded, and asked me, with tragic emphasis, how I could look calmly on and see so many thousands of dollars being lost to the family, for she was sure that awful minx would persuade poor dear Claude to elope or something; but I continued to look calmly on, until one evening Claude, with a despairing kiss to Eda's hand, bade her good-night, when I turned suddenly upon them, and made them follow me to my room. There I forgave—quite in the manner of a stage parent—the infatuated midgets at their base duplicity, gave them my blessing, kissed them both; and as soon as they, beaming with joy, had departed, I, also, beaming with joy, and not quite in the manner of a stage parent, except, perhaps, a Pinafore one, executed a pirouette in honor of my newly acquired freedom. Mamma was awfully angry, but they are awfully happy, and they've named the baby after me. My chains (they were never very heavy I must confess) broken beyond repair, I flirted more than ever, all the time growing as weary as could be of hearing the same replies, and doing this thing in the morning and that thing in the afternoon, and the other in the evening, and at last I fled from the old familiar throng precipitately one rainy day, leaving my maid to pack my wardrobe and follow. And I determined that this summer I would try pastures entirely new. Auntie had often told me of the pleasant, old-fashioned farm-house which she had discovered years ago, and I coaxed mamma—promising to take Charley, our youngest, who is the 'worrit' of her life, with me—and to spend three of my four out-of-the-city months here. And, Lottie, I have never been as happy before, and I am firmly convinced that here I have found the kind of life that would suit me best. I was born to love cows and chickens, to make butter, to build pyramids of cabbages."

"You!" laughed her friend. "I think I see you in the dairy, in a neat cambric dress, with sleeves rolled up to the elbows, stamping the pats of butter with your monogram, for that's as near as you'd ever come to churning; and in the hennery, scattering corn to the chickens from a dainty white apron, a curiously-shaped rustic hat meanwhile shading your rose-and-cream complexion from the sun. You born to love cows and chickens! you, who have reigned a city belle for four long years!"

"And for three been most ready to abdicate. By the by"—with assumed carelessness—"have you seen the young farmer, the only child of our host and hostess?"

"Certainly not," and Miss Mayell glances at her watch, "I only arrived two hours ago, and have seen no one but you and your aunt. But I can see him in my mind's eye—tall, ungainly, and speaks through his nose, eats with his knife, says 'How?' and stares at you as though you were a being from another sphere."

"Your mind's eye needs an eyeglass, Miss Mayell. Its vision is weak. Tall, broad-shouldered and gainly, if I may use the word as I mean it. I saw him tossing hay to-day, and he looked like an Apollo who had exchanged his lyre for a pitchfork and profited by the change.

"And his table manners are as exquisite as your own, Miss Mayell, and he has a deep, full voice and does not say 'How?' and has scarcely looked, let alone 'stared' at me. I have an idea that he regards girls of our ilk with quiet scorn, and thinks of us all as hot-house flowers not to be compared with the daisies growing wild in the meadows."

"How long have you been here, Isabel?"

"Six weeks."

"Quite long enough, I think. You'd better go away. You're regarding this young farmer, who never looks at you—I don't believe that, however—too sentimentally. You might come to believe he has fallen in love with me."

"He is so different from the soft-voiced, perfumed darlings by whom I have been surrounded all my life that, to use your own words, with a different application, I stare at him as though he were a being from another sphere. The young farmer reads, Lottie, and reads books which, though printed in our native language, would be Greek to you and me; and he numbers the poets among his friends. I peeped into his room one day, and saw them all, in blue and gold, on his bookshelf. He is an honest, manly fellow, with no false pride about him. I was idiot enough to fancy that he might be the least bit confused when I first saw him at work in his red shirt, and coarse, very broad-brimmed straw hat, but he saluted me as calmly as though he had been arrayed in the finest garments. And his name is Nathaniel—not as pretty as Claude, but it means 'the gift of God.' The gift of God, indeed, his old mother says he has been to her, and so will he be to the woman he marries. And that woman must be a bee, not a butterfly, Lottie," with sudden fierceness, "if ever you tell I'll kill you."

"My dear, when I do, you may. Isabel, I begin to suspect that you are really in love with Nathaniel—another of your old passions—and that beneath your butterfly wings lurks the spirit of the bee. And I may live to see you helping the pitchfork Apollo toss the hay, building obelisks and pyramids of cabbages, copy celebrated sculptures in beets, and heap turnips in imitation of classic old ruins."

"I fear me not, Miss Mayell. For though I would be proud to share with each and every one of those occupations, as soon would I expect that compact mass of greens to suddenly tremble to its base and then topple over, separating one huge body into 100 or more heads, as dream that Nathaniel Leigh would ever care for me."

The pyramid trembled to its base, and its apex tumbled to the ground. The girls rose quickly from their throne of sods and with little shrieks fled to a safe distance, then turned to look again. It toppled over, its many heads rolling in every direction, and in the place it had occupied stood the young farmer.

"I bless your brother for building a pyramid to-day, Miss Eastman," he said, "though he did unload one of the market wagons all ready for market for the purpose. And I bless the happy chance that kept me from the orchard, and sent me here to fall asleep behind, to waken at the sound of your voice. Spell-bound, I remained concealed, half believing that I was still dreaming, to prove the falsity of the old proverb, 'Listeners never hear any good of themselves.' But can I—dare I hope that grains of earnestness mingled with your jest, and that the pats of butter in our dairy may some day be stamped with your monogram? Stand up, Miss Mayell, and you shall not be forgotten when we make the beet statues and the turnip ruins."

"Well, 'pon my word!" exclaimed Miss Mayell, with a frank glance of admiration at the handsome young fellow, and a smile that threatened to become a laugh in another minute.

"And of all things!" said Miss Eastman, a lovely blush mantling her face; and then youth and fun conquered all three, and they laughed until the farm-yard resounded, and Lion, the watch-dog, came bounding toward them, asking with loud bow-wows what was the matter.

A few weeks after Miss Isabel Eastman became Mrs. Nathaniel Leigh, her husband, lying at her feet in the orchard, and looking up into her face with adoring eyes, said: "I never would have gained courage to have told you of my love, though I loved you from the very first, had I not heard from your own sweet lips that you cared a little for me. What good spirit, my blessed, sent you of all places to the farmyard that afternoon?"

"It was an imp sent me there," she answered, demurely. "Mother's youngest, who whispered to me, as I left the house with Lottie, 'There's something awful jolly way back in the farmyard—a pyramid of cabbage, and Nat Leigh fast asleep behind it.'"—Harper's Weekly.

A Two-Sided Swindle.

One day Mr. William E. Dodge sat down in his private office, at No. 13 Cliff street, and began to peruse his private mail. Among the first letters he opened was one which would have attracted more than ordinary attention on account of the graceful penmanship and the remarkable neatness of epistle, even if it had not set forth some very important facts besides. It told in a manly, straightforward way the story of the writer, who was, so he explained, a minister of the gospel, suffering from an illness of his vocal organs, so that he could no longer exercise his priestly functions. He had been afflicted so long that he had been forced, because of poverty, to seek treatment and a temporary home in the City Hospital. He felt that he ought to be afoot on God's work, but he was unable to carry out that wish and desire, and until recently he had no hope of being able to ever again labor in the vineyard. But he had just been assured by some excellent physicians (naming them) that if he would go South he would certainly recover the use of his voice, and it was in the hope that Mr. Dodge would assist him with the loan, say of $50, that this letter was written. In conclusion the writer mentioned, as though casually, that he knew very well certain clergymen whom he named.

Mr. Dodge knew the clergymen and entertained the request so favorably that it was only necessary to read an inclosure that came with the letter signed by a physician to cause him to draw out his check book, write in $50 and send it to the applicant. The doctor's letter written in a sharp, professional hand, set forth that the clergyman was really in need of the money, and the object was so deserving that the kindness of Mr. Dodge's consideration would be well placed, etc.

Presently Mr. Dodge heard something that led him to believe that he had been victimized and thus he tells the story: "I had no sooner sent the check than I began to fear I had made a mistake and I instituted an inquiry. I discovered that the preacher was a fraud and the doctor was an inmate of the hospital because of alcoholism. I supposed he was one of the physicians of the institution. It seems that the preacher didn't know enough about business to get the check cashed, and so he turned it over to the doctor, who brought it to my office and got the money. Then he slipped away and made no division with his confederate. So, you see, the preacher became, like myself, the victim of the swindle.—New York Herald.

Jesting in Letters.

Many an otherwise pleasant letter has been spoiled by words which the writer meant as a jest, but which the reader took in earnest. A pleasantry depends on other things besides the words uttered. Along with it go the manner of the speaker, the tone of his voice and the expression of his face. None of these can be put on a cold sheet of paper, and so the letter of the sort I here complain of gives pain instead of the pleasure intended.

It can not be read with the emphasis with which the writer would read it. The reader catches no half-blown smile, no suppressed merriment on its cold, immovable face, as he might if he could have looked on that of his correspondent when the epistle was penned. The experiment is thus a dangerous one to try, if we value the feelings of others and care to retain our correspondents.

We can hardly blame others if they misconstrue our words. We are liable to do the same with the words of others. All the punctuation of exclamation points will not make up for just one twinkle of the eye in a conversation.

I would say to young folks (and others, too, for that matter), don't joke on paper. You may be sorry for it. A sheet of paper can't smile, or modulate the tone, or shrug the shoulders, or convey the delicate emphasis that indicates that fun is meant and not seriousness.

Many misunderstandings have risen from the habit of using playful sarcasm in friendly correspondence. Prolonged alienation of warm friends has oftentimes resulted from the most unintentional attempt at humorous satire or some innocent jest in a letter.

If you have not the habit, don't get into it; if you have, do get out of it.

THE LATEST REPUBLICAN DEVICE.

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

The attempt of the Republican party to call the treachery of Mahone by some other name, and to give an euphonious label to the bargain by which the Republicans purchased Mahone, is really ludicrous. The endeavor is to call Mahone's sale of himself to the Republican Senators "friendship for the black man." "Friendship for the black man" had as much to do with Mahone's treason and sale of himself as it had to do with the bargain which Judas Iscariot made years ago. The attempt to make respectable the infamy of the part which Republican Senators took in this bargain by calling it by some other name will be, or should be, absolutely unavailing. The plain truth is that the Republican Senators purchased Mahone by as corrupt a transaction as ever disgraced the halls of any legislative body, and they have kept the public business bound hand and foot for six weeks in the endeavor to pay Mahone the promised price for his dishonor. Neither on the part of Mahone nor on the part of the Republican Senators has this disreputable transaction of unprecedented infamy in the history of the national Legislature any redeeming feature. Every impartial, intelligent man in the country knows to-day that the public business will not proceed, because the Republican Senators insist upon paying Mahone. They are afraid that if they do not pay him they may lose him. They have been endeavoring, during these weeks, to force the Democratic half of the Senate to assist them in compensating Mahone for his treachery. The Republican position is that Democratic Senators are guilty of treasonable and revolutionary conduct if they will not contribute to the payment of Mahone for his infamous services to the Republican Senators. The desire to "render service to the black man," the desire to break up "Bourbonism," the desire to "diminish sectionalism," the desire to "encourage independence," and all other alleged desires on the part of Mahone or the Republicans, save the ignoble ones we have indicated, have no more to do with the treachery of the renegade Virginian and his purchase by thirty-seven Republican Senators than they had to do with the treason of Benedict Arnold a century ago.

Harper's Weekly may well say, in view of this situation, as it has said: "There is certainly some turning of the tables when Republicans in the Senate who have most warmly denounced the rebel Brigadiers and insisted upon strict financial honesty are found supporting a repudiating rebel Brigadier as a friend and brother." And the same journal of civilization says of Mahone: "For his repudiating or 'readjusting' policy nothing can be said except that any attempted reorganization of the Republican party in Virginia upon a platform of national dishonesty would certainly fail, as it ought to fail." And the same Republican journal says of Mahone's vote: "If it has been deliberately bought with patronage it is a mutual disgrace to Mr. Mahone and to his buyers." Of course Mahone's vote was deliberately "bought with patronage," and every intelligent man in the country knows this, including the editor of Harper's Weekly. There is nothing else than this in the entire transaction; and the Republicans in the country, outside of the Senate, who are forced into the position of sustaining the Republican Senators in this business, are driven into the indorsement of this infamy. The national Republican party is compelled to applaud this corrupt bargain with Mahone, which even Harper's Weekly calls a disgrace to the Republican Senators. The Republican organ from which we have quoted further says that "if the Republicans promised to give Mahone's friend Riddleberger a warm place as the price of his vote, it was a shameful bargain." The whole country knows that the Republicans did promise Riddleberger a "warm place" as the price of Mahone's vote, and it is useless to attempt to hide this mutual shame beneath patriotic phrases or names that are sweeter in the mouth than the correct ones.

The national Republican party is also compelled to praise Mahone. Its platform is Mahone. The announcement has gone forth that it intends to inaugurate a "new era" of things—in partnership with Mahone. Praise Mahone for what? For his services during the Rebellion, for which he says he has not repented? For his notorious efforts as a Repudiator? For his treason to his constituents and his sale to the Republicans? Upon which part of Mahone, as a platform, do the Republicans propose to go before the country asking for the approval of the voters? This is all there is of Mahone. Which side of him will the national Republican party put before the public to captivate suffrages? It is reported that the Republican party will endeavor to steal the State of Virginia from the Democracy with the aid of the purchased Virginia Senator. How? It must be, if at all, upon the Mahone platform of repudiation. In other words, the national Republican party proposes to enlarge its borders and strengthen its stakes by planting itself upon the platform of repudiation, and by corrupt alliance and partnership with the one man in the United States who happens at this moment to be the most notorious of repudiators! In this event the national Republican party will have sold itself to Mahone—the buyers will have been bought. Upon one of these disgraceful phases of this disgraceful situation must the Republican party appeal to the country for support. What kind of a "new era" is this to inaugurate? How will the candid and unbiased voters of the country, if there are such, regard such an appeal?

"The Best Governments the South Ever Had."

"The carpet-bag Governments were the best Governments the South ever had." So says Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, in his speech in defense of Mahone.

Now let our readers remember that on the termination of hostilities the rebellious States were divided into departments. The work of reconstruction began by acts passed in June, 1868. The Confederate debt, general and local, had been repudiated. The subsequent increase in the indebtment of the reconstructed States is, therefore, chargeable directly and exclusively to Republican rule and policy.

The spoliation under the carpet-bag Governments may be appreciated from the following figures in nine States:

	State debt in 1860.	State debt in 1870.
Arkansas	$4,[illegible]	19,761,[illegible]
Alabama	7,90[illegible]	38,21[illegible]
Florida	[illegible]	15,7[illegible]
Georgia	2,670,750	20,137,[illegible]
Louisiana	14,347,051	41,194,473
Mississippi	......	1,796,971
North Carolina	16,772,945	34,887,467
South Carolina	[illegible]	[illegible]
Texas	384,542	17,000,600
Totals	$[illegible],069,477	$216,066,894

In three years $166,000,000 were added to the debts of these impoverished States just emerged from the desolation of civil war. The carpet-baggers stole and squandered most of this money. Nor did they stop there. The cost of carrying on the State Governments kept pace with the enormous inflation of their indebtment, and taxation followed in the train of both these excesses, almost to the point of confiscation.

The local taxes of these nine States aggregated $11,217,530 in 1860, when they were prosperous. They summed up $36,020,232 when they were prostrated in 1870. In 1860 they had 38,598,996 acres of land under culture, valued at $1,207,387,857, and in 1870 they had 31,978,856 acres, valued at $545,977,915.

These are appalling figures. The revival of the South in the face of them, as exhibited by the returns of the present census, is one of the most astounding facts in the history of civilization.

Now, after the country has put the stamp of its reprobation on these atrocities and compelled the Republican party to denounce the third-termer, who was the instrument through which they were made possible, this New Hampshire Senator unblushingly advocates a restoration of that infamous rule in the South.—New York Sun.

A Prophet Without Honor.

If the Republicans expect to triumph in Virginia through the bargain with Mahone, they ought to find some other assurance of it than his promise. He thus confronted the public as a prophet last October:

> COMMITTEE ROOMS, READJUSTER ORG'N.,
> RICHMOND, VA., Oct. 26, 1880.
>
> Let me assure you, as I do confidently, that an electoral ticket headed by Cameron and Riddleberger, and pledged to Hancock, will carry the State by a plurality of 25,000; that it will beat either the Funder or Grip-Sack tickets by this vote—not less. Rely on this.
>
> WILLIAM MAHONE.

This positive declaration was made only ten days before the election, when the political situation in Virginia was clearly defined, and was well understood by the country. When the votes were counted the popular Democratic ticket for Hancock had 96,912, the Republican ticket 84,020, and the Readjuster Mahone ticket 31,674. Thus Mahone got only 6,000 votes more than the plurality which he had audaciously claimed over the other two tickets separately.

He stigmatized the Republicans as the grip-sack party, another alias for carpet-bagger. But when he found that barely one-seventh part of the aggregate poll of Virginia supported his scheme he at once entered into negotiations for making the bargain which now stands exposed.

Why Women Are Not Popular.

A Toledo gentleman, spending the day in Detroit, went into a little eating house kept by two colored men to get a lunch before taking the home train.

"A cup of tea and a plate of raw oysters," was the order.

"Don't have any tea, sah."

"A glass of beer, then."

"Don't keep no beer. Dis yer is a temperance house. Keeps nothing but coffee, pop and cider."

"If it's a temperance house why don't you keep tea?"

"Well, you see, sah, dis yer's how it was. When we kept tea we had a lot o' ole women sittin' round all de time, keepin' bettah customers away."

"Then tea didn't pay?"

"No, sah; dey cum an' set an' axed more questions than you could think of in a day. Did you know dat pusson an' dis oder pusson. An' whar does Mr. So-and-So lib. An' hev yer been h'ar long. An' was you evah a slave. Why, it takes more time to serve one old woman with a cup o' tea than it does to give a lunch to seven men."

Here was a new insight into the lunch business, and the gentleman swallowed his cold bivalves and departed, satisfied that tea was not a profitable beverage for a temperance house.—Toledo Journal.

Sensations of Freezing to Death.

A Western woman, recently restored to consciousness, describes the sensations attending freezing to death, as follows:

"Thousands of colored lights danced before her eyes; the roar of a thousand cannons was resounding in her ears, and her feet tingled as if a million needle points were sticking into them as she walked. Then a feeling of drowsiness came over her. A delightful feeling of lassitude ensued—a freedom from all earthly care and woe. Her babe was warm and light as a feather in her arms. The air was redolent with the breath of spring. A delightful melody resounded in her ears. She sank to rest on downy pillows, with the many cold red lights dancing before her in resplendent beauty, and knew nothing more until she was brought to her senses."

We have accounts of how it feels to be drowned and hanged, but to freeze we think is preferable. Those who contemplate suicide might do well to pay some attention to the freezing method.

Mexican Police.

The City of Mexico is well guarded by police—four to every block—that is to say, one on every corner. They are dressed in blue, with caps covered with white covering, which comes down over the shoulders. In addition to their baton, they are armed with a revolver, and at night they carry a lantern, which they set down in the middle of the streets to show that they are on their posts. At night, looking up the street, with the houses glistening in the moonlight, the long line of lanterns in the center presents the appearance of the footlights of the stage of some immense theater.

His Stomach.

A Detroit surgeon whose reputation is first-class was seated in his office, when he walked a stranger who was followed by a dog. Without any fooling around, he began: "Doctor, I have the dyspepsia."

"Yes, sir."

"Had it twenty-six years."

"Yes, sir."

"You can't cure it."

"No, sir."

"But you can make an exchange of stomachs between me and my dog."

"Such a thing could be done, and both live."

"Will you guarantee that I won't have a hankering for old bones, if I trade stomachs?"

"No, sir."

"Will I want to chase rats?"

"Very likely."

"And snap at tramps?"

"Quite probable."

"Doctor, this is business."

"Yes, sir."

"And the exchange of stomachs is declared off."

"Very well."

"And I bid you good-day."

"Good-day, sir!"

And the man whistled to his dog and walked out, without looking to the right or left.

Speaking of Governors, suggests the mention of an item we received from Mr. Henry A. Knight, foreman at Chas. Waters & Co.'s Governor and Valve Works, Boston, Mass.: I have used St. Jacobs Oil among our employes and find that it never fails to cure. The men are delighted with the wonderful effects of the Oil, as it has cured them of bruises, burns, etc.

How Clay Captured a Vote.

It is a historic fact that the Fourteenth Congress, beginning on the 4th of December, 1815, and ending March 3d, 1817, passed what is known as the Compensation Bill. It gave to each member a salary of $1,500 per annum. This salary was regarded by the people as a great outrage, and they retired early all of its supporters to private life. Henry Clay was among the few who escaped the wrath of the people. The anecdote has come down to us that when he was canvassing for a renewal of his commission, an old gentleman, who had hitherto been his fast friend, said to him:

"Mr. Clay, I can sustain you no longer. Your vote on that abominable bill shocks my feelings."

To which Mr. Clay replied:

"Do you ever go hunting?"

"Often."

"Have you a good rifle?"

"One of the best that was ever made."

"Has it ever snapped?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did you do with it then? Did you throw it away?"

"No, sir. I picked my flint and tried it again, and by the Lord I am going to try you again."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The subjoined opinion, we perceive, is by J. A. Daniels, Esq., of Messrs. Stogdill & Daniels, attorneys, La Crosse, Wis., and appears in the La Crosse Chronicle: Some time since, I was attacked with pain in and below one of my knee joints. A few applications of St. Jacobs Oil quieted the pain and relieved the inflammation. I regard it as a valuable medicine.

Take Me to Me Ma!

"It is a great thing to see the spiritual truth that all nature symbolizes," said she.

"So it is," said he.

"And yet enjoyment is darkened by a terrible shadow," said she.

"Hay?" he inquired.

"A terrible shadow," she repeated, "that casts a depressing reflection upon the most exuberant soul."

"Yes," he replied, "I've felt it when I've been short on spare ribs."

"On what?" she anxiously inquired.

"On spare ribs."

"But you should be philosophical—you should imitate Pythagoras."

"Who was he?"

"He was a philosopher, an anti-epicurean, but he did not go so far as the Stoics."

"Where did they go?" asked the Board of Trade man; and gazing at him in amazement, his wild Western way began to dawn upon the culchawed mind of the Boston girl, and she said: "Take me to me ma."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The Sorrows of the Critic.

Criticism is as impertinent in the world as it is in a drawing-room. In a kindly and well-bred company if anybody tries to please them they try to be pleased; if anybody tries to astonish them they have the courtesy to be astonished; if people become tiresome they ask somebody else to play or sing, but they do not criticise. A bad critic is probably the most mischievous person in the world * * * and a good one the most helpless and unhappy; the more he knows the less he is trusted, and it is too likely he may become morose in his unacknowledged power. A good executant in any art gives pleasure to multitudes and breathes an atmosphere of praise, but a strong critic is every man's adversary; men feel that he knows their foibles, and cannot conceive that he knows more. His praise, to be acceptable, must be always unqualified; and the heart of correction, which he has learned so laboriously, only fills his hearers with disgust.—Mr. Ruskin's "Arrows of the Chase."

Wallis, who wrote one of the first grammars of the English language, laid down in verse a rule that is frequently violated. It is worth quoting, and many writers as well as speakers will find it a useful thing to memorize:

> In the first person simply shall foretells;
> In will a threat, or else a promise dwells.
> Shall, in the second and the third, does threat;
> Will simply there foretells the future feat.

This will explain that Charles Sumner would call the ridiculosity of the Frenchman's remark when about to sink for the third time: "I will drown; nobody shall save me."

Do not waste your money for every new remedy advertised to cure a cough, when you know that Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup has stood the popular test for thirty years. Price 25 cents.

The Habit of Thrift.

The habits of thrift are defined by the London Globe as facts of self-denial for the sake of some object in the future, and it is just such acts as these which people in all cities find it extremely difficult to practice. It is a matter to a very great extent depending on natural disposition which varies just as much in one class as in another. There are some who by nature are endowed with the accumulative propensity of the squirrel, the bee and the ant. They find a keen and abounding pleasure in hoarding what they get; not, perhaps, for its own sake, but as a measure of successful action, and as a kind of reserve of power which they have at command should they choose to exert it. Others seem to have nothing of this in their composition. The power that money gives seems to them dormant and useless until it is put in action. They are sanguine as to the future, rarely foresee trouble, and are gay and light-hearted in the present; whereas the acquisitive individual will usually be found apprehensive of the coming time, and very apt to meet his troubles half-way. These two types of character are as marked and distinct as any two possibly can be, and the extreme of each can scarcely be considered amenable to modifying influences to any extent. Moreover, they are confined not to one class but are found in all. Education is commonly regarded as the proper cure for thriftless habits, and, to a certain extent, no doubt, it is. But education cannot eradicate the constituent traits of individual character. The accumulative and foreboding will always remain more or less so, and the sanguine and free-handed will always feel the passing day to be the one really important point of time. Moreover, although education implies self-restraint and thoughtfulness, it, of course, has a tendency to expand the view and to create desires which may or may not be of a simple and inexpensive kind. The habit of self-restraint is the one point to which education must tend if it is to develop thrift; and looking around on society generally it is difficult sometimes to discern the existence of this control of individual proclivities in one class more than another, though the nature and direction of those proclivities may vary considerably.

Grateful Women.

None receive so much benefit, and none are so profoundly grateful and show such an interest in recommending Hop Bitters as women. It is the only remedy peculiarly adapted to the many ills the sex is almost universally subject to. Chills and fever, indigestion or deranged liver, constant or periodical sick headaches, weakness in the back or kidneys, pain in the shoulders and different parts of the body, a feeling of lassitude and despondency, are all readily removed by these Bitters.—Courant.

A Plucky Daughter.

A queer case comes from Steubenville, Ohio. A pretty damsel is the heroine. The parties concerned all belong to the aristocracy and are well known in Steubenville. The tale runs thus: Some gentlemen of families were accustomed to spending their evenings in the rear of a first-class saloon, and to make the time pass more pleasantly they introduced the exciting game of "poker," which they occasionally enlivened by the aid of a social glass. In this manner they passed their evenings till the small hours, when they wended their way homeward to their families, some richer and some depressed in spirits. To make the place more attractive, pretty waiter girls, who do not mind a kiss from a man of a family, were in attendance on these gentlemen of the upper circles. Things went on smoothly for a while, but presently notes began to arrive at their residences, addressed to their wives, detailing the state of affairs. The notes came quite frequently, and were quickly burned. It was on one Sunday. The good people were all at church, and the three gentlemen were at their favorite haunt. A daughter of one of the misguided men, ascertaining the whereabouts of her parent, resolved that she would find him and bring him home. On reaching the tabernacle of sin and three aces she sent word up to the private apartment that she desired to see her father and wanted him to come down. The message fell like a thunderbolt upon the men, but father refused to answer the summons. Pushing the messenger boy roughly aside, she bounded up the stairway, and opening the door of the room, boldly confronted the guilty trio. The knights of the pasteboard trembled in their shoes. Had a bombshell exploded it could have had a better effect. On the table was a large pile of money. Snatching up the money, the almost infuriated girl accused the others of robbing her father, whom they at first usually made drunk. All three men were more or less under the influence of liquor, and for a time some very high words were indulged in, but the plucky girl came off first best. She pocketed the money and marched her disgraced parent off home.

Rodent "Bummers."

Patrick Lynch is an Erie flagman at a street crossing in a city on the line of the road, and he is the authority for a queer story about some rats that he saw near his flaghouse a short time ago. A tramp had left the remnants of his dinner on the side of the bank and some whisky had been spilled on the food. There are lots of rats around there that come from the slaughter-houses and travel about the whole neighborhood in flocks in broad daylight. Six of these rats, on an excursion of this character, came across the remains of the tramp's, and immediately proceeded to hold a banquet. They ate to their surfeit of everything. Pretty soon they began to get drunk. They danced around and rolled each other over, hugged one another in maudlin delirium, and acted for all the world as a lot of drunken men might do under the same circumstances. Finally one after another keeled over dead drunk, and then lay helpless, while Mr. Lynch, who had been watching the whole proceeding, stepped out and killed them. They make a feeble effort to get away when Mr. Lynch appeared with a club, but were to drunk to run.—Elmira Free Press.

"Yes," said the school girl who had risen from the lowest to the highest position in her class, "I shall have a horseshoe for my symbol, as it denotes having come from the foot!"

The Humor of Smallpox.

Generally speaking, there is nothing excruciatingly funny about smallpox; but the doctors who are called to prescribe for patients occasionally run onto something that tickles them. Not many years ago a doctor here was called to see a man at one of the hotels, who lived out in Iowa. The man was sick as a horse, and the doctor had his suspicions about what ailed him, but couldn't tell exactly, so he gave him something to quiet him, and told the friend who was with him that he would call in the morning. The friend said he thought as much of the sick man as he could of a brother, and he would see him through. The next morning the doctor called and the sick man was alone. He examined him and found that he had smallpox. While he was dealing out some medicine the friend came blundering in. Said he, "Doc., that medicine ain't worth a continental. This man is very sick." The doctor said he had come to that conclusion himself. "Why," said the friend, "I rubbed him all night. I think he would have died if I had not rubbed his head. When a man is my friend he can draw on me for all that is out, and don't you forget it." The doctor said he was glad to hear it. He said there was nothing more touching to him than pure friendship between men, and he was glad the sick man had a friend that would stick to him. "You bet your life," says the friend. And then he almost intimated that the doctor did not understand his business, and said something had got to be done, if there was any doctors in Milwaukee that could handle the case. The doctor was getting a little hot, and when the friend asked, "Do you know what ails him?" the doctor said he thought he did. Then he pulled down the bed-clothes and pointed to a little swelling near the little toe, and asked the friend if he could see it. "See it! Of course I can. It's only a little pimple." The doctor said there was only one disease that showed that kind of pimples. "What is that?" asked the friend, impatiently. "Smallpox!" said the doctor, in the most aggravating way. "Suffering Moses! let me out of that door!" shouted the friend, and the doctor said you could have played marbles on his coat tail. The doctor fixed up the patient, and when he went out in the hall the friend was leaning against a trunk, white as a sheet and weak as a cat. "Doc.," says he, in a quivering voice, "that man in there is nothing to me. I wouldn't go in that room for a thousand dollars. Is there no way to fumigate me? Say, Doc., I want to be vaccinated. Put a pint of virus into me. Shoot it in with a gun. Damned if I ever go near a sick man again." The doctor says "such is life."—Peck's Sun.

An Accident All Around.

A most ridiculous scene occurred at a church in Newcastle. A policeman was passing the church as a gentleman came out. The man jokingly accosted the policeman and said he was wanted inside, meaning that the minister would be glad to have him turn from the error of his ways, and seek the truth and enjoy a peace that passeth all understanding. The stupid policeman thought there was some trouble in the church, so he went in. The sexton, seeing a policeman, was anxious to give him a favorable seat, so he said, "Come right in here," and he took him to a pew and waved his hand, as much as to say, "Help yourself." There was another man in the pew, a deacon with a sinister expression as the policeman thought, and he supposed that was the man they wanted arrested, so he tapped the deacon on the arm and told him to come along. The deacon turned pale and edged along as though to get away, when the policeman took him by the collar and jerked him out into the aisle. The deacon struggled, thinking the policeman was crazy, and tried to get away, but he was dragged along. Many of the congregation thought the deacon had been doing something wrong, and some of them got behind the deacon and helped the officer fire him out. Arriving at the lock-up, the policeman saw the man who told him he was wanted in the church, and asked him what the charge was against the deacon, and he didn't know, so the sexton was appealed to, and he didn't know, and finally the prisoner was asked what it was all about, and he didn't know. The policeman was asked what he arrested the man for, and he didn't know, and after awhile the matter was explained, and the policeman, who had to arrest somebody, took the man into custody who told he was wanted in the church, and he was fined $5 and costs. He says he will never try to convert a policeman again, and the policeman says he will never go to church again if they get to knocking each other down with hymn-books.—Peck's Sun.

Eilert's Extract of Tar and Wild Cherry has been used for twenty years, and during that time has saved many very valuable lives. Do not neglect a cough or cold until it is too late. Try this excellent remedy, and we are sure you will be convinced of its merits. Chronic Coughs, and even Consumptives, are cured by following the directions. Every bottle is warranted to give satisfaction. Prepared by the Emmert Proprietary Co., Chicago. Sold by all good druggists.

When you come across a weary-looking, wan-eyed man or woman who, being asked what is the matter, places a hand upon the stomach region and says, "Oh, I feel such a weary sinking and 'goneness' here!" rely upon it, that person must either be rescued or shortly die. It is a case of general debility and "breaking-down," beginning at the stomach, and the proper treatment is Dr. Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad.

For dyspepsia, indigestion, depression of spirits and general debility in their various forms, also as a preventive against fever and ague and other intermittent fevers, the Ferro Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya Bark, made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic, and for patients recovering from fever or other sickness it has no equal.

Uncle Sam's Condition Powders are recommended by stock-owners who have used them as the best Horse and Cattle Medicine to be had. If the animal is Scraggy, Spiritless, or has no appetite, these Powders are an excellent remedy, and every owner of stock will do well to try them. They are prepared by the Emmert Proprietary Co., Chicago, Ill., a very reliable firm, and sold by all good druggists.

Everybody is pleased with the improved Carboline, a deodorized extract of petroleum. It is as clear and limpid as spring water, and was originally intended by nature as a panacea for all diseases of the scalp and skin, and as a natural hair renewer.

A Fat Take.

The Lexington Local Leader relates a curious incident: John Whitney, who lives on the old McDougal place, near the Livingston County, Kentucky, line, being out of wood, took his ax and felled an old dead oak tree, which stood in the road in front of the house. The tree, which was hollow to the fork, fell with a tremendous crash, and from out the top rolled a closely knotted ball of snakes, of all colors and sizes, and all in a comatose state. But this was the least remarkable thing which was discovered by the falling of the tree. Mr. Whitney, in removing the trunk, discovered a white lead can, the top of which was closed with a piece of sheet iron. He at once forced off the cover and found the can to be filled with specie—some gold pieces, but mostly silver. Taking his "find" to the house he counted the contents of the can and found that it amounted to $415. Of course it is not definitely known how the money came to be deposited in the tree, but we may from circumstances draw a tolerably accurate conclusion. In the bottom of the can was found a folded page of the Chicago Times bearing date 1861. Old McDougal, now dead, is known to have been an ardent sympathizer with the "Lost Cause," and his neighbors made it warm for the old gentleman in those troublous times. Believing that he would be run off or his house sacked, McDougal, no doubt, secreted this ready money for an emergency.

An Irish servant girl, a year over, was given macaroni by her mistress to prepare for supper. Noticing her surprise, the lady said: "Didn't you cook macaroni at your last place?" "Cook it? We used them things to light the gas with."

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: In the fall of 1876 I was taken with bleeding of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as a half dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of Dr. William Hall's Balsam for the Lungs. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years past. I write this hoping every one afflicted with diseased lungs will take Dr. William Hall's Balsam, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I can positively say it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, IND. MAY 5, 1881.

J. A. BARNS, D. Y. HUSSELMAN, Editors.

THE republicans were recently very much in favor of a registry law, but somehow the legislature failed to make one. The question now is: How will we eke out an existence without it?

EX-QUEEN ISABELLA, of Spain, holds a great deal of real estate in Brooklyn, New York. She made the investment about the time she was driven out of Spain, in order to have some of her property safe.

AND now it is claimed that Dorsey and the star-route thieves contributed $35,000 to the republican election fund. If this is so there is but little chance of their being punished. Too many hearts would bleed.

Two new luminaries have been discovered lately. One is a comet, and was first seen by Prof. Lewis Swift, of Rochester, N. Y. The other was discovered in Steuben county, Ind., and writes refresh ing chronicles for the Republican. It is consoling to know that our earth is in no imminent danger from either.

THE star route business continues to excite a great deal of attention. Brady, who figures so unenviably in these scandals, was formerly editor of a paper in Muncie, Ind. It is now claimed that he is very wealthy, although he has never had a salary greater than $4,000 a year.

THE Hicksville Republican recently made an indecent and wholesale attack on the people of Syracuse, and the COURIER made a few jocular remarks by way of defense. When commenting on our defense of a whole community against his unwarranted abuse, the editor of the Republican gets off the refreshingly original remark, that the "COURIER don't know any better." This, considered as an argument, is so unanswerable that we shall not attempt a denial. We plead guilty to the charge. The COURIER does not "know any better" than to defend an innocent community from the sweeping charge that they are all drunkards, backbiters, gamblers and pimps. We never knew any better. It is one of those rare cases in which ignorance is bliss. There are many other things we "don't know," and are not certain whether the editor of the Republican can help us out or not. We have been at Syracuse a great many times, have become acquainted with many of the people there, but never saw one take a drink, never got drunk ourself, never saw any of the gambling or lewdness of which the Republican claims to have such accurate knowledge. In short, in all our intercourse with the people of the place, we somehow retained a profound ignorance of the vices which our friend seems to have discovered in one or two flying visits. All in all we prefer our ignorance to his knowledge of these things.

Strikes.

Accounts from many of the principal cities bring news of almost numberless strikes among laborers. At St. Louis, the employes of the street-car lines struck for higher wages, and refused to allow the cars to run, thus putting the public to great inconvenience. The police, armed and mounted, were called out and the cars were started and kept running. During the first days, mounted policemen accompanied them on their trips, and this soon quieted the mob of strikers and dispersed them.

Strikes are reported among the painters, boarding-house keepers, printers, etc. in Milwaukee; at the coke and iron works in Pittsburg, Sigar makers in Buffalo, switchmen in Chicago, and in various other places. The complaint is general that the experienced and reliable men are not the ones who organize these strikes, but that they are engineered and kept up by transient men—tramps and the like, who have no permanent home, and consequently but little risk to run.

Supreme Court Commissioners.

Under the laws passed by the last legislature the judges of the supreme court were authorized to select five supreme court commissioners whose duties are that of supreme judges, and are appointed for two years. Chief Justice Niblack nominated Wm. M. Franklin, of Owen county, Judge Howk nominated George A. Bicknell, of Floyd county, Judge Elliott nominated Horatio C. Newcomb, of Marion county, Judge Woods nominated Jas. I. Best, of DeKalb county, and Judge Worden nominated John Morris, of Allen county. Messrs. Franklin and Bicknell are democrats,* and Messrs. Newcomb, Best and Morris are republicans. This virtually makes a supreme court of ten judges, five democrats and five republicans. The commissioners are all gentlemen of known ability as jurists, and the appointments are looked upon by all parties as good ones. The many friends of Judges Best and Morris, in this part of the state, will be gratified to hear of their appointment to places on the supreme bench. The entire bar of northern Indiana, so far as we know, irrespective of party, say amen. Judge Best has been a resident of Waterloo for the last twenty-one years. He is known by everybody as a perfect gentleman, a close student, a sound lawyer and safe counselor. He enjoys a good joke and a fox hunt as well as any man in America.

Neighborhood Nippings.

W. J. Frederick has established a lumber yard at Garrett.

The Valparaiso papers say that Will. J. Speer is to be the new editor of the Northern Indiana School Journal.

Mr. B. F. Wilkie, one of the editor's of the Chicago Times, is in Europe. He will act as correspondent for that paper while abroad.

The Garrett Herald says: "W. H. Keenan, of Northville, Michigan, was in Garrett Wednesday." There's fame for you, W. H."

Posey county claims the champion cow. Her height is five feet ten inches, length ten feet six inches, and though not very fat, she tips the beam at 3,000 pounds.

The Goshen Democrat says: A new reversible coat is about to be introduced by the clothing trade. It is called the "Mahone," and wears equally well either side out.

Our exchanges continue to report a more cheerful feeling in regard to the new wheat crop. It is believed that under the influence of the very favorable spring, it will be a very fair crop.

The Lake-Shore railway is being double-tracked between Elkhart and Chicago. This is another evidence that the line through Middlebury from Toledo to Elkhart will be built. —Middlebury Record.

The Lima correspondent of the Lagrange Register heartlessly alludes to the ducks in his neighborhood, as "bivalves." Brush up your "ornithology," young man. They may happen to be univalves, and sue you for slander.

The Hicksville News has the following: Mr. Bassett, from Waterloo, was in town the forepart of the week looking about for the purpose of starting a jewelry-store here. In a short time he will establish himself in Love's millinery store.

Fort Wayne News: The Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific railway will have completed and in running order by the end of next month its new road between Butler and Detroit, where a connection would be formed with the Great Western railway.

Kendallville News: A three-card monte man was in this city last Saturday. He had secured a lay down of twenty dollars and then run, but through the firmness of O. D. Willett and others he was captured and taken before the mayor and fined five dollars and costs. The twenty dollars was returned to the victim.

"Want some cheese," yelled an urchin, as he entered a Main street grocery yesterday. "What kind will you have?" queried the clerk. "Ma said to get some o' that ut smells like bad feet." The intelligent clerk reached for imported Sweitzer without a word.—South Bend Times.

D. A. Courter, who has been at the head of the bridge department on the Chicago division of the B. & O., has tendered his resignation, to take effect May 1, 1881. Mr. C. has been a faithful and popular official, and we are sorry to see him leave our town. We wish him well wherever he may locate.—Garrett Herald.

At Elgin, Ill., last Thursday a small ferry boat attempted to cross the river with about thirty persons on board, but when about the middle of the stream it sank in deep water. About a dozen persons were drowned. The boat was a poor affair, having been hastily built to supply the place of the bridge which was destroyed by the recent floods.

Goshen Democrat: "The 'Gospel Standard' is a new religious paper just started in Goshen by Elder I. W. Bowman. Counting the Democrat, this makes three religious papers for Goshen, and the two profane journals make five papers now published in this city. We should be pleased to see the Standard in the hands of a great many of our citizens, whose names we could call if we only dare to.

From the Fort Wayne Sunday mail we clip the following: Thursday evening extra brakeman, Jesse D. Jessup, was knocked off from the top of a car of Wabash freight No. 30, when passing under a bridge about two miles east of the city. He was run over by the train and so terribly injured that he died but a short time after. Deceased boarded at No. 84 William street, was unmarried and had relatives living in New York.

We clip the following deserved compliment from the Kendallville Standard of last week: "Neddie Dickinson, of the Waterloo Press, spent last Saturday and Sunday at the residence of the editor of this paper. Our recollections of Neddie were when he was a little 'toddling' boy of three years of age, and we were the 'devil' in the Press office; but he has grown into an intelligent young man, and is an honor to the art preservative. We wish the printing business was represented by many more such young men as Neddie Dickinson."

THE GREEN-EYED MONSTER—A dispatch from Goshen says that people in that vicinity experienced distinct shocks of earthquake on Friday last. This may be true; but it is singular, to say the least, that the shock should have been confined to a single locality. We are opposed to any corner in earthquakes in this state. If one part of the state is to be shaken up, we shall insist on all others enjoying the same sensation.—Indianapolis Journal.

We never took much stock heretofore in the cry about an "Indianapolis ring," but when we find that the papers of that city feel jealous of us because we had an earthquake and they hadn't, we are ready to believe anything of them. But, thank fortune, they can't take the earthquake from us. Indianapolis has its Poke Run, its Bill English, its biennial visitation of legislative solons, and other phenomena, but, unlike Elkhart county, it must go into history earthquakeless.—Goshen Times.

Lagrange is to have a cheese factory. The Democrat says: "The milk will be delivered at the factory by those desiring to engage in the enterprise and each day the entire supply made up into cheese. From 10 pounds of milk, it is estimated, one pound of cheese can be produced. The milk will be carefully weighed, and each individual be credited with the amount of milk furnished. Each month a dividend of sales will be made in proportion to amount of milk furnished, which will give to each member two-thirds of a pound of cheese for every ten pounds of milk furnished, clear of all expenses of manufacture. The cheese will be marketed by Mr. Chamberlain to the very best advantage, and will average twelve cents per pound. He is assuming all risks of putting in the machinery and fitting up the building, and is confident that if the farmers in the community will furnish him a fair supply of milk the enterprise can be made to pay them exceedingly well. Cans, holding from 15 to 20 gallons, will be furnished for $2,50, hence the expense to the farmers will be light. It is certainly quite plain that every farmer should do something to encourage the enterprise."

Buggies For Sale.

J. H. and H. K. Loss, of Waterloo, Indiana, are now offering their stock of Jackson buggies to the general public. These buggies are made from selected material, and are warranted for one year. Their goods are all new, and will be sold cheap. Give them a call. On sale at Waterloo and Hudson. 16 tf

THE floods in the northwest still continue, though now on the decline. It has been especially troublesome lately along the Mississippi river, particularly at St. Louis. At the latter place, and at East St. Louis, opposite, large tracts have been under water for some time. Some of the suburbs of the city have been completely depopulated, and will remain so till the water subsides. At last accounts it was slowly falling.

Hats Reshaped.

Mrs. Clock is now prepared to reshape, color, bleach and press straw hats and bonnets in the latest style, for only thirty cents. Old hats made to look as good as new. Ladies wishing a nice, stylish hat at very little cost should bring their old hats to be reshaped. Will also keep constantly on hand a variety of trimmings at the lowest prices. Corporation Election.

The democrats elected their entire ticket here Monday, with the exception of treasurer. Charles Beugnot, republican, was elected by two majority. The majorities for the remainder of the ticket were as follows: Michael Boland, trustee first ward, 29; C. C. Shaffer, trustee second ward, 45; John C. Henry, trustee third ward, 46; A. C. Wilson, trustee fourth ward, 11; D. Z. Hoffman, trustee fifth ward, 52; clerk, Thos. H. Sprott, 45; Marshal, Thos. P. Scott, 84. Under the new law, lately passed by the legislature, D. Z. Hoffman, and either J. C. Henry or C. C. Shaffer will serve two years, they having received the largest number of votes. Henry and Shaffer will cast lots probably, as they each have 187 votes.

Enumeration of School Children.

As the May meeting of the county board of education Monday, the trustees of the different townships and towns reported their annual enumeration of school children as follows:

Butler township	234
Concord township	499
Stafford township	200
Union township	391
Fairfield township	546
Franklin township	409
Keyser township
Jackson township	498
Newville township	270
Wilmington township	544
Richland township	608
Smithfield township	487
Troy township	229
Auburn	562
Waterloo	534
Butler	374
Garrett	418

A Question for Consideration.

For many years it has been apparent that the people of Union township were not accommodated, as they should be, by their township government. The two large towns in the township early required the formation of two voting precincts; but for all other purposes, the township has remained as it was organized two score years ago. There being two centers of population in the township, of course one of them is practically without the benefits of the township government. A division of the township, and the election of two trustees, would add almost nothing to the burdens of the tax payer. There would be no additional expense for elections, schools, roads and the poor, were the change made, and the only expense involved would be the salary of the trustee. Certainly this would be more than repaid by the conveniences the new arrangement would give the people, in the transaction of township business.

Should the change be made, the public would be best served by placing the six northern sections of Jackson, and the six southern sections of Smithfield into the new townships. But if the majority of the people of this territory object to the change, it should be made without the additional territory. The populations of the new townships would then be much greater than that of the average township of the county.

We are now far removed from political controversies, and this matter can be considered solely as a matter of convenience to the people. If it can be viewed in that light alone, we believe the division will be made at an early date.—[Waterloo Press.

The New Philadelphia Tragedy.

We have been requested to give a synopsis of this noted case for the benefit of many of the residents of this county, who are familiar with the scenes of the tragedy, and a number of them acquainted with some of the parties. Henry Athey and his wife Ellen Ann Athey, whose maiden name was Crites, were living near New Philadelphia, Ohio, and in the same yard, about sixty feet distant, lived Mr. Crites, the father of Mrs. Athey, and his family. Early in the month of May, 1880, Athey hired a young girl named Mary Senff to work for them. Mrs. Athey, though without cause, as afterwards appeared, became jealous of Mary, and on the night of May 28, and while her husband was absent working at the salt works of Dover, she arose about midnight, and, taking an ax, went to Mary's bed-room, and while she was yet asleep, struck her a stunning blow on the head. The poor girl attempted to rise, but was struck down again by repeated blows of the ax, until she fell to the floor dead. A little boy of Mrs. Athey's was sleeping in the room on another bed, but was not awakened. Mrs. Athey wrapped the body in a sheet and took it out to an ash and rubbish heap back of the house, and buried it. She gave out to all inquirers, that Mary had gone away early that morning to get work. On Sunday evening, June 13, Mrs. Athey told her youngest brother, Frank Crites, that she had killed Mary Senff, and asked him to help her dispose of the body. He advised her to tell her husband. This she afterwards did, as well as her father and other brother. Her father insisted that the body be at once taken off his farm. The next day she made a sack of some coverlets, and in the night, her husband and her two younger brothers, Daniel and Frank Crites, took up the body from the ash-heap, and took it away some distance in a wagon, and threw it into Sugar Creek, where it was found floating next day, about a half mile west of Canal Dover. It was taken from the water and a coroner's inquest held, and as it was known that the murdered girl had been working at Athey's at the time of her disappearance, Athey and his wife were arrested. The arrest was made by John Myers, Wm. Rosenberry, Geo. Rosenberry, Edward Helmriech, Lewis Lockner, Mr. Gerber and others. After the arrests were made, search about the premises revealed the ash-heap, which showed signs of having been disturbed. It was dug open, and the stench and other conditions showed that the body had been buried there. In the room where the murder was committed, it was found that the wall-paper had been renewed, and on taking off the new pieces, great stains of blood were revealed. In the stove were found what proved to be the remains of the girl's parasol, shoe buttons, etc., as Mrs. Athey had burned all her clothing to prevent detection. When the parties were brought to trial, Mr. Athey readily proved that he was absent on the night of the murder. Mrs. Athey was then put on trial, February 21, 1881, and the facts as above stated were brought out. The case occupied several days, and at its conclusion, Mrs. Athey was sentenced to the states prison for life.

Rev. F. F. Christine reports thirteen additions by confirmation, to the Reform church at Hudson. There will be communion and preparatory services at Mt. Zion church next Sunday.

The residence of Daniel Kepler in Smithfield, was burned last Friday afternoon, as was also the tenant house near by. Their goods were saved. Insured in the Farmers' Home, for $1,000.

The Temperance Reform Club will celebrate its fourth anniversary Friday evening. They will also have a lecture at Haines' Hall, by Mr. Collins, on Sunday evening. Let all turn out to both.

Henry Knott's dwelling was partly burned last Friday afternoon. The fire caught from the kitchen chimney and spread around under the roof, making it difficult to extinguish it. After cutting several holes in the roof, the fire was reached and was soon brought under control. All the upper part of the building is badly damaged, and owing to the manner in which the fire was spreading, nothing but an engine could have saved it. The furniture was saved. There was no insurance.

There was an unusual degree of interest taken in the corporation election last Monday. The result was as follows: In the first ward, A. L. McEntarfer was elected trustee by a majority of 46; in the second, Peter Fisher, majority 204; third, J. G. Boyer, majority 35; fourth, G. T. Abbey, majority 42; fifth, Wm. B. Duncan, majority 13. For clerk, J. M. Somers had a majority of 27; for treasurer J. A. Shull received 271 votes, there being no opposition for marshal, J. B. Hoover, 89 majority. Total vote polled, 274. Fisher and Abbey are elected for two years; the former receiving 233 votes and the latter, 158, they being the highest.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

An incendiary fire at Shamokin, Pa., burned four large stores and three dwellings. Loss estimated at $150,000....The Hungarian sleeper in the poor-house at Allentown, Pa., who had had but two waking spells in seventy days, arose from his bed the other day, bolted the door of his room, and sprung out of the window. In falling twenty-five feet he broke two of his ribs and injured his spine so badly that he can hardly recover.

A steamer arrived at New York with several cases of small-pox, and the health authorities ordered all the passengers, 1,000 in number, to be vaccinated. All the cabin passengers, and most of those in the steerage, consented, but about 160 Russians and Poles resisted. The doctors called on the crew for assistance, and a scene of the utmost confusion ensued. The immigrants fought as if their lives were at stake, and it finally became necessary to call in the services of the quarantine steamer. Then every man, woman and child who refused to submit were taken on board the quarantine boat and conveyed to Dix island, where they were forcibly vaccinated....Mrs. Howe, charged with embezzling the funds of the so-called Ladies' Deposit, of Boston, has been found guilty....James T. Fields, the Boston poet and publisher, died of heart disease while sitting in his chair. He was born in Portsmouth, N. H., in 1820. From 1863 to 1871 he was editor of the Atlantic Monthly.

Whitelaw Reid and Miss Elizabeth Mills were married at the residence of the bride, in Fifth avenue, New York. Among the guests were Hugh McCulloch, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Vanderbilt, Henry Watterson, Gen. and Mrs. McClellan, and Abram S. Hewitt. It is rumored that the bride had a dowry of $1,000,000....About twenty persons were severely burned or otherwise injured at the fire which destroyed the box factory of S. C. Smith, in New York. One man was burned to death, and others will probably die. A remarkable accident, resulting in the instant death of four boys, and slight injuries to several others, occurred at Louisville, Ky. The boys were pupils of the St. Antonius Catholic school, and were devoting the noon recess to a game of base-ball on a common adjacent to the school. Just at the conclusion of the game a sharp thunder-shower came up. The last strike had been made, and the lad who hit the ball made all the bases, or what is best known as a home-run. As he touched the home-plate, and while his companions were yelling around him in their excitement over his good hit, a vivid flash of lightning dazzled all who saw it. When persons in the neighborhood and others who were passing recovered sufficiently to again look at the boys all of them were flat on the ground. The parties who went to the prostrate boys discovered that they were senseless and that four were dead. The lightning had struck the ground near the group, and plowed five feet deep, making a round hole like the barrel of a rifle. The lightning tore the clothing, hats and boots and shoes from the lads, leaving them half naked. Their apparel was cut like mince meat, and its edges were much scorched.... At the jail in Paris, Ky., John Winn, who was charged with murder, was shot dead in his cell by an armed mob, who forced the keys from the jailer.

THE WEST.

An Omaha telegram of April 28 states that the flood in the Missouri had severed railway connections between that city and every point. Several dwelling-houses floated past that city that day, and half a mile of railroad track was washed away. All important industries were drowned out. At Sioux City both rail and telegraph communication with the North and West was cut off. Four hundred houses were either submerged or surrounded by water, and communication with their occupants was had only by rafts. At Rockford the Wilson ice-house, containing about 1,000 tons of ice, sunk into the Rock river.

Bishop Borgess, of the Catholic diocese of Detroit, has issued a pastoral letter forbidding the holding of any picnic excursion by water or rail, and pastors are commanded to enforce his instructions.

The Mississippi river has been on the rampage all the way from St. Paul to St. Louis. In Minnesota, bridges were carried away, railway tracks washed out, and houses partially submerged. The flood was caused by the high water in the Minnesota and other feeders of the Mississippi. By the breaking of the Sny levee, on the Illinois side of the river, near Quincy, thousands of acres of rich bottom lands were submerged. At Hannibal, Mo., all the ice-houses were destroyed.

Hon. William E. Cramer, the venerable editor of the Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin, was arrested and locked up on a warrant for criminal libel, sworn out by a lawyer named [illegible]. He was released on bail within half an hour. A civil suit for $25,000 was instituted by two other lawyers, named Ludwig and Somers, who claim to have been damaged by an item of police news.

Rumors got afloat at Donovan, Ill., that the grave of Emanuel Siegel had been robbed, some time ago. The coffin was uncovered, and its only occupants were found to be sixteen huge bull-snakes, in a torpid condition.

The beautiful little city of Elgin, Ill., has been the scene of a most distressing calamity that caused mourning in many families. When the iron bridge across the Fox river at that point gave way, a short time ago, the City Council ordered a small ferry-boat, to be propelled by a cable stretched from bank to bank. It had just been completed, and the scow, a frail little structure, only eleven by eighteen feet, running on pulleys on a wire cable, and propelled by the rapid current, made several trips safely, though showing it was not safe. On one of these trips the boat, heavily laden with human freight, was snatched by the swift current, turned half round and filled with water. The panic-stricken children (for half her passengers were children on their way to school) rushed to one side, the rail broke, and the craft careened over. In a moment a score and a half of struggling human beings wrestled with the swift current in the mad waste of waters. There they were in plain view of hundreds watching from the shore, on both the east and west sides, right in the business portion of the city, and the cries of victims and friends on the shore were heartrending. One after another the struggles ended. Boats put out as soon as possible, and many were rescued. Some good swimmers reached the shore from a quarter to a half a mile below. Six persons are known to have found a watery grave. Their names are: Thomas Murphy, aged 38; John Corbin, aged 35; Leo Taylor, aged 16; Elmer Foster, aged 15; Guy Carlisle, aged 15; Frances Creighton, aged 12.... A formidable strike of the conductors, drivers and stablemen of the St. Louis street-car companies for an increase of wages or a reduction of the hours of labor was brought to an end only by the calling out of the militia and the appearance of the Governor of Missouri at the scene of the troubles.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

There was another day of heavy debate in the Senate on Friday, April 22, and at its close an adjournment was taken until Tuesday, partly to enable Senators who live near Washington to transact necessary business, partly to permit the Republicans to have a private conference, and nominally to give the Senate an opportunity to be present at the ceremonies which will attend the unveiling of the statue of the late Admiral Farragut on Monday. President Garfield sent for some Republican Senators to urge on them to relieve his administration from the embarrassment of having so many of his nominations unconfirmed so long. He advised that the Republicans consent to go into executive session at an early day. Senators Sherman, Hawley and Hale are said to be actively urging the President's views.

The usual dilatory motions and the motion to go into executive session were voted on in the Senate, on Thursday, April 26, and after less than the usual amount of talk the grave body adjourned. Senator Edmunds asked that the Judiciary Committee be granted permission to sit during the recess (should that ever occur, he parenthetically said) in order to investigate the subject of bankruptcy. Leave was granted. President Garfield appointed John K. Boies, of Hudson, Mich., and William McMichael, of Philadelphia, members of the Board of Indian Commissioners. Col. S. D. Sturgis and Lieut. Col. J. S. Mason have been detailed respectively as Governor and Lieutenant Governor of the Soldiers' Home. The President also nominated Roswell G. Wheeler, of Indiana, to be Agent for the Indians at Pima and Maricopa Agency, Arizona.

On the meeting of the Senate on Wednesday, April 27, Mr. Morgan asked leave to offer a concurrent resolution declaring that the interests of the people of the United States of America and the welfare and security of the Government are so involved in the construction of ship canals or other ways for the transportation of sea-going vessels across the isthmus connecting North and South America that the Government of the United States, with a frankness which is due all other people and Governments, hereby asserts that it will insist that its consent is a necessary condition precedent to the execution of such project, and also as to rules and regulations under which other nations shall participate in the use of such canals or other ways, either in peace or in war. Referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Only a short session was held, two caucuses being held by the Republicans, when the question of the deadlock, the President's nominations, executive sessions and other matters were discussed. The general feeling was that the effort to elect Senate officers should be persevered in. It was held by some, however, that a determination to pursue the course outlined was not incompatible with executive sessions, and there seemed to be a general feeling that the Presidential nominations and the Chinese [illegible] should be acted upon very soon. No formal action was taken, and the whole matter was referred to a committee, which will report at a future meeting. The President nominated [illegible] Spafford to be Postmaster at Washington, [illegible]

The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations devoted some time on Thursday, April 28, to the discussion of the Morgan resolution, which proposes that the consent of the United States should be a condition precedent to the construction of a ship canal across the Isthmus of Panama. The committee came to no definite conclusion as to what should be done with the resolution, and ended by referring it to a sub-committee, consisting of Gen. Burnside, who will report it back to the full committee at an early day. Senators Butler and Hale were the speakers, and the old straw was threshed once more. Nothing was done, and the Senate adjourned to Monday.

Some species of fish, such as the hag, have the power of exuding from their bodies a certain excrement, which, mixing with the water about them, renders them invisible to their foes. Other species have the power of emitting sudden flashes of light, which are supposed to frighten their enemies, and, perhaps, to dazzle their appointed prey. Still others have long snouts, like the barrel of a gun, through which they shoot fatal drops of liquid, seldom missing their game.

When a young child or infant of the lower order in Chili dies, the baby, after being cleansed, is arrayed in the finest garments, and placed upon an altar in the best room in the house; a pair of wings are fastened to it, and a crown upon its head; above is hung a dove, and the entire surroundings adorned with flowers and ribbons. A guitarist is provided, who, from his seat in front, chants and sings airs, generally of a laudatory and lamenting nature, for the loss of the child; but, as the poncha or drink begins to make itself felt upon the friends who have gathered around, it then becomes a scene of mirth and gladness that the child is now an "angelito" (or little angel). This generally continues for several days, until the body gives forth anything but pleasant odors.

Within a very near approach to truth, the human family inhabiting the earth has been estimated at 1,000,000,000; the annual loss by death is 18,000,000. Now, the weight of the animal matter of this immense body cast into the grave is no less than 634,000 tons, and its decomposition produces 9,000,000,000,000 cubic feet of matter. The vegetable productions of the earth clear away from the earth the gases thus generated, and decomposing and assimilating them for their own increase. This circle of changes has been going on ever since man became an occupier of the earth. He feeds on the lower animals and on the seeds of plants, which, in due time, become a part of himself. The lower animals feed upon the herbs and grasses, which, in their turn, become the animal; then, by its death, again pass into the atmosphere, and are ready once more to be assimilated by plants. The earth or bone substance alone remaining where it is deposited, and not even there unless prosecuted as a common swindler.

Garfield's Physical Strength.

A man came over from Cleveland to purchase several of the General's cows. I had spent several hours in admiring Grant's stable of fine horses, and was determined not to allow Garfield's cattle to suffer, so I went out to the barnyard also.

"Do you see that big spotted cow?" said one of the farm hands. "Well, three years ago the General had a time with her. Two or three of us tried to milk her; but she raised particular Ned and would not allow us to come near. The General heard of the affair and came out into the barnyard, and, going up to the heifer, caught her by the nose, and by main strength held her until we had finished milking."

"Gen. Garfield must be a powerful man," said I.

"Well, you just bet your life he is," answered the hired man. "Why, four years ago, he thought, one morning, he would like to plow a little for exercise. So he went out to the field and started in. The ground was wet, which made the walking very bad; but he kept at it until noon, and after dinner went to work again. He became so interested in thinking up a speech, or something else, that he kept on until after dark; and, when he finally quit, the team was nearly played out, but he was as fresh as a boy. He felt awful bad about working the horses so hard. He is very easy on his horses; but, when he is in a buggy, he wants them to go, and they can't go too fast, either."—Cor. Cleveland Leader.

TORTURING BY ELECTRICITY.

The Agony Which the Killers of the Czar Were Compelled to Undergo.

Rousakoff and Jaliboff, the killers of the Czar of Russia, were mercilessly put to torture. Rusakoff was electricized by powerful batteries, and forced by the intolerable agony he suffered to answer the questions put to him.

Park Benjamin, the scientific [illegible], said to a New York reporter: "The idea of torturing criminals by electricity is not original with the Russians. It is a British invention, and was first suggested about five years ago by an English mechanical journal, in commenting upon the execution of criminals by electric shock instead of by hanging. The English writer wanted to do away with the cat-o'-nine-tails, which is administered in England to garroters and other criminals of certain classes, and use the electric battery, as he somewhat grimly expressed it, so as to produce absolutely indescribable torture, unaccompanied by wounds or even bruises, thrilling through every fiber of such miscreants. There was an American inventor who had a design for inflicting this species of punishment. He fitted brackets of iron on the arms and thighs of the criminal, and placed in them wet sponges. When connected with a current of electricity, the shock would by this system pass through the legs and shoulders, and avoid the vital parts of the body.

"The torture inflicted by electricity is of two kinds—by contraction of the muscles at rapidly-recurring intervals and by burning with sparks. The tortures of old days, when not done by fire or compression, were the straining and tearing asunder of the muscles. Of this kind were the rack, scavenger's daughter and the cages of Louis XIV., in which a man could not stand up or lie down. The electric shock exactly reverses these conditions. It produces an enormously-rapid contraction in the body of the muscles at very short intervals. The degree of pain produced is about the same. The force of the electricity has to be nicely graded, as a too-powerful shock would numb or kill a man.

"The other method is by condensing a number of intermittent sparks on the flesh. This burns the skin, and at the same time produces contractions of the muscles. If put to the side of the jaw it would make every tooth ache."

A distinguished surgeon, of whom questions were asked concerning the machine, said: "The best way to explain it is to give you actual experience; then you will know exactly how it feels. Here is a Faradic induction coil. I pull out this tube a little way. Now, let me place this electrode in your hand. There."

"Oh!" exclaimed the inquirer, as a tingling, thrilling sensation ran through every finger, and his hand closed in an involuntary grasp.

"Does it hurt?" asked the doctor.

"A little."

"Well, we'll try again. Now, you see, I pull this tube further out. I again touch it to your hand and—"

"Whoop!" shouted the victim; "take it away!"

The feeling was as if the hand was crushed in a vise. Every nerve ached and trembled with pain.

"That hurt, did it? Why, that's nothing. Here's something of a very different sort."

He fastened to one wire a small wet sponge, and to the other wire something like a paint-brush, with the brush part made of fine wire. He put the sponge in the visitor's hand and then touched the back of the hand with the wire brush. The pain was unbearable. The surface of the skin was scorched and the muscles of the hand were contracted in a violent manner.

"That is called the electric scourge," said the doctor. "If it were dark you could see sparks fly from each wire. Imagine the effect if the electricity were ten times more powerful."

"Could any man bear that torture?"

"I think not; any man would confess under it, but it is a question what confidence could be placed in such a confession. A man would confess anything to escape the agony."

"What could you compare the pain to?"

"It would be the same as burning alive."

"Would it injure the man?"

"No; not unless the pain drove him insane. If the battery was too powerful it would kill at once. Applied to some parts of the body the scourge hurts more than on other parts."

Imitation Precious Stones.

The really beautiful imitation stones made in Paris consists of a very pure, transparent, and lustrous glass, called Strass, after its inventor, which is frequently colored with the same metallic oxides as real precious stones. Thus the color of the topaz is obtained from antimony and gold; that of the ruby from purple of Cassius (a stannate of tin with stannate or oxide of gold), or from a solution of gold in aqua regia (nitromuriatic acid). The well-known Bohemian ruby glass is produced by copper, and a commoner kind by iron. Some of the finest yellow glass is colored with silver. The first precious stone to be successfully produced by artificial means was the lapis lazuli, the saphire of classical times, but by no means to be confounded with the saphire of the modern jeweler, though closely related to it. Lapis lazuli is an opaque stone of an exquisite corn-flower blue, and was highly prized by the ancient Indians, Assyrians, Persians, Jews, Egyptians and Greeks. Freed from impurities and rubbed down, it gives the ultramarine used by medieval artists for the robes of the Madonnas; and in their day it was worth its weight in gold, the purchaser of a picture having always to pay extra for its use. Its rarity and the cost of preparation make the true ultramarine still worth from ten shillings to fifty shillings the ounce.

The Mother.

A correspondent of the New York Times was, during a flood, crossing the Snake river in a crowded boat. There was in it a mother with an infant, which a gentleman volunteered to hold. In the middle of the stream the rushing waters terrified the woman so that she clutched the boat nervously, which rocked it, endangering the lives of the passengers. In spite of remonstrances she continued to grasp the boat, when the gentleman, raising his voice above the roar of the waters, screamed to her: "If you do that again I will throw your child overboard." She closed her hands tightly and crossed them in her lap. On reaching the shore she fainted. Her palms were covered with blood where she had dug the nails of her clenched hands into them. On recovering consciousness she began to abuse the man who had threatened to throw her child overboard. The boatman told him to "never mind her [illegible]," [illegible] their lives, [illegible] and asked his [illegible] all over—at any rate she would have been if she hadn't done as she was told.

Flying Fish.

I have watched flying fish repeatedly, and have invariably seen them fly, or rather glide, over the surface of the sea, and from one to two feet above it, rising gently to the swell when there was no wind, and occasionally turning to the right or left without touching the water. I do not say that when there is a breeze the tail of the fish may not touch it, but I think that, with the foam and spray of the broken water, it would be very difficult to be sure of it, and, moreover, if the tail was used the motion would be a jerky one. Mr. Wallace speaks of their "rising and falling in the most graceful manner," which, although he is referring to another species, applies also to the North Atlantic form (Exocoetus evolans). Mr. Bennett ("Gathering's," etc., page 14) says that they "spring from the sea to a great elevation." This is probably in reference to their coming on board ship at night, attracted it is supposed, by the lights. I believe the pectoral fins are kept well extended without any motion, except, perhaps, as Mr. Whitman, a recent observer, says, just when they rise from the sea. He gives 800 to 1,200 feet as the greatest distance he has seen them fly, and about forty seconds as the longest time out of the water. By what mechanical means they move when out of the water is still to me a mystery. I have known the flying-fish to be pursued by other fish, nor ever seen any bird near them; indeed few birds are ever seen far from the land north of the southern tropic, where flying-fish are most abundant. The dolphin (Coryphæna) is supposed to be their greatest enemy. I had once an opportunity of seeing one opened—in the West Indies. Its stomach was quite full of Orthagoriscus mola, very young, being not quite an inch long.—Nature.

An interesting phenomenon in photography has been announced by M. Janssen in a note to the French Academy of sciences. While obtaining solar images at Mendon, he has observed that when the exposure is prolonged beyond a certain period in which a good negative is got, this image loses its distinction, and the plate passes into a neutral state—i. e., no appreciable change appears on use of a developer. But if the exposure be continued still further, the negative image gives place to a positive, in which the distribution of light and shade is exactly the opposite, and this image, if the luminous action be well regulated, presents all the details and fineness of the one it has supplanted. With further exposure a second neutral state is reached, opposite to the first, inasmuch as if the latter showed the image uniformly dark, the former shows it uniformly light. For solar negatives taken at Mendon the time of exposure has rarely exceeded 1-1,000 of a second, if the photospheric granulations were to be obtained, and with plates prepared by the gelatino-bromide process, the time may be reduced to 1-20,000th of a second, or less. Now, if one of these dry plates be exposed half a second a distinct positive image is produced, the body of the sun appearing white and spots black, as they do to the eye. M. Janssen has similarly obtained positive images of landscapes appearing transparently as the scenes in viewed naturally; also a view of the park at Mendon, showing a white solar disk on the dark background of the sky and corner types, which are of the same sight as the original types—i. e., positive if the type be positive, and negative if it be negative. In these photographs it is the same spectral rays that have given the negative image, and then affected its transformation into a positive.

The Philadelphia Chronicle speaks of the perfume that arises from a roast chicken as a fowl odor. Must be a present from somebody. A chicken scent by George.

THE NEW LAWS

Which, Under the Operation of an Emergency Clause, [illegible] into Effect, and a List of [illegible]

[illegible] of an emergency clause, have already taken effect. For the information of attorneys and the general public the subjoined synopsis of all these acts has been carefully prepared, and [illegible].

[illegible]

Senate Act No. [illegible]: [illegible] terms [illegible] Aldermen and Common Council, and city officers, [illegible] thereafter they shall be elected, and setting forth the separate duties and powers of the Council and Board of Aldermen.

Senate Act No. [illegible]: Grants to the Common Council and Board of Aldermen of the city of Indianapolis the power to provide for the cost of the construction, maintenance and repair of any or all sewers or drains therein, and to locate and divide such city into sewer districts.

[illegible] Act No. [illegible]: Makes a contract on the part of the State with the city of Indianapolis for the construction of a sewer from the Institute for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, and from the Female Reformatory, and making an appropriation of $40,000 as the State's share of the cost of such sewer.

CITIES AND TOWNS.

Senate Act No. 245: Authorizing cities to grant the right to lay down pipes in their streets, etc., for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants thereof with steam, gas or water, for heating purposes.

Senate Act No. 253: Providing that City Marshals shall have the powers and be entitled to the same fees as constables.

Senate Act No. 61: Provides that lands lying within the limits of any city or incorporate town that are not platted as city or town property, and are not used for other than agricultural purposes, or are wholly unimproved, together with all personal property used for farming upon such lands, shall not be taxed in such city or town above the aggregate percentage of the civil township wherein the property is situated.

Senate Act No. 106: Provides that the person desiring to lay off town lots shall have his plat acknowledged before some officer authorized to take and certify the acknowledgment of deeds, and a certificate of acknowledgment attached thereto before filing such plat for record. Section 2 legalizes acknowledgments already made by other officers.

Senate Act No. 64: Amends sections 1 and 2 of an act "authorizing cities and towns to issue bonds for the purpose of funding their indebtedness, providing for levy of taxes to pay interest on such bonds, etc.," approved March 24, 1879. The amendatory act changes the original in taking away the limit of indebtedness as fixed at $30,000; in fixing the denomination on the bonds at not less than fifty nor more than one thousand dollars, making them payable after two years in equal annual installments, not exceeding in all the period of fifteen years. Section 2 of the amending act makes the levy of tax for the payment of interest on such bonds without limit.

Senate Act No. 67: Provides for the extension of the time for holding office by the town Trustees, as follows: In towns having three Trustees the person receiving the greatest number of votes shall hold his office for two years, and the two persons receiving the next greatest number for one year each. In towns having four Trustees, the two persons receiving the greatest number of votes are Trustees for two years and the two having the next-greatest number for one year each. Where five Trustees are to be elected the two highest in votes are for two years and the remaining three for one year. Where six are to be chosen, the three highest in votes are for two years and the remaining three for one year. When seven are to be chosen, the three highest in votes are for two years and the remaining four for one year. Town Trustees are given power to levy a road tax not to exceed 25 cents on the $100.

House Act No. 437: Amends section 14 of an act for the incorporation of towns, approved June 11, 1852. It adds to section 14 a proviso that in the absence of any inspector of elections at 9 o'clock in the forenoon, the qualified voters present may proceed to choose and appoint substitutes.

House Act No. 378: Amends the act of March 14, 1867, for the incorporation of cities, by adding to section 8 a provision that nothing in the act repeals any law applying to cities having a Common Council and a Board of Aldermen, and in such cities no member of the Council or Board of Aldermen hereafter to be elected shall, during his term of office, be eligible to any other city, county or township office. It also amends section 69 of this act, and adds a section enlarging the powers of City Councils in constructing and regulating sewers, drains and cisterns.

Senate Act No. 16: Amends section 79 of the act of March 14, 1867, as to the incorporation of cities, by providing that whenever thirty or more resident freeholders petition the Common Council for the creation of a new ward or wards to be formed from added territory or by the consolidation of existing wards, and the petition has attached an enumeration of the inhabitants thereof, the Council shall submit the question to the people for decision by vote at the next annual city election.

COURTS.

House Act No. 294: Fixing the times of holding courts in the Fifth judicial circuit, namely, in the county of Jefferson on the first Monday in January, third Monday in March, first Monday in August and second Monday in October; and in Switzerland county on the Mondays succeeding the courts in the county of Switzerland.

Senate Act No. 6: Providing for the filing and allowance of claims against decendents' states, and applying to pending claims, which may be brought to trial ten days after the taking effect of the law.

Senate Act No. 306: Creating the Twenty-ninth judicial circuit, to be composed of Cass county; terms commencing on the first Mondays of September, November, January and April, except as to the spring term of 1881, which commences on the third Monday in April; the September and November terms to last each eight weeks, and the January and April terms each twelve weeks.

Senate Act No. 331: Defines the Eleventh judicial circuit as consisting of Dubois, Gibson and Pike counties; the terms to commence in Dubois on the first Mondays of September and January and the fourth Monday in April; in Gibson county on the Mondays succeeding the courts in Dubois, and in Pike on the Mondays succeeding the courts in Gibson, the length of terms in Dubois to be in all eight weeks, in Gibson seventeen weeks, and in Pike eleven weeks.

Senate Act No. 328: Authorizes the successors of Judges of Circuit or Superior Courts who may have died or resigned, or Judges who from any other cause have left or may leave records of the proceedings of the court unsigned, to sign such record at any subsequent term of the court.

Senate Act No. 293: Abolishes the Superior Court of Cass county and transfers all business from the same to the Cass Circuit Court.

House Act No. 17: Establishes a Superior Court in Vigo, provides for the election, etc., of Judge thereof, that the Criminal Court of Vigo county shall be abolished from and after the third Monday in November, 1882, and that the business thereof shall be transferred to the Circuit Court of Vigo county.

House Act No. 416: Provides that all records of Circuit Courts and Courts of Common Pleas heretofore duly entered on the order books of the County Clerks and not signed by the Judge, be and are hereby legalized and declared to be valid.

House Act No. 436: Provides for the selection of grand and petit jurors by Jury Commissioners, two of whom are to be appointed by the Circuit Courts of each county.

House Act No. 487: Authorizes the Supreme Court to appoint five persons of high character for legal learning and personal worth as Commissioners of the court, whose duty it shall be, under such rules as the court may adopt, to aid and assist the Judges in the performance of their duties; [illegible] to hold office for two years, and their salary is fixed at the same amount as that of the Supreme Judges.

Senate Act No. 12: The amendment provides that the terms of the Circuit Courts in the [illegible] circuit shall be held in the county of Posey on the [illegible] Monday in [illegible], second Monday in November, the fourth Monday in January and the first Monday in April [illegible] Vanderburg on the Monday succeeding the courts in the county of Posey. The courts in the county of Posey are to continue three weeks, and in the county of Vanderburg seven weeks, if the business requires it.

Senate Act No. 41: Provides that the terms of the Circuit Court in the Ninth circuit shall be held in Bartholomew county on the first Monday in February, the fourth Monday in [illegible] in September, and the third Monday in November of each year; and in Brown county on the first Monday in January, the first Monday in April, the third Monday in June and the fourth Monday in October of each year.

Senate Act No. 134: Amends section 1 of an amended act "authorizing the appointment of short-hand reporters for certain courts of record," and has the effect to make women eligible to such appointment.

Senate Act No. 155: Provides that Circuit Judges shall be elected at the general election [illegible]

[illegible] Act No. 16[illegible]: Relating to the incorporation of the Indianapolis Insurance Company, and the change of the title of that corporation to the Bank of Commerce.

Senate Act No. 278: Amending section 5 of an act authorizing and regulating the incorporation of banks of discount and deposit in the State of Indiana, approved Feb. 3, 1873.

BRIDGES.

House Act No. 370: Supplemental to the act of March 25, 1875, "providing for the incorporation of companies formed for the purpose of constructing bridges for railway or common [illegible] purposes over rivers and streams forming the boundaries of the State of Indiana or a part thereof." The supplemental act provides that similar corporations created by the laws of another State for the purpose of constructing a bridge across any river or stream forming in whole or in part the boundary between such other State and this State shall have and enjoy within this State all the rights, powers and privileges granted by the original act.

House Act No. [illegible]: Adds a proviso to the effect that whenever the County Commissioners of a county interested in erecting or repairing a bridge between two counties, after notice given by the County Commissioners of the other interested county, shall fail or refuse to act on such notice for thirty days the Board of County Commissioners giving the notice may at its option proceed to build or repair the bridge.

Senate Act No. [illegible]: Authorizes public aid to corporations erecting bridges over streams forming a boundary of this State, by townships and counties, under the provisions of the act of 1869, and by cities, to an amount not exceeding 25 per centum of the entire cost.

DRAINAGE AND SURVEYS.

Senate Act No. 214: Establishing a new system of procedure for drainage of wet lands, providing that petitions for ditching be presented to Circuit Courts; that the court appoint two Commissioners, who, with the County Surveyor, shall serve for three years as a drainage commission in each county, and have control of all ditching operations under the surveillance of the Circuit Court.

House Act No. 359: Relating to the operations of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, in the State of Indiana, empowering persons employed therein to enter upon lands, and providing for the recovery of damages by petition to the Circuit Courts.

RAILROAD, TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE COMPANIES.

House Act No. 141. To regulate the sale of iron, brass or other worn or scrap metal by the officers and agents of railroad companies and other persons.

H. B. No. 463: An act authorizing railroad companies to construct, acquire, maintain and operate telegraph lines for commercial and other purposes, upon and along their line of route and right of way.

House Act No. 61: Extending the provisions of the Incorporation act to telephone companies, providing how such companies may be formed, that a majority of the Directors must be residents of the State, that the company shall not be liable for errors in messages, or for damage sustained through a failure of its instruments to work, except that a rebate of the rent shall be allowed for the time such instruments fail to work.

THE REVISED STATUTES.

House Act No. 497: Provides for the publication of the Revised Statutes of 1881 under the supervision of the present Codification Commissioners, whose terms of office are extended until Nov. 1, 1881.

LIBRARIES AND LITERARY SOCIETIES.

Senate Act No. 71: To establish public libraries in connection with the common schools in all cities of 10,000 and more inhabitants, defining the powers and duties of Boards of School Trustees in relation thereto, and authorizing a tax not exceeding one-third of a mill per annum.

Senate Act No. 218: Provides that any number of persons not less than seven may associate themselves together to establish and maintain a public library in any city or county for the general benefit or advantage of all of the inhabitants.

Senate Act No. 190: Declares exempt from taxation and assessment the endowment funds of literary, scientific, benevolent and charitable institutions.

FEES AND SALARIES.

House Act No. 489: Amends section 34 of the act of March 31, 1879, fixing fees and salaries of certain officers, and provides that grand jurors and Circuit, Superior and Criminal Court jurors shall have $2 per day while in actual attendance, and 5 cents for each mile necessarily traveled, going and returning; for each day's attendance before a Justice of the Peace, $1 and mileage at the rate of 4 cents per mile.

House Act No. 311: Amends sections 16, 20 and 26 of the Fee and Salary act of 1879, its intention being to abolish constructive fees in the offices of Sheriff and Clerk.

COAL MINES.

Senate Act No. 6: Repeals section 4 and amends sections 8, 17 and 18 of "an act regulating the workings of coal mines," etc., approved March 8, 1879, and adding supplemental sections thereto. The section No. 17, as amended, provides for the appointment by the Governor of a mine inspector, who shall hold his office for two years, no person who is interested in any coal mine within this State to be eligible to hold the office. Section 18, as amended, provides for such officer the annual compensation of $1,500, payable out of the State treasury. The provisions of the act are not to apply to mines where there are less than ten men employed. Section 4 makes it the duty of the inspector to examine all scales used at mines with a view to keeping such scales correct.

ELECTIONS.

House Act No. 121: Provides that in city elections each ward shall constitute a separate voting precinct, with the provisions that the Common Council of any city may make such changes in places of holding elections or in division of precincts as public convenience may require by giving one month's public notice of the proposed changes. In town elections it is provided that there shall be but one voting place, except that towns having a population of more than 3,000 inhabitants may have two places of voting if public convenience requires it.

VOLUNTARY ASSOCIATIONS.

Senate Act No. 32: Amends the amended act "concerning the organization and perpetuity of voluntary associations," by extending the provisions of the second section so as to include in specification 1, associations for dredging or deepening the channels of rivers or creeks, and for the improvement of harbors; in specification 5, the organization of churches, conferences and religious societies; also, the Independent Order of Foresters, including the high and subordinate courts thereof; also, of Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals or Children, and also of the State Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry and its subordinate granges. There are added specification 8, to organize associations for hotel purposes, and specification 9, to organize such for buying and selling real estate, provided that the amount invested [illegible] shall not exceed $100,000.

ROADS.

Senate Act No. 54: Amends "An act authorizing County Commissioners to construct [illegible] not to exceed 6 per cent, instead of 7 per cent, as in the original act. It provides that they shall be issued so as to mature at annual intervals after two years, and not beyond eight years, and further extends the limit of such outstanding bonds in amount from $50,000 to $100,000.

Senate Act No. 217: Amends the act of March 24, 1879, as to free turnpikes, by correcting an error in section 2 of that act as to a tax of "1 mill on each dollar of taxable property for every ten miles of [illegible] completed in the county."

[illegible] Act No. [illegible]: [illegible] the duty of Auditors of the counties where there are incorporated towns or cities having banks within their limits to furnish to the principal officers of such town or city [illegible] day [illegible] by any such bank for the current year. Section 2 provides that if no such statement has been filed with the Auditor, then he shall make and certify a statement from the best information he may be able to get concerning such bank, with a view to taxation for municipal purposes. Section 3 provides that all personal property, notes, bonds or other evidence of debt in the hands of any resident of a town or city, as guardian of a non-resident, shall not be subject to taxation for municipal purposes.

House Act No. 264: A general codification of the tax laws, which repeals all laws inconsistent therewith.

House Act 501: Supplemental to the new Tax law, and fixing the time of the meetings of the County Boards of Equalization after the present year.

APPROPRIATIONS.

House Act No. 407: Provides for a 2-cent tax levy in 1881 and 1882 for the erection of the new State House; appropriating $200,000 for the same purpose under certain restrictions, to be drawn out of the State treasury from any funds not otherwise appropriated and prohibits all State officers from borrowing any money therefor upon the credit of the State.

Senate Act No. 241: Fixing the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives at $8 per day.

House Act No. 129: Appropriates $3,503 for the benefit of former employes of the Knightstown Soldiers' Home, to reimburse them for losses by fire.

House Act No. 81: Makes an appropriation to pay Benton county $973.70, a part of the extraordinary expenses incurred in the arrest, trial and conviction of James McCullough, of Henry county, for the murder of William C. Morgan, of Grant county.

House Act No. [illegible]: Provides for the relief of the State Board of Agriculture. It gives the board authority to borrow $60,000 at 6 per cent, or less interest and to mortgage the State fair-grounds for that sum. There is also appropriated from the general fund of the State $4,000 for 1881, and a like sum for 1882, for the purpose of paying the interest on such indebtedness. The board is prohibited from further incumbering the fair-ground property.

Senate Act No. 26: Appropriates $16,990.71 for the payment of the Indiana Legion and independent companies of militia and minutemen for services rendered under orders of the Governor during the Rebellion.

House Act No. 310: Provides for the establishment of a department of natural history and geology in this State, and the appointment of a chief of such department by the Governor, at a yearly salary of $1,800. There is appropriated to the department the sum of $[illegible],000 for each of the two ensuing years.

Senate Act No. 281: Amends the act of March 1[illegible], 1877, authorizing the acquisition of Green River Island, by authorizing the Attorney General, when so instructed by the Governor, to bring suit in the Supreme Court of the United States against the State of Kentucky for the purpose of establishing boundary lines, and by appropriating $1,500 to that end.

PAUPER CHILDREN.

Senate Act No. 33: Authorizes County Commissioners to purchase or lease suitable asylums for the use and occupancy of children who are proper charges upon the counties, limits the amount to be expended to $6,000 in each county; provides that every child under 13 years of age, and a charge upon the county, shall be received in such asylum when erected, that the Commissioners shall allow a sum not exceeding 25 cents a day for each child for maintenance.

Senate Act No. 130: Provides for the care and support of pauper children. It provides that Boards of County Commissioners may appoint a matron for the care and training of such pauper children of sound mind, between the ages of 1 year and 16 years, as may be or may come into the County Asylum. It is the duty of such matron to furnish such children with clothing, [illegible] education, [illegible] proper age to district school three months in each year. She is to receive not more than 30 nor less than 25 cents per day for the care of each child. In counties where there are more than twenty-five such children a second matron may be appointed. The act provides for reports to, and inspection by, the Board of Commissioners, and for the finding of homes for such children.

COMMON SCHOOLS.

Senate Act No. 379: Provides that the applicant for a loan of a part of the common-school fund or the Congressional township-school fund shall file with the Auditor of the county the certificates of the County Clerk and Recorder that there is no incumbrance on the land offered as a security for the loan.

House Act No. 97: Provides for the purchase of real estate by the Township Trustee for the erection of school-buildings, and sets forth the manner in which the value of such real estate shall be appraised and assessed.

CORPORATIONS, ETC.

Senate Act No. 116: Authorizes the formation of water-works companies by purchasers of the property of pre-existing water-works companies at judicial sales.

House Act No. 23: Enables manufacturing and mining companies of other States to purchase, hold, convey or mortgage real estate within this State.

Senate Act No. 151: Amends the acts of March 11, 1875, and March 3, 1877, as to the incorporation of building, loan-fund and saving associations. It amends section 7 as amended by the act of March 3, 1877, by providing that a borrower who is not in arrears may repay his loan at any time and withdraw from the association.

[illegible] Act No. [illegible]: Amends the act of March 5, 1859, as to limited partnerships. Section 1 is amended by striking out the words "mercantile, mechanical or manufacturing," as limiting the word "business," and taking away the prohibition as to such partnerships for banking purposes.

MISCELLANEOUS.

House Act No. 91: Authorizes natural persons who are aliens, whether they reside in the United States or any foreign country, to acquire, hold and enjoy real estate, and to convey, devise, mortgage or otherwise incumber the same in like manner and with the same effect as citizens of this State.

Power of the Plug Hat.

The plug hat is virtually a sort of social guarantee for the preservation of peace and order. He who puts one on has given a hostage to the community for his good behavior. The wearer of a plug hat must move with a certain sedateness and propriety. He cannot run, or jump, or romp, or get into a fight, except at the peril of his head-gear. Such is the hidden influence of the beaver toward respectability. He who wears one is obliged to keep the rest of his body in decent trim, that there may be no incongruity between head and body. He is apt to become thoughtful through the necessity of watching the sky whenever he goes out. The chances are that he will buy an umbrella, which is another guarantee for good behavior, and the care of hat and umbrella—perpetual and exacting as it must ever be—adds to the sweetness of his character. The man who wears a plug hat naturally takes to the society of women, and all its elevated tendencies. He cannot go hunting and fishing without abandoning his beloved hat, but in the modern enjoyment of croquet and lawn tennis he may sport his beaver with impunity. In other words, the constant use of a plug hat makes a man composed in manner, quiet and gentlemanly in conduct, and the companion of the ladies. The inevitable results are prosperity, marriage and church membership.

CENTAUR LINIMENT
always Cures and never disappoints. The world's great Pain-Reliever for Man and Beast. Cheap, quick and reliable.

PITCHER'S CASTORIA is not Narcotic. Children grow fat upon, Mothers like, and Physicians recommend CASTORIA. It regulates the Bowels, cures Wind Colic, allays Feverishness, and destroys Worms.

THE SYMPTOMS
of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; Sour Stomach; Loss of Appetite; Bowels alternately costive and lax; Headache; Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; Debility, Low Spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a dry Cough often mistaken for Consumption.
Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.
AS AN UNFAILING SPECIFIC
For DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heart Burn, etc., etc.
Take Simmons' Liver Regulator.
This justly-celebrated medicine Regulates the Liver, promotes digestion and fortifies the system against malaria.

—The were playing a game of cards together, when she casually remarked: "So you take my heart, do you?" "Why, certainly—yes." replied he, hurriedly, glancing into her eyes. And the game was up.

—Passion for the antique: "What in the world could that pretty Miss Young see in old Gray, I wonder?" remarked a lady the other day. "I don't know, unless she fell in love with him as an especially old antique She's an enthusiastic collector, you know."

BRADY, second-assistant postmaster-general, has been requested to resign. It has been discovered that the scandalous corruption charged against him in the management of the "star routes" is all true. The matter was pretty thoroughly investigated a year or two ago, but he managed to make the examining committee believe that it was all right, that the vast sums of money he had used were absolutely necessary to regular and rapid transportation of the mails on those routes.

PLACARDS are posted at nearly every cross-road in Great Britain, warning the people against eating American pork. The great English hog is making a fool of himself. And all for the purpose of keeping American meats out of their markets, in order to keep up the price and increase the consumption of the home production. And now come the French authorities to the assistance of their English neighbors in their crusade against foreign pork. Vast amounts of American bacon, ham, and side meat are accumulating in the warehouses in that country. No one dares to buy unless the meat has been inspected by a government officer and pronounced sound. And the inspectors, evidently acting under instructions, manage to discover trichina in about one fourth of the amount inspected. This unfriendly discrimination is causing a great deal of trouble to dealers in those countries, for while stocks are continually arriving they cannot be sold.

MORTGAGED HIMSELF.—A Charlotte, North Carolina paper, says: One of the most remarkable deeds of mortgage probably ever made, was put upon record in the register's office here. According to the terms of this mortgage, Charles Didenover, an intelligent but impecunious man, conveys himself and all right and title to himself to another to have and to hold forever to secure a debt he owes the mortgagee. The deed was duly witnessed, signed and sealed. Didenover is a married man, and, therefore, under the laws of this state, before a man can convey any real estate his wife has to give her signature thereto, acknowledged before a notary public or magistrate. Although it is doubtful whether the object in this case has the character of this property, Didenover's wife waives all her rights, title and claims to him in favor of the mortgagee, and has signed a deed of conveyance, and acknowledged the same with all due form before a magistrate. The case is one of the most remarkable ever known in this section, and attracts widespread interest. If a man can mortgage himself and convert his body into a legal collateral it will open up a new class of security, which will be hailed with great pleasure by many an impecunious man. If the legality of this deed is confirmed by the courts it will not be a great while before Didenover's example will be followed by many hard-pressed topers in the Old North state.

Fiji fashions: The spring opening in Fiji shows quite a revolution in the fashions there. Sharks' teeth necklaces are cut more decollet; the mole on the back is painted red instead of white as last season, and the green string is worn around the left ankle instead of the right, as formerly.

Lovers' quarrel: A lover in Darry township, who had gone west to make a home for his "Birdie," wrote to her: I've got the finest quarter section of land I ever put my foot down on." "Birdie" wrote back: "Suppose you buy another quarter section, John, so that you can have a lawn around your foot." John made a home, but "Birdie" was never the mistress of it.

Continuation of the dead-lock: "Look here" said Gus de Smith to a newspaper reporter, "you tell me a couple of good jokes; I want to get 'em off as original, you know, at a little social gathering tonight. I'll lend you $5 if you do." "Can't possibly do it. If you get off the jokes everybody will know you stole them, and if it leaks out that I've got $5, people will know the same of me." And hence the dead-lock still continues.

Advertising Cheats.

It has become so common to write the beginning of an elegant, interesting article, and then run it into some advertisement, that we avoid all such cheats and simply call attention to the merits of Hop Bitters in plain honest terms as possible, to induce people to give them a trial, as no one who knows their value, will ever use anything else.—[Providence Advertiser. 18a19

Nature's Sluice Way.

The kidneys are nature's sluice-way to wash out the debris of our constantly changing bodies. If they do not work properly, the trouble is felt everywhere. Then be wise and as soon as you see signs of disorder get a package of Kidney-Wort and take it faithfully. It will clean the sluice-way of sand, gravel or slime and purify the whole system. Druggists sell it, both liquid and dry and it is equally efficient in either form.

Making Watches.

Defective Watch Cases are one of the chief causes of so many watches not being good time pieces. The cases being thin and not fitting well, admit dust and dirt to the movement, which soon interferes with the running parts of the watch, necessitating cleaning, repairing, etc., and the amount thus paid out, if applied toward buying a good case in the beginning, would have saved all this trouble and expense. We have recently seen a case that meets all these requirements, it having been carried for over twenty years and still remains perfect. We refer to the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, which has become one of the staple articles of the Jewelery trade, possessing as it does, so many advantages over all other watch cases being made of two heavy plates of solid gold over a plate of composition, and we advise all our readers to ask their Jeweler for a card or catalogue that will explain the manner in which they are made.

It is the only STIFFENED CASE made with two plates of gold, seamless pendants, and center, solid joints, crown pieces, etc., all of which are covered by letters patent. Therefore buy no case before consulting a Jeweler who keeps the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, that you may learn the difference between it and all imitations that claim to be equally as good.

For sale by Abright the Jeweler. Ask to see the warrant that accompanies each case, and don't be persuaded that any other make of case is as good.

THE SONG OF THE HORSE.

Pull! Pull! Pull!
Over crumbling snow and the slippery ice,
Over ridges roughened by man's device;
At risk of limb and our lives' poor price,
We must pull! pull! pull!

Pull! Pull! Pull!
No mercy shown in the piled up load!
No mercy spares us the whip and goad!
Till we drop, worn out, on the frozen road.
It is pull! pull! pull!

Pull! Pull! Pull!
No passenger steps from the crowded car
When another rings—though it is not far
To his own door step—but we horses are
To pull! pull! pull!

Pull! Pull! Pull!
There was a time when we all were ill,
And our masters found it was all up hill
When they had themselves our places to fill,
And to pull! pull! pull!

Pull! Pull! Pull!
If ever the world turns round to show
That man nor beast should be made to go
Beyond his strength, our friends will know
How we pull! pull! pull!

Seven Troys.

The famous archæologist Schliemann writes from Athens to a Russian paper as follows: "I have just returned from Asia Minor, where I have at last finished that digging out of Troy, which I began in 1870. During ten years I have struggled with great difficulties, among which the most troublesome has been the large amount of debris under which the ancient city was buried. It has been necessary to dig down and dig up the ground for more than sixteen yards below the surface, but I am fully recompensed for all my trouble. I found the remains of seven different cities. The last of them was the Ilion of Homer. That city was built by the Æolians, banished from Greece by the Dorians in the eleventh century before our era. In one of the buried cities, I found many statues of Minerva with the owl's head, whence her name of Glaucopis. In another city were found many images of the divinity. But the most interesting and important of all the discoveries is, of course, the city of King Priam. Every article found in the ruins of that city bears unmistakable signs of having been destroyed by fire and in time of war. There were discovered many remains of human bodies in full armor. I dug out and cleared away the debris from the entire wall that surrounded the city, and also from the principal buildings. Now I am finishing a large volume in English, describing with full details of all my discoveries. My Trojan collection is now in London, but at the end of this year, I shall take it to my villa in Athens which is fire-proof, built only of marble and iron. I have received large offers for my collections, from the United States, England, France and Germany; but I could not part with them for any money in the world."

A Boy's Marvelous Presence of Mind.

On the line of the New London Northern railroad, about three-quarters of a mile above the West Side depot, over the Yantic river, is a long iron bridge. When a train is crossing the bridge the only place of refuge for foot passengers is a stringer on the end of the "ties," and running the entire length of the bridge. This stringer is but ten inches wide, and a person standing on it runs the risk of being knocked into the river below if a train is passing, he having to stand at an angle so as to avoid being struck. On Friday, March 18, Mrs. Mary Tarbox, a resident on Yantic street, at the Falls, having occasion to call on her sister, who lives on the West Side, decided to walk down the railroad, thereby saving about a half a mile in distance. Afraid to cross the railroad bridge alone, she persuaded her brother, Frank S. Long to accompany her. Frank is only fourteen years of age. Before entering the bridge they looked up the track, but neither saw nor heard any approaching train. They had hardly reached the center of the bridge, when they were startled by the sharp shriek of the locomotive of Conductor Dower's train just coming upon the bridge. Mrs. Tarbox was struck with terror, and, being slightly lame, missed her footing, falling prostrate across the track. Frank, Springing onto the "stringer," seized the unconscious woman around the waist, and with a superhuman effort dragged her from under the wheels of the locomotive, the train dashing by at the rate of forty miles an hour. As the last car passed he pushed her back on the track and grasped the rails for support. Had he lost his balance he would have fallen into the swiftly-running Yantic, and in all probability have been carried over the falls. The heroic act was witnessed by a score of people from the streets above. Engineer Leach says that it was the most remarkable act of presence of mind he ever witnessed. Mrs. Tarbox in falling struck her face with such violence on the "ties" that one of her teeth was forced clear through her lip.

EDGAR ALLAN POE.

REFUTATION OF AN INFAMOUS SLANDER.

A Hitherto Unpublished Letter From the Dead Poet.

The following letter was printed in the Baltimore American recently, and was from Edgar Allan Poe to the late Dr. J. E. Snodgrass, once editor of the Baltimore Saturday Visitor. It was recently found by Mrs. Snodgrass among her husband's papers, and was written at the time when Poe was engaged on Graham's Magazine in Philadelphia, and when he was still contemplating the establishment of the Penn Monthly in that city. He had left the employ of Mr. Burton, editor of the Gentleman's Magazine, and the latter had apparently revived the scandal concerning Poe's dissipated habits. It refutes the charges against him in the most solemn way:

PHILADELPHIA, April 1, 1841.

MY DEAR SNODGRASS: I hear you have been thinking it was not my design to answer your kind letter at all. It is now April Fool's Day, and yours is dated March 8; but believe me, although, for good reason, I may occasionally postpone my reply to your favors, I am never in danger of forgetting them.

I am much obliged to you for permitting me to hand over your essay to Mr. Graham. It will appear in the June number. In order to understand this apparent delay, you must be informed that we go to press at a singularly early period. The May number is now within two days of being ready for delivery to the mails. I should be pleased to receive a brief notice of Soran's poems for the June number, if you think this will not be too late.

In regard to Burton, I feel indebted to you for the kind interest you express, but scarcely know how to reply. My situation is embarrassing. It is impossible, as you say, to notice a buffoon and a felon as one gentleman would notice another. The law, then, is my only resource. Now, if the truth of a scandal could be admitted in justification—I mean what the law terms a scandal—I would have matters all my own way. I would institute a suit forthwith for his personal defamation of myself. He would be unable to prove the truth of his allegations. I could prove their falsity and their malicious intent by witnesses who, seeing me at all hours of every day, would have the best right to speak—I mean Burton's own clerk, Morell, and the compositors of the printing office. In fact, I would prove the scandal by acclamation. I should obtain damages. But, on the other hand, I have never been scrupulous in regard to what I have said of him. I have alway told him to his face, and everybody else, that I looked upon him as a blackguard and a villain. This is notorious. He would meet me with a cross-action. The truth of the allegation—which I could easily prove, as he would find it difficult to prove the truth of his own respecting me—would not avail me. The law will not admit, as justification of my calling Billy Burton a scoundrel, that Billy Burton is really such. What, then, can I do? If I sue, he sues; you see how it is.

At the same time, I may, after further reflection, be induced to sue, I would take it as an act of kindness—not to say justice—on your part if you would see the gentleman of whom you spoke, and ascertain with accuracy all that may legally avail me; that is to say, what and when were the words used, and whether your friend would be willing, for your sake, and, for the sake of truth, to give evidence if called upon. Will you do this for me?

So far for the matter inasmuch as it concerns Burton. I have now to thank you for your defense of myself as stated. You are a physician, and I presume no physician can have difficulty in detecting the drunkard at a glance. You are, moreover, a literary man, well read in morals. You will never be brought to believe that I could write what I daily write, as I write it, were I as this villain would induce those who know me not, to believe. In fine, I pledge you, before God, the solemn words of a gentleman that I am temperate even to rigor. From the hour in which I first saw this basest of calumniators to the hour in which I retired from his office in uncontrollable disgust at his chicanery, arrogance, ignorance and brutality, nothing stronger than water ever passed my lips.

It is, however, due to candor that I inform you upon what foundation he has erected his slanders. At no period of my life was I what men call intemperate. I never was in the habit of intoxication. I never drank drams, etc. But for a brief period, while I resided in Richmond and edited the Messenger, I certainly did give way, at long intervals, to the temptation held out on all sides by the spirit of southern conviviality. My sensitive temperament could not stand an excitement which was an every-day matter to my companions. In short, it sometimes happened that I was completely intoxicated. For some days after each excess I was invariably confined to bed. But it is now quite four years since I have abandoned every kind of alcoholic drink—four years, with the exception of a single deviation, which occurred shortly after my leaving Burton, and when I was induced to resort to the occasional use of cider, with the hope of relieving a nervous attack.

You will thus see, frankly stated, the whole amount of my sin. You will also see the blackness of that heart which could revive a slander of this nature. Neither can you fail to perceive how desperate the malignity of the slanderer must be—how resolute he must be to slander, and how slight the grounds upon which he would build up a defamation—since he can find nothing better with which to charge me than an accusation which can be disproved by each and every man with whom I am in the habit of daily intercourse.

I have now only to repeat to you, in general, my solemn assurance, that my habits are as far removed from intemperance as the day is from the night. My sole drink is water.

Will you do me the kindness to repeat this assurance to such of your friends as happen to speak of me in your hearing?

I feel that nothing more is requisite, and you will agree with me upon reflection.

Hoping soon to hear from you, I am,
Yours most cordially,
EDGAR A. POE.

Dr. J. E. Snodgrass.

P. S.—You will receive the magazine as a matter of course. I had supposed that you were already on our free list.

P. P. S.—The Penn, I hope, is only "scotched, not killed." It would have appeared under glorious auspices, and with capital at command, in March, as advertised, but for the unexpected bank suspensions. In the mean time, Mr. Graham has made me a liberal offer, which I had great pleasure in accepting. The Penn project will unquestionably be resumed hereafter.

A Quaker's Dilemma.

A Philadelphia anecdote forty years old, but possibly new to cold type, is told by a correspondent of the Boston Commonwealth. The subject was the venerable Cromwell Barnard, a member of the society of Friends, and skipper of the sloop Union, of Nantucket, then being at a Philadelphia wharf. Barnard was promenading the quarterdeck, when a schooner falling out of dock fell foul of the Union and the schooner's captain began to swear vociferously. Of course it didn't do any good, and as Barnard took no notice of it, the captain yelled in a perfectly audible voice that he was an old shad-belly, prefixing a participle that is usually considered to be eminently profane. Mr. Barnard couldn't stand this, so he called down the main hatchway to the mate: "Zimri! Zimri! come on deck and talk some of thy language to this man alongside."

Comical Episode.

John Bradford, Caleb S. Phelps and Luther Payson, three Indiana sportsmen, recently drove from Anderson, in that state, to a good ducking point on the White river, seven miles from town. The hunters hid in a field near the river bank and waited for game. A flock of ducks soon appeared and the men agreed in whispers to fire simultaneously. So absorbed were the sportsmen that they failed to see a wild bull, just from the banks of the Rio Grande, approach with nose in air, and curiously eye them from his position on a neighboring hillock. The flock flew within range, and three guns were discharged at the same instant. The bull, accepting the noise of the guns as a challenge, bellowed furiously and charged down hill, while the hunters ran toward the river at the top of their speed. Payson and Bradford were so fleet of foot that they distanced their companion and escaped by running into the water waist deep. Phelps saw that the mad animal was upon him and he was about to come to bay when a tall, hollow stump presented itself. Into the stump he leaped and crouched down. Just as he got inside, the beast, thundering along over the meadow, struck the stump full tilt. The rotten roots gave way, and stump and man rolled down the incline into the water. Payson and Bradford ran to the rescue and Phelps was extricated. The wild Texan ran bellowing along the shore at some distance below and the hunters made tracks up stream.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

From Detroit to the Sea.

The Detroit Evening News has arranged for three grand pleasure tours from Detroit to the sea and return. A trip of over 2,000 miles, including Toronto, Montreal, Quebec, the Thousand islands, St. Lawrence river, and the White mountains, N. H. The eastern terminus is Portland, Maine, (only 100 miles, or four hours from Boston. The excursion will leave Detroit July 1st, 14th and 21st, tickets being good to return until September 3d. Tickets for the round trip, $20. A circular will be sent free on receipt of stamp, or a handsome illustrated guide book will be issued about June 1st, and will be sent to any address on receipt of thirty cents. Address, W. H. Brearley, Detroit Evening News.

The Reason Why.

HILLSDALE, MICH.—Mahone has the senate. The vice-president gives the republicans a majority—39 to 38. Why are not the republicans masters of the situation? Why can not they break the deadlock at their pleasure? The republicans, when they acquired Mahone, got an elephant or dictator.—Exchange.

The reason why the deadlock can not be broken, without a test of physical endurance which the luxuriant senators do not care to enter upon, is found in the fact that the senate has no such rule as the house. It cannot stop debate by the operation of the "previous question." The vote must be postponed so long as there are democratic senators ready to speak to the question. Great latitude is allowed, and the debate may therefore stretch out to the crack of doom, which, in this case, is the first Monday in December next. It was Senator Conkling's plan to let the democrats do all the talking, but ambitious orators like Dawes wouldn't listen to such a thing, and are playing, therefore, i to the hands of their opponents.—[Exchange.

Giants Thirty Feet High.

We, at the present day, are pers Tom Thumbs, when compared with the huge individuality of antiquity.

The Giant Galbra, brought from Arabia to Rome, under Claudius Cæsar, was nearly ten feet high.

Funnamon, who lived in the time of Eugene II, measured eleven feet and a half.

The Chevalier Sporg, in his voyage to the Peak of Teneriffe, found in one of the caverns of that mountain, the skull of Guanes, which had eighty teeth, and it was supposed that his body was not less than fifteen feet long.

The Giant Ferragus, slain by Orlando, nephew to Charlemagne, was eighteen feet high.

In 1714, near St. Germain, was found the tomb of the Giant Isoret, who was twenty feet high.

In 1590, near Rouen, they found a skeleton whose skull held a bushel of corn, and whose body must have been eighteen feet long.

Platerus saw at Lucerne the human bones of a subject nineteen feet long.

The Giant Buart was twenty-two and a half feet high. His bones were found in 1764 near the banks of the river Modert.

In 1613, near a castle in Dauphine, a tomb was found thirty feet long, twelve wide and eight high, on which was cut the words, "Kentolochus Rex." The skeleton was found entire twenty-five feet and a half long, ten feet across the shoulders and five feet deep from the breast bone to the back.

Near Mazarine, in Sicily, in 1527, was the skeleton of a giant thirty feet high. His head was the size of a hogshead, and each of his teeth weighed five ounces.

Near Palermo, in Sicily, in 1548, was found the skeleton of a giant thirty feet long, and another thirty-three feet high, in 1550.—[Exchange.

DeKalb County Sunday-School Association.

This association will hold its 16th annual convention in the Christian church at Newville, Indiana, Tuesday and Wednesday, June 14 and 15, 1881.

Willis, of Auburn; chorister, C. R. Reed, of Waterloo; assistant choristers, W. H. Getts, A. J. Stewart; organist, Mrs. Lona Caro, of Waterloo; vice-presidents, C. B. Jones, Butler; O. C. Clark, Keyser; Levi Harding, Richland; Henry Gardner, Fairfield; Joel E. Thomson, Smithfield; A. C. Jackman, Waterloo; Richard Elson, of Auburn; Mrs. S. W. Widney, Jackson; Peter Bishop, Concord; Miss Mary Brundage, Wilmington; Aaron Ash, Franklin; David McCurdy, Troy; D. W. Blaker, Stafford; Stephen Olmstead, Newville.

The hospitalities of the people of Newville and vicinity are cheerfully extended to all Sunday-school workers.

Pastors and superintendents are requested to announce this convention publicly, and urge a general attendance. For programmes, send to F. W. Willis, Waterloo, Indiana.

Why Are You Bilious?

Because you have allowed your bowels to become costive, and liver torpid. Use Kidney-Wort to produce a free state of the bowels, and it will stimulate the liver to proper action, cleanse the skin of its yellowness, cure bilious headache, and cause new life in the blood. Druggists have it; both dry and liquid.—[Zion's Herald. 18

Why Use Plasters?

They may relieve, but they can't cure that lame back, for the kidneys are the trouble and you want a remedy to act directly on their secretions, to purify and restore their healthy condition. Kidney-Wort has that specific action—and at the same time it regulates the bowels perfectly. Don't wait to get sick, but get a package to-day and cure yourself. Dry and liquid form sold by all Druggists.—[Germantown Telegraph.

THE THRESHERS.

This is the wheat—
The wheat well grown, man's lawful spoil,
The new-plucked fruit of patient toil;
Pledge 'tis the farmers' sinewy hand—
Its goodly acres waiting stand;
[illegible] are the hands his [illegible] wield
To plow, to sow, to reap the field!
Bruise the bright heads and break them sore,
Scatter the chaff from door to door,
Show me the kernel sound and sweet—
The nation's bread, the winnowed wheat!

This is the flail—
The noisy flail, whose loud uproar
Wears the oaken threshing-floor;
A measured beat, a ringing round,
A harmonized resonance of sound!
The long, low scaffolds wax and wane,
Heap down the sheaves of garnered grain,
And empty, careless, laughter-wild,
The yellow straw is loosely piled.
These level crashings tell the tale—
Swing round the flail, the mighty flail!

These are the men—
The men who cleave, with sturdy stroke,
The fallen giant's heart of oak.
Now build for life and life's demands,
And fill with bread the waiting lands.
Clash rhyme with rhyme, the threshers' song—
Deal blows on blows, strike loud and long;
The wrench of hunger driven at length
The iron of unyielding strength;
Wield the best blade—again, again,
And serve the puny race of men!

—Elaine Goodale in the Critic.

THE PAINTED FAN.

"You won't forget me, little one?" said Earl Lysle, in his softest accents, looking down with earnest eyes into the sweet flower-face, so trustfully uplifted to his own.

"No, I will never forget you," answered the girl.

And the blue eyes grew moist, and the red lips trembled. The promise broke down the last remnant of her strength; the next moment she had burst into passionate, bitter weeping.

It seemed as though the branches in the tree above them bent pityingly down upon them; as though the sun lingered a moment in its tenderest sympathy, ere breathing his good night to the world; though the robin checked his notes to listen to the sobs which echoed through the silence of the wood, and stirred Earl Lysle's heart as it had not been stirred before for many a long year.

He had won the love of many women—won it often for the mere pleasure of winning; sometimes he had won and worn it until it wearied him, but always believing that had the condition been reversed, the woman would have done even as he did. In this case he knew differently. When he first met Lena Manning she had been a child. It had been his hand which had guided her wavering steps across the boundary line from childhood to womanhood; he who had wakened her child-heart from its slumber. For what? For this! It had been in his life a summer-idyl, a passing folly; in hers, the one spot from which all things henceforth must date. He was a man of the world; she a child of nature, whose world henceforth was bounded by the horizon of his presence.

"Hush, Lena—hush!" he entreated, passing his arm about her waist. "Do you really care for me like this?"

A passing pride stirred at his question.

"Do you care for me so little that you can not understand it?" she answered.

"Nay! I love you very dearly—so dearly, Lena, that, might I carve out my own desires, and forget my duties, I would never go back to the great city, and the life which has grown wearisome. As it is, I must go; but, Lena, if I may, dear—if I can so shape my destiny—some day I will leave it all behind me, and come again, this time to pluck and wear my sweet woodland rose next to my heart forever."

Pretty words were very natural to Earl Lysle; yet even as he spoke these words, he knew that ere another year had run its course, he was destined to lead to the altar his heiress-cousin—a tall, haughty brunette—whose letter of recall now lay in the breast-pocket of his coat.

"But—but if things should go amiss—not as you fancy?"

There was absolute terror in the girl's tones—terror so great that, to the man, it seemed cruelty not to quiet it; and, besides, his heart was stirring within him to nobler, better purposes.

Perchance he might avow to his betrothed the truth, that, instead of a marriage of convenience, he sought a marriage of love, and ask her to free him from chains which already began to gall ere they were fully forged.

So he only drew closer to him the girl's slender figure, until the blonde head lay on his shoulder, as he stooped and pressed his lips to its golden crown.

"Have no fear, my little one. I will come back with the first snow."

"You promise, Earl?"

"I promise!"

Lena had always loved the summer rather than winter. The leafy trees, the birds, the flowers, the blue sky—all had been to her as welcome friends, to be greeted rapturously, to be parted with almost tearfully; but this year she could scarcely wait for the turning of the foliage, or the southern flight of the birds.

She smiled from her window, as she looked out one bright morning upon the first frost. She laughed when people said that it would be an early winter.

All her painting—for she possessed great talent with her brush—depicted winter scenes—snow and ice.

But just at the Thanksgiving season her father, a sturdy farmer, was borne senseless, one day, to his home, and died before he recovered consciousness.

It was her first real grief. She had lost her mother when an infant. It seemed to her that she could not have had strength to live through it, but that, as they lowered the coffin into the grave, a few flakes of snow came whirling down from the gray sky, and she welcomed them as heaven-sent messengers of hope.

When she came back to the quiet house, through whose rooms the dear, cheery voice would never more echo, she almost expected to find some one waiting for her; but all was still and desolate.

They were dreary weeks that followed—the more dreary that she found a heavy mortgage lay on the farm, and that when all things were cleared up, there would be left to her but a few hundred dollars.

"He will not care," she murmured. "It will prove his love for me the more."

The week after the funeral, set in the first heavy snow-storm, and the papers told how it had spread from one end of the country to the other.

Lena was almost barricaded in her lonely home, but she sat all day, with folded hands, looking upon the soft, feathery flakes — watching the drifts grow higher and higher—and knew that it was all bringing summer to her heart.

The neighbors came to take her in their sleighs, when the sun peeped out again and all the earth was wrapped in its white mantle. They said that her cheeks were pale and her hands feverish, and that she must have more of this clear, bracing air.

But she shook her head and refused to go. Could she leave the house, when at any moment he might come? Besides, she had sent to him a paper with the announcement of her father's death, and this must surely hasten him.

But day succeeded day, until week followed week, and still he neither came nor sent her word. The snow-clouds had formed and fallen many times, and each time her heart grew sick with longing.

She loved him so wholly, she trusted him so completely that she thought only sickness or death could have kept him from her.

The hours dragged very slowly. Her little studio was neglected. She sat all day, and every day, beside the window, until one morning she wakened to know that the first robin had returned, and the first breath of spring was in the air. He had failed to keep his promise to her.

That same day they told her that the farm must be sold. Many neighbors offered her a home, but she declined them all.

A sudden resolution came to her. She would go to the city where he lived. Her pride forbade her seeking him, but maybe, if he were not dead, as she often feared, she might one day meet him in the street, or at least hear some news of him.

The hope of meeting him—of hearing him—vanished, when she found herself in the great metropolis, and realized its size and immensity.

She had secured a comfortable home with a good, motherly woman, but her purse was growing scanty, and she could not tell how long it might hold out, unless she could find some means of support, when one day, sauntering idly on the street, glancing into a shop-window, she saw some fancy articles, painted by hand.

Gathering up her courage, she went in and asked if there was sale for that sort of work, and if she might be allowed to test her skill.

From that hour all dread of want vanished, and, now that hands were busy, she found less time to brood and think.

"I want a fan painted," the man said to her, one day. "You may make an original design, but it must be very beautiful."

Lena's heart had been very sad all day, as, at evening, she unfolded the satin, and sat down, brush in hand, to fulfill this latest order.

"It is a gift to an expectant bride," the shopkeeper had said; and the words had recalled all the long waiting, the weary disappointment, those words might bring.

And, as she thought, she sketched, and the hours crept on and the evening grew into night, and the night into morning, and still she bent over her work, silent, engrossed.

The next day, the gentleman who had given the order for the fan sauntered into the store. With an air of pardonable satisfaction, the man drew it from the box.

"The young artist has outdone herself, sir," he said. "I never saw a more beautiful piece of work, and the design is entirely her own. I—"

But he checked his sentence.

The gentleman had taken the fan in his hands, and was examining it with startled eyes, and face from which every trace of color had fled.

Could it be that the word Nemesis was painted upon the satin? No, this was all he saw. On one side was a woodland scene, while, seated on a log beneath the leafy branches of an old oak, were two figures, one a man, and one a woman. His arm was about her waist. Her lips seemed to move, her whole expression was full of love and trust, and his of promise. A little laughing stream ripppled at their feet. A bird sang overhead.

Where had he seen just such a scene before? He turned the fan on the other side. Summer had vanished. It was winter here. Naught but the fast-falling snow drifting in white heaps upon the earth.

"Who painted this?" he asked, in hoarse, changed tones.

The man gave the name and address. How well he had known it! but how came Lena here? And what was this which stirred through every fibre of his being? Could it be that his manhood might yet redeem him?

With swift steps he walked to the house of his betrothed. Stately and beautiful, she came into the drawing-room to greet him, and bent her head that he might touch her forehead with his lips.

"Helen, do you love me?"

She had known him for long years, but never had she heard such earnestness, such real passion, in his tones.

It was as though his very soul hung on her answer. Strange, she had never dreampt his love for her was more than friendship, such as she had felt for him.

A tinge of color crept into her cheek.

"I have promised to marry you, Earl. You know that I am fond of you, and I highly respect you. Will not this satisfy you?"

"No. I want all the truth. Is your heart mine—all mine, so that, to tear me from it, would be to tear it asunder?"

"No, Earl. If it were for your happiness or mine, I could give up my lover and still hold my friend and cousin."

He seized her hand and carried it to his lips more fervently than he had done even in the moment of his courtship. Then, taking the fan from his pocket, he unfolded it, and told her all the tale of his summer romance.

"I thought I could forget her," he said, in ending, "and that when the snow fell and I did not return to her, she would cease to remember me; but see, Helen! She still remembers, and I still love. I do not know what brings her here. I have heard nothing from her since last summer. But, tell me, cousin mine, what must I do? I leave it all to you."

"I said that I would be your friend. Now, I will be hers as well. Go to her, Earl. Tell her all the truth. Then, if she forgives you, make her your wife. If she is alone in the world, as perhaps she may be, bring her to me. She shall be married from my house, as my sister. I accept this fan, not as a lover's gift, but a pledge to the truer, more honest bond which henceforth binds us."

Lena was exhausted after her sleepless night, and, throwing herself on the lounge in the sitting-room of her kind hostess, she had fallen into a dreamless slumber.

Long Earl Lysle stood and watched her, until the magnetism of his glance aroused her. She thought that she was dreaming of the fan; but as he stooped and took her in his arms, she knew that it was reality.

She listened silently while he told her all—even his struggle for forgetfulness, and his ignorance of his own heart and its demands. She heard that she had sent the paper with the news of her father's death to the wrong address, that he had known nothing of the long, lonely winter to which had succeeded this wonderful, glorious summer-time of hope.

Poor child! She had no room for pride in the heart so filled by his image. She forgot that there was sore need for forgiveness.

He loved her now! Of that she was assured; and after all, the snow had only lain upon the ground to warm the earth, and foster the rich, sweet violets, which now bloomed and clustered at her feet, ready for her to stoop and pluck them.

Perhaps some women, in their pride, would have rejected them. She could not; but, stooping, kissed them, then transplanted them to her heart, there to shed sweet fragrance forevermore.

The Towers of Silence.

From the midst of a grove of palms rise two circular towers, near which stands a large building looking not unlike some public institution in any well-to-do city in America, and which is, in truth, one of the temples which seem so necessary in every Indian landscape. The "towers of silence"—what does not the fancy picture when that name is heard for the first time? A religious retreat, where one wearied with the din and turmoil of the city below may enter and find peace and rest. Such a retreat as Taine must have reached in the Pyrenees when he felt that in such a spot and with such influences the "Imitation" must have been written. Or, perhaps, it is designed as a place of punishment, and persons caught in crime are brought here to wear out in silence their term of sentence, which will last till life flickers feebly and hope dies. Away runs imagination, but a talkative "wallah," or, literally speaking, fellow, who is our guide, soon brings back wandering fancy by the appalling announcement that the towers are, in truth, the Parsee cemetery or mortuary.

Directly a Parsee dies he is brought to the temple, and then after the other rites are performed the body is disrobed, anointed with sacred oils; after that it is taken to the towers, which are about thirty feet in diameter and entirely open at the top; and then placed upon an iron grating for the vultures to come and devour the flesh. In every direction one can see the majestic palms bending low with their burdens of vultures and kites waiting for new prey; the air abounds with their hungry cawing, while it is also laden with the sickening odor of decaying flesh. While a body is being placed in position the edge of the tower is filled with cawing, chattering spectators, hungry to make the first plunge upon the victim. With one accord they dash down out of sight, and one knows by the change from tumult to quiet that the Parsee interment is taking place. That which but a short time ago was a human being, with hopes, and fears, and aspirations such as still animate us who gaze transfixed with horror, is being torn shred by shred and carried into the air, to be dropped and picked up, and quarreled over, or else to be consumed with genuine satisfaction. No sooner does a sated bird fly on lazy wing to some far-off tree top to sleep off the effects of his gluttony than a fresh one arrives upon the scene to carry on the hideous work. Others sweep down upon us, the living, and brush our very faces with their noisome wings. Beside us stand some Parsees, who watch the circling birds with loving interest, and one English-speaking guide tells us that they frequently stand and watch them till they know their dead to have been consumed. As soon as the birds have cleaned all the flesh from the bones, they are dropped into a well at the bottom of the towers, where they are covered with quicklime and consumed. The tower is then flooded and deodorized, and so, it is claimed, there is no taint in the air, but any one having the sense of smell unblunted feels that that boast is not founded upon truth.—Bombay (India) letter.

Marvelous Instinct.

Let us examine the marvelous instinct of the solitary wasp in providing for the worm that will issue from her egg after her own death. She brings grubs—food that, as a wasp, she never tasted—and deposits them over the egg, ready for the larva she will never see. The life history of every insect exhibits instincts of this perplexing description. Look at the instinctive character of bees in their far-sighted provisions for the future. Witness the caterpillar, how, at the proper time, it selects a suitable situation and spins for itself a silken cocoon. Marvelous instincts are met with outside of the insect world; every little bird is its own skillful accoucher. We once observed the self-delivery of the chicken. The prison-wall is not burst in pieces by struggles. By a regular series of strokes the shell is cut in two—chipped round in a perfect circle some distance from the large end. The bird has a special instrument for this work—a hard, sharp horn on the top of the upper mandible, which, being required for no other purpose, disappears in a few days. Obviously, each individual bird no more acquires the art of breaking its way out than it furnishes itself with the little pick-hammer used in the operation; and it is quite clear that a bird could have never escaped from the egg without this instinct. How were eggs hatched before birds had acquired the instinct to sit upon them? A fowl that never before willingly shared a crumb with a companion will now starve herself to feed her chickens, which she calls by a language she never before used—may have never heard—but which they are born to understand.

A YOUNG Italian painter, Signor Carlo, in Paris, has been astonishing a select circle of spectators with some wonderful performances in the way of rapid execution. A member of the company chooses a subject, and without a moment's reflection, the painter proceeds to depict it on a large canvas, six feet by three. In four or five minutes the picture is finished and replete with details. Of course, being produced at such a rate, the work leaves much to be desired; but as an instance of lightning speed, combined with a harmonious ensemble, it is simply marvelous.

Our Opium Eaters.

Almost any physician of reputable practice is qualified to tell us that the intemperance that agitates society and puzzles legislatures is after all not the most subtle or dangerous that afflicts the country. Disease in its varied and acute manifestations, is to be dreaded, not simply because it inflicts immediate injury upon the body and sometimes the mind, but because it so often opens wide the door to the habit of opium eating, which is a greater evil than almost any disease can be. It is not easy to satisfy our sense of justice by holding the victims of this habit to a strict moral accountability, for about the first effect of the drug used habitually is to deaden the will power and make the partaker a slave to a craving that was planted independently of his own motion. Women are the greatest sufferers. The nervous disorders to which they are subject, and the pains and maladies which attack them in myriad forms, seem to drive the doctor to the morphine bottle as the inevitable resort for the relief of his patients. This is like feeding babies upon soothing syrups. It accomplishes what it is intended to accomplish for the time being, but it exacts a penalty which it takes the suffering and sometimes the agony of a lifetime to satisfy. Alcoholic stimulants never establish a mastery over body and mind in the same short period of time that suffices to implant the opium craving in an ordinary human constitution. The effects of alcohol manifest themselves even to the most ordinary observer. The effects of opium, on the other hand, almost defy detection by the experienced eye of the skillful physician. Those under its influence are lively, cheerful, frequently brilliant, and they get the credit of being in excellent health and spirits, when, in fact, they are in deadly warfare with all the laws of physical and moral health. The result of this now wide-spread practice, which is as secret as it is terrible, is to enfeeble the generations that come from these impure sources. The importation, and, we suppose, the consumption of opium in this country has increased 140 per cent. during the last four years, and we fear the doctors are responsible for not a little of this startling exhibit. They should use opium and its preparations only in very extreme cases, and then not long enough or regularly enough to create a craving. Otherwise they may be, and in many cases will be, laying the train for habitual opium exhilaration and drunkenness, which is almost worse than death itself.

Is Consumption Contagious?

It is surprising to some American visitors to European hospitals to find that consumptive patients are kept in a department by themselves, while the same care for separating is not exhibited in regard to diseases deemed more contagious on this side of the ocean. Yet the conviction that pulmonary diseases are infectious is gaining strength among American physicians, and it is a noteworthy fact that the fathers of medicine, Hippocrates and Galen, inclined strongly to that opinion. The same belief has been entertained all along by many prominent physiologists and anatomists. Consumption often arises from eating of the meat of animals with diseased lungs, and actual experiment has shown that when different animals have been fed on the diseased lungs of a cow, they have been attacked by pulmonary disease. A rigid supervision of all meats sold, and a thorough system of ventilation in houses, and especially in hospitals where consumptives are treated, seem to be the best preventives against the acquirement and communication of the malady.

Down With the Children!

In the eyes of certain old gentlemen, who evidently were born into the world in a grown-up condition, a playing child is a nuisance fit only for abolition. To them a park is consecrated to the monotony of perpetual silence. The walks are either to be trodden by the feet of adults or else to be let alone. Shrub and tree and bush and fern are to be contemplated from a distance and by people who comprehend the full import of the terrifying legend, "Hands off!" Children, if they view the works of nature or art grouped in a green enclosure, are to be tied fast to high chairs and seated at windows whence they may survey the prohibited territory without stepping upon it. The world was made for old folks who never picked a flower, pulled a leaf or twisted a twig or made a misstep or put anything out of place or did that which they ought not to have done. Staid and correct in their demeanor and exact in their purposes these adults may pursue their undeviating way through life, regretting that all the roads are not laid out at right angles and that all the footways are not paved with brick or concrete or flag-stones.

The child should not play marbles, for one of the spherical instruments of amusement may chance to lie in the way of the juiceless adult who disbelieves in children. No kites must be sent up in air, lest dried-out old gentlemen trip on the kite-strings. No velocipedes may speed along the park walks, for some old person who never bestrode one may be alarmed at the possibilities of the flying monster. When children need exercise they must be taken out two by two in charge of a nurse. They must be made to walk along in a comely manner, turning neither to the right nor the left. When they see anything particularly calculated to attract attention they must not cry "Hi, hi!" but must pucker up their little mouths and gently whisper "Oh, my!"

It is maintained by the ignorant persons who are idiotic enough to believe that little boys and girls have rights, that childhood needs sport. This is held by some of the grave old gentlemen to be a fundamental error. They themselves have got along through a lengthened and dreary experience without a day of holiday or afternoon of play. They are one with that old person of whom it is recorded that when he saw a young kitten merrily playing with its tail he procured a hatchet and chopped the tail off, thus stopping the animal's fun.

There is one method of sport frequently resorted to by young persons when all others are cut off. That is the making of grimaces. Most of our young people are adepts at it. They can stand at windows on opposite sides of the street and makes faces at each other all the afternoon. This does not hurt the parks. There are many children in this city to-day who would like to make ugly faces at the grim old gentlemen who would forbid their sport. Let these children be unrestrained in any distortions of countenance it may be their pleasure to make.—Philadelphia Times.

The Days of Humbugs.

Is it possible that this can be the Nineteenth century? is the question one asks oneself as the eye settles upon the longs lists of astrologers, clairvoyants and other humbugs, which have a prominent place in the advertising columns of our dailies. There is probably no other country in the world where such imposters could ply their nefarious trade with impunity. "Of course it is only the ignorant who patronize such people," is the usual remark passed in connection with these charlatans. But such is far from being the case. People, ladies especially who should know better, visit the offices of these imposters, in the fond belief that they may get a "tip" on stocks which will make their fortunes, or, by some exercise of witch or wizard's power, be able to marry the man they love. There is not cause to waste pity upon this class for fools will be fools the world over, and the astrologer might as well have their coin as any one else. It is from the laboring class, however, that the fortune-teller chiefly gets his living, and many a hard-earned dollar has been paid—for what? For nothing—and worse than nothing. It is this class that needs protection, and it is to be hoped that, ere long, instead of granting them licenses as at present, some law will be passed which will sweep them, with other useless rubbish, into the gutter of oblivion.

Too Much Remorse.

There has been a feud of long standing between two Galveston darkies. They were continually fighting and quarreling. Not long since one of them died, and, to the astonishment of the colored population, the other one attended the funeral. After the funeral services were over, the Rev. Aminidab Bledso, of the Blue Light Colored Tabernacle, met the surviving enemy, and said, impressively:

"I was much pleased to see yer at de obsequies ob yore ole enemy. Hit does credit to de goodness ob yore heart. Hit shows dad yer don't carry yore presentiments beyond de grave. Eberybody is praisin' yer for yore goodness."

"I dunno about dat ar. I had to lose half a day's work attendin' dat ar funeral, and de Bible says, 'Bizness fust and pleasure afterward,' and I took de pleasure fust and did my work afterward. I reckon I ought to be ashamed of myself."—Galveston News.

CURES Without Dosing Simply by Absorption

TRADE MARK.

Is a sovereign remedy for all forms of Liver and Stomach troubles, and is the ONLY SAFE and ABSOLUTE cure for Malaria in its various types.

Dr. Holman's Pad is a genuine and radical remedy, WITHOUT TAKING MEDICINE.

It was the FIRST article of the kind that was introduced to the public generally. It was the ORIGINAL PAD, and was devised by DR. HOLMAN alone.

He struck out from the beaten path and made a NEW WAY. No sooner had he rendered the undertaking a CERTAINTY than the IMITATORS and PIRATES who hang to and infest ever successful enterprise, started up and have since followed in his footsteps as closely as the law will tolerate.

Against these DR. HOLMAN gives SPECIAL WARNING. Not only do they FAIL TO CURE, but in disappointing the purchaser they bring doubt and odium on the principal of Absorption, of which Dr. Holman's Pad is the GENUINE and ONLY TRUE EXPONENT.

Every Imitation is an emphatic endorsement of the substantial worth of the genuine article. A poor one is never copied.

Dr. Harter's
IRON
TONIC

Is a preparation of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and the Phosphates, associated with the Vegetable Aromatics. Endorsed by the Medical Profession, and recommended by them for Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Diseases, Want of Vitality, Nervous Prostration, Convalescence from Fevers and Chronic Chills and Fever. It serves every purpose where a TONIC is necessary.

Manufactured by The Dr. Harter Medicine Co., St. Louis.

The following is one of the very many testimonials we are receiving daily:

Gentlemen:—Some three months ago I began the use of DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC, upon the advice of many friends who knew its virtues. I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the TONIC. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the TONIC has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit.

Most gratefully yours,

Cuvier's brain has seldom been equaled in weight; it is noted at 64.5 ounces. The brain of James Fisk, Jr., was considered unusually large, its weight slightly exceeding fifty-four ounces. Yet it was ten ounces below that of Cuvier, and thirteen ounces lighter than the heaviest known.

When the herrings migrate from south to north they travel in such numbers that their shoals, says Kirby, consist of millions of myriads, and are many leagues in width, many fathoms in depth and so dense that the fish touch each other. This stream continues to move at a rapid rate for months. A pair of herrings, says Buffon, if left undisturbed for twenty years, would produce a progeny whose bulk would equal that of the entire globe.

In certain parts of the East a curious mode of capturing elephants is sometimes adopted. A trained elephant will first be taught to walk on a narrow path between two pitfalls which are covered with turf; and then it will be taken into the woods, in order that it may decoy the wild herd into the neighborhood of the snares. The "decoy" elephant, having succeeded in the latter purpose, will next, we are told, walk slowly round and close to the traps, and then suddenly hasten forward, as though frightened, and proceed safely past the pitfalls, in which some of the wild elephants are almost certain to become entangled in their attempts to follow after him. Dr. Darwin, who tells us of this method of capture, says that, if any of the wild herd be fortunate enough to escape from the traps, they never fail, if possible, to pursue the traitor who had endeavored to decoy them, and to have revenge upon him; and sometimes they have been known, in their rage, to beat one to death.

Education for Light-Houses.

Why should not light-houses learn to spell out their own names? Such is the latest idea of our scientific men, and the last word of the advanced educationalists. Some distinctions there are at present, but too many of those "towers along the steep," which, in spite of the poet Campbell, Brittania does need, are furnished with fixed lights, and these have been more than once confounded with the ordinary gleam from a sea-port town, or even a village on the cliff. It might be thought that the glare of our beacons, with all their costly apparatus and multiplied reflectors, could never be mistaken for an ordinary lamp, yet Professor Tyndall stated at the Society of Arts, on Wednesday night, that "in certain conditions of the atmosphere a candle in a lantern and the electric light were undistinguishable by mere appearance," so that Shakespeare's "How far that little candle throws its beams!" had a scientific basis. It is now proposed that by a system of "group flashes" every light-house in the United Kingdom should indicate its own identity. Telegraphists are aware how numerous are the combinations which may be made by grouping and regrouping the long and short "dashes" of the Morse system, and the heliograph has applied the same principle to the flashes of the sun. On this principle it is hoped that finally every light-house in the Kingdom will be able to spell out its name to benighted and bewildered seamen, instead of, as now, simply making "its mark." Scores of wrecks may thus be avoided. The "fog-horns" or "sirens"—"such names mingled!"—are also to be sent to the new night-school, and, instead of the hoarse bellowings which are now their only utterance, are to be endowed with more or less articulate speech. These are Sir William Thompson's excellent proposals, and they have received the approval of the Trinity House.—London Telegraph.

Worry.

If you find yourself disposed to give way to that mind-weakening, happiness-destroying disease of worry, try to recuperate your nervous system. Go to bed and sleep your imaginary troubles away. If you cannot sleep, it is a sign that your blood is sluggish; your nervous system is used up; your muscular system has had little or no employment. Then do something to tire the muscles and start the blood. Do not fall into the delusive snare of "gentle exercise;" that is admissible only for invalids. Whatsoever you do, do it with all your might. Take a tramp on the hills; saw wood; ride horseback; give fifteen minutes to an Indian club or a pair of not-too-heavy dumb-bells; run; jump; anything to exert your body and stop the exertion of your mind, to set your muscles into exercise and give your nerves a rest. Get into a glow and a perspiration, and make yourself feel thoroughly, healthily tired. Then take a bath, get on clean clothes, eat a light meal with a good appetite, and go to bed; and, ten chances to one, you will go to sleep and wake in the morning cheerful and hopeful, prepared to laugh at your former melancholy.

NOTIONS OF THE FIRST SETTLERS.

[From the Mendovi (Wis.) Buffalo Co. Herald.]

Mr. W. H. H. Amidon, one of the first settlers in the town of Gilmantown, Wis., and one of the most industrious and hard-working men in the county, has been very severely troubled with rheumatic pains during the past few years, so much at times that he was disabled from performing manual labor. Learning of the wonderful cures effected by the use of St. Jacobs Oil he procured a few bottles and experienced immediate relief. Many others of our acquaintances have used it and express themselves as highly gratified with the relief it has afforded them. This king of medicines can be bought everywhere.

How the Golden Legend Was Written.

In the summer of 1851 Longfellow wrote his poem, "The Golden Legend," and it was the good fortune of the editor of the Republican—then a compositor and proof-reader—to set the type and correct the proofs on that work. It was stereotyped in the old University printing office at Cambridge, Massachusetts. The copy was written with a blunt lead-pencil, on rough (or unsized) white paper of ordinary letter-page size; the lines were widely separated, but in a rather cramped back-hand, and sometimes illegible. The poet used classic and ecclesiastical phrases which puzzled the compositor, and in more than one instance, when he came to our "case" to bring his proofs, we asked him to read passages in his copy and to explain phrases he had used. He was then a hale, portly, fine-looking man, nearly six feet in height, well-proportioned, with a tendency to fatness, brown hair and blue eyes, and bearing the general appearance of a comfortable hotel-keeper. His dress was fashionable without being foppish; his manner gracious, but not familiar. "The Golden Legend" is a sort of drama, with brief poems interspersed, and at the close of each scene a place and date were given, probably to show when and where it had been written. The compositor was directed to omit the same; but we recollect Newport, Nahant and Cambridge among these places, and the dates were from one to two days to as many weeks apart. The poet was seized with inspiration at sundry times and places, and wrote whenever he felt like it. He would occasionally cancel a verse or passage, and once he canceled about seven pages; but the identical poem appeared several years afterward in the Atlantic Monthly. He was Professor of Modern Languages and Literature in Harvard University, and wrote most of this poem during vacation. We saw him once in the University Library inquiring for a book on Natural History from which he could learn the color of a certain bird's eyes. The severest criticism ever uttered upon Longfellow was that he looked at things through the windows of literature rather than with his own unaided eyes.—Lansing (Mich.) Republican.

(From the Cincinnati Irish Citizen.)

Mr. John Miller, of 54 West Fifth St., tells us that he was cured by the use of St. Jacobs Oil of a complicated case of rheumatism of ten years' standing.

A Pleasing Incident.

There is a lady living in a little four-room cottage in the environs of Boston, whose name is well known to literary people. She depends wholly upon her own exertions for the support of herself and children, and does all her own housework, yet her cottage is the focus of the best society of the locality. A gentleman calling there recently was received at the door by a daughter of the lady, who told him her mother was too busy to be called, but that he could see her in the kitchen if he pleased; and he followed her to that room. The lady greeted him without the least embarrassment, though she had on a big apron and her sleeves were pinned back to her shoulders. She was cutting a pumpkin into strips for pies; and there sat a venerable gentleman gravely paring the strips to the accompaniment of brilliant conversation. I was asked to guess who the gentleman was, and, after several fruitless attempts, was told that it was the poet Longfellow. While the pumpkin-paring was a success, another distinguished poet called, and he also insisted upon being impressed into the service. It was a dreary day outside, and no one cared to leave the pleasant cottage, so they all stayed to lunch, one of the pies forming the piece de resistance of the occasion. Speaking of this incident afterward the lady said: "My friends are kind enough to come and see me, though they know I cannot leave my work to entertain them. Visiting and work must proceed together, and when I set my callers at work with me we are sure to have an agreeable time."—Lippincott.

The Sponge Trade.

A correspondent of the Providence Press, writing from Nassau, Bahamas, says: A very interesting feature of business life here is the trade in sponges. Every day, except Saturday, the dock at the foot of Parliament street, which is the recognized mart for this branch of traffic, is thronged with gentleman buyers of this product of the sea. The dock, which is some three hundred feet long by thirty feet wide, is covered with sponges, put up in strings and arranged in lots, which are numbered and marked. Mr. Higgs, the clerk of the market, having seen that each lot is duly labeled with its proper tag, makes out as many schedules of the whole as there are buyers, and furnishes each one with a list. Upon this the gentleman, after a careful examination of the lots, makes his bids, and turns in the paper at the close of the market. The offers are then compared, and the highest bid takes the lot. The sale is absolute, upon 5 per cent. commission, and the amount of business done in this way is quite large during the entire season.

A Lunatic Pigeon.

A white fantail pigeon lived with his family in a pigeon house in our stable-yard. He and his wife had been brought originally from Sussex, and had lived respected and admired, to see their children of the third generation, when he suddenly became the victim of the infatuation I am not about to describe. No eccentricity whatever was remarked in his conduct until one day I chanced to pick up somewhere in the garden a ginger-beer bottle of the ordinary brown stone description. I flung it into the yard, where it fell immediately below the pigeon house. That instant down flew paterfamilias, and to my no small astonishment commenced a series of genuflections, evidently doing homage to the bottle. He strutted round and round it, bowing and scraping and cooing and performing the most ludicrous antics I ever beheld on the part of an enamored pigeon. Nor did he cease these performances until we removed the bottle. What proved that this singular aberration of instinct had become a fixed delusion was this: whenever the bottle was thrown or placed in the yard—no matter whether it lay horizontally or was placed upright—the same ridiculous scene was enacted; at that moment the pigeon came flying down with quite as great alacrity as when his peas were thrown out from his dinner, to continue his antics as long as the bottle remained there. Sometimes this would go on for hours, the other members of his family treating his movements with the most contemptuous indifference, and taking no notice whatever of the bottle. At last it became the regular amusement with which we entertained our visitors, to see this erratic pigeon making love to the interesting object of his affections, and it was an entertainment which never failed, throughout the summer at least. Before the next summer came around he was no more.—Letter to Nature.

Nettling a Witness.

The Troy Press says: Witnesses in court cases after having pestered almost to death by counsel on the other side are extremely apt to become obstinate in answering subsequent questions. Such action, although natural, is of poor judgment, for the inquisitive lawyer seeing that he has nettled the witness will redouble his exertions to completely confuse him, and thus benefit the case of the cross-examining disciples of Blackstone. In the Circuit Court, yesterday, a witness after having been expressibly wearied by the persistent interrogatories of eminent counsel, apparently made up his mind to become obstinate and possibly witty, so when asked the distance from one point to another by street blocks, he answered, "I never measured."

"How long would it take you to walk the distance?"

"I never counted."

"How long would it take you to ride the distance?"

"I never rode."

"Could you walk the distance in fifteen minutes?"

"Yes, if I wanted to."

Answers were given in this unsatisfactory manner until finally the information desired was obtained. But after that the witness was doubly persecuted, and upon leaving the stand his feelings must have been identical with those of the fellow who dreamed he stepped from hell into heaven in a second of time. Witnesses who adopt the obstinate-witty fashion must expect rough handling. They always get it.

Please Don't Fret.

There is one sin which seems to me is everywhere and by everybody underestimated, and quite too much overlooked in valuations of character. It is the sin of fretting. It is as common as air, as speech; so common that unless it rises above its usual monotone we do not even observe it. Watch an ordinary coming together of people, and see how many minutes it will be before somebody frets—that is, making a more or less complaining statement of something or other, which, most probably, every one in the room or the stage, or the street car, or the street corner, as it may be, knew before, and which, most probably, nobody can help. Why say anything about it? It is cold, it is wet, it is dry; somebody has broken an appointment, ill-cooked a meal; stupidity or bad faith somewhere has resulted in discomfort. There are always plenty of things to fret about. It is simply astonishing how much annoyance and discomfort may be found in the course of every day's living, even at the simplest, if one only keeps a sharp eye out on that side of things. But even to the sparks flying upward, in the blackest of smoke, there is a blue sky above, and the less time they waste on the road the sooner they will reach it. Fretting all time wasted on the road.—Helen Hunt.

Bright's Disease and Ice Water.

The idea has been advanced that Bright's disease is attributable to the immoderate use of ice water and cold drinks, the fact being cited that the people of this country use 90 per cent. more ice in drinks than the people of any other country—the inhabitants of Greenland not excepted—and that we have 75 per cent. more of Bright's disease. The wine-drinking countries of Europe are said to be comparatively free from the malady, while in America the progress of the disease, it is asserted, has kept pace with the increased consumption of ice.

Young Hayseed, a knowing young fellow from the country, was in town the other day and "put up" at one of the first-class hotels. After dinner he strolled out to the office, and, picking up a toothpick from the box on the office counter, used it vigorously on a set of tobacco-stained grinders, and then replaced it carefully in the box, saying as he did so, "Some fellers would put that air sliver in their pocket and kerry it away, but their ain't nothing mean about me, I kin tell you."—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

Man is like a musical instrument—he is worthless unless in tune. At times the system needs the strengthening effects of a tonic; the blood needs reinforcement, and the vital energies a stimulant. Iron in various forms has been in use for many years, and no better combination of it with other vitalizers than Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic is known in this country. It is a safe and reliable remedy in Dyspepsia, General Debility, Want of Vitality, and the usual disorders attendant upon a prostrated system.—Burlington (Iowa) Gazette.

"GARFIELD'S strike" is what the Ft. Wayne Sunday Mail calls it.

IT is now believed that all those engaged in the star-route swindles will be prosecuted; at least the postmaster-general has given the papers to understand that it will be done.

WHEN the senate last week confirmed a part of the president's nominations the latter withdrew all the other New York nominees except Robertson, thus showing a determination to bring on a conflict with Conkling at once, and decide who is to remain master of the situation.

THE republicans in the senate have stopped the ordinary business of the government for the sake of giving a small office to Gorham; and who is he? He is editor of the National Republican, a daily republican paper published at Washington, and owned by Brady. He apologizes for and defends Brady and all members of the star-route rings. He was one of the rascals who helped to steal the vote of the state of Florida for Hayes. It is men like these whom republicans delight to honor.

THE dead-lock in the senate was broken last Wednesday. That day the republican members consented for a time to drop the idea of giving office to Mahone's friend Riddleberger, and Brady's friend Gorham, and go into executive session so as to confirm or reject the more important nominations made by the president, and that had been waiting for some weeks. The confirmation or rejection of Stanley Matthews to a place on the supreme bench was an important matter, as the business of the court is already greatly behind. Action on the new Chinese treaty was also imperatively demanded.

THE republican members of the senate held a caucus Monday afternoon to see if some agreement could be reached by which the contested nominations could be left over till next winter. But as this would keep out many other candidates besides Robertson, it was decided to go on and see what could be done with him. Conkling made a strong speech against confirming Robertson, saying among other things, that Robertson had said in the Chicago convention that he would not support Arthur if he was nominated for vice-president. Conkling also complained that the president was invading the right of the senate by making nominations that were distasteful to senators. He claims that a senator should control all nominations made in his state. This is what is known as "senatorial courtesy."

SENATOR DAWES, of Massachusetts, in announcing that the republican senators would allow the dead-lock to be broken, and go into executive session, so as to confirm some of the nominations made by the president, remarked that, in doing so they did not give up the principle that the majority ought to rule. Of course every one can see there was nothing in this remark, unless it might be intended to mislead the thoughtless or ignorant. No one denies the right of the majority to rule. It is a thing that any majority is apt to do, especially a republican majority. But the fact is, the republicans have not a majority in the senate. If they had, they would long ago have made Gorham secretary of the senate and Riddleberger door-keeper. Every republican senator was willing to do this, but exactly the same number of democrats refused. Hence the dead-lock. Had there been a republican majority, there would have been no tie; or even if the vice-president could have used his casting vote, the tie would have been overcome. But as he could not do this, and as the senate proper contains exactly the same number of members of each party, it strikes the ordinary observer that Dawes' talk about the majority ruling is decidedly cheeky. The democrats have steadily and solidly voted to go into executive session, so as to confirm the nominations made by the president, in order that the public business can go on. But the republicans have as steadily refused, unless the democrats would first vote to confirm Gorham and Riddleberger as officers of the senate, as agreed upon in the republican bargain with Mahone, by which they secured his vote, and by which alone they were able even to obtain a tie vote of the senate. The democrats did not help to make the bargain with Mahone, and hence are not obliged to help pay him. The republicans kept up the dead-lock, because they wished to pay Mahone for his vote by putting his friend Riddleberger in as door-keeper, and the democrats kept them from doing this, and voted to go on with the public business, believing that two minor officers of the senate were of less value to the people than the other public business of the government, a great deal of which was at a standstill.

TO show how much the republican party, and even Garfield himself, are indebted to the star-route thieves, the following letter from Garfield, written by him last summer during the campaign, and addressed to the chairman of the republican congressional committee, is to the point:

"MENTOR, OHIO, August 23, 1880.

"MY DEAR HUBBELL: Yours of the 19th inst. received, and contents are noted. Please say to Brady that I hope he will give us all the assistance he can. I think he can help us effectively. Please tell me how the departments generally are doing.

"As ever, yours, J. A. Garfield.

"Hon. J. A. Hubbell, Washington, D. C."

It is now affirmed that the star-route contractors raised $25,000 for the purpose of carrying Indiana. This accounts in part for the abundance of money the party had to use during the last campaign. No wonder the punishment of these thieves has been so long delayed.

Neighborhood Nippings.

Michigan City now has a daily paper, the Daily Dispatch.

The board of equalization at Columbus, Ohio, have raised the assessment of property in Cincinnati, five per cent, making a difference of several millions in the list of taxable property in that city.

S. P. Conner, chairman of the republican committee of Newton county, writes a letter to the Indianapolis Journal exposing some of the means by which that party carried the state last fall. We will publish the letter next week. It will pay to read it.

Dr. S. B. Collins, the opium-cure man, and man of many wives married a lady in Elkhart last week. Collins is quite wealthy, and resides at Laporte, but he seems to look upon women as a sort of domestic almanac that should be changed about once a year.

Many of our exchanges are wondering when there can be an election of county officers if the constitutional amendments are in force. As those amendments require a registry law, and the legislature failed to make one, it is difficult to see just how the thing is to be done. The registry fever don't seem to be as strong as it used to be.

The officers of the Lake-Shore road, last week went east from Detroit over the Canada Southern, road in a special train drawn by one of the new "Fontaine" engines. The run from Amhersburg to St. Thomas, 101 miles, was made in ninety-eight minutes. The whole distance from Amhersburg to Victoria, 229 miles, was made in 235 minutes. This is probably the fastest time ever made by any train running such a distance.

The Plymouth Democrat feels jubilant over the recent democratic victory at their city election. There was a tie, however, on councilman in the Second ward, and a new election will be held. The Democrat further says: John W. Cleveland and Platt McDonald, both of whom have resided here about forty years, were disfranchised at the election last Tuesday by operation of the new constitutional amendment which requires thirty days residence in the ward or precinct, both having, within the last few days, moved across the street into another ward. But the amendment was in the interest of the "purity of the ballot-box," and, of course, they ought not to complain.

Forepaugh's Queen of Beauty.

We clip the following note from the Indianapolis Journal. Mr. Lacey, the photographer mentioned, is a son of Rev. H. J. Lacey, pastor of the M. E. church in Waterloo.

"Of the three thousand competitors for this title Mr. Forepaugh has awarded his $10,000 prize to Miss Louise Montague, who was playing an engagement in Indianapolis when she first saw the offer. She at once applied to Mr. Lacey, in the Vance block, who made the pictures in all the different views required, and forwarded them just in time to capture the $10,000 prize.

The fortunate lady, who is thus to wear the title of "Queen of Beauty" over a continent, is described as follows by the Philadelphia Record: 'Miss Montague represents no marked type. In complexion she is a semi brunette. Her lips are suggestive of cherry, teeth regular and pearly, and visible at every smile through a large but not disproportionate mouth; large, expressive brown eyes, a symmetrical nose, and an intelligent cast of countenance. This is her picture in repose. In conversation—and she is possessed of a large fund of sparkling talk—every feature is animated, and her flashing eyes and health-tinted cheeks, coupled with a vivacious manner, lend an additional charm to her demeanor. * * Her hair is worn in frizzes, commenced at the top of the head and falling in graceful waves low on her forehead.'

Her pictures attest the perfection of Mr. Lacey's work. Mastery of the art in every detail of pose, light and shadow, expression and tone, were all involved, and after came the crucial test, whether on presentation of the living subject, the pictures would prove true to life. To a representative of the Journal, Mr. Lacey explained that these pictures were made by his instantaneous dry-plate process, recently introduced here by him, the charm of which is, that it enables the artist to catch the expression in an instant, before it wearies or changes.

It will be remembered that Mr. Lacey's photograph of the eclipse in August, 1878, was the only one published in the Scientific American, out of many sent in by professional and amateur astronomers.

AT Hillsdale, Illinois, a crazy woman lately made the tour of the streets on foot, dressed in the costume of Lady Godiva.

SENATOR VOORHEES believes that the democratic members should vote to confirm Robertson and other nominations now pending, so that the public business can go on without further delay. Ex-Senator McDonald, however, advises to vote against confirming Robertson. Many of Conkling's friends in New York urge him to give up the fight.

A MAN living near Coldwater, Michigan, came to town a short time ago with some butter and eggs to sell. He stopped his team, got out of the wagon and dropped dead in the street. It is supposed his death resulted from a hurt on the back of the head some time before.

"WHY didn't Garfield hit Conkling with a piece of De Golyer pavement?" asks the Virginia (Nev.) Chronicle.

Very innocent man, old man Mildboy is. A friend found him at his desk the other day, absorbed in perplexing study. "I am writing my will," the old man said, "and I want to fix it so that the lawyers can get some of my property."

A minister, while marrying a couple recently, was rather disconcerted, on asking the bridegroom if he was willing to take the young lady for his wedded wife, by his scratching his head and saying: "Yes, I am willing, but I'd much rather have her sister."

Decoration Services.

Arrangements are being made for the observance of memorial day with appropriate ceremonies May 30. The programme will be complete and carried out to the letter, if the weather is favorable. The decoration company will consist of fifty young Misses and fifty young gents, all daughters and sons of soldiers. They will be assisted by soldiers and citizens. The invitation to participate in the exercises extends to the entire community. The programme will be published in due time.

Syracuse as a Pleasure Resort.

Our readers will see by to-day's COURIER, that the B. & O. road has made arrangements to sell round-trip tickets from this place to Syracuse during the season. This will make it convenient for the citizens of Auburn and vicinity to make a trip or two to this popular resort during the summer. The distance is not great, and no one who can afford it, should miss the opportunity now given to see these beautiful lakes. It is without doubt the largest natural lake, and if we except English lake, the largest in the state. The main lake is about nine miles long, and the smaller one about two miles. Its waters contain abundance of fish that are caught in large quantities. Ducks are plentiful, and in their season furnish excellent sport for hunters. A large and well-arranged steamboat is on the lake, and will make trips around it or to any point along the shore, or may be chartered by the day if parties so desire The village of Syracuse is well supplied with hotels, at which all who wish may obtain good accommodations at fair rates. Teams can be had for drives around the lakes or into the country. On the north side of the main lake, at Cedar Beach, parties from Wabash, Huntington, Indianapolis and other places have erected a large club house for the especial accommodation of those who are members of the company owning it. Other visitors may also be accommodated there at times. Boats and competent guides may be had at all times to assist amateurs in their search for game and recreation.

The B. & O. has made a station at Cedar Beach, three miles east, and near the main lake, at which trains will stop to take on or let off passengers. It is also hoped that at no distant day, a draw-bridge will be made in the railroad bridge over the outlet of the large lake, so the steamboat can run the length of both lakes, and entirely up to the town and depot. A small wharf or landing could be made within ten rods of the Syracuse depot, making it convenient for visitors to get off the cars and walk to the boat, and bringing them thus conveniently near the depot on their return. A small expense would add this convenience, and help to make the resort popular by taking away much of the fatigue and expense that accompanies so many pleasure excursions. The trip around the main lake is now nearly twenty miles long, and the addition of the other lake to the trip, will make it the most extensive in the state. The scenery is fine, and at many places the finest in this part of the state. We believe that with good management, Syracuse will soon be the leading pleasure resort of northern Indiana. The Baltimore & Ohio railroad will make a great mistake if it does not do all in its power to assist and encourage the establishment of a first-class summer resort on its line.

DIED.—Johannette Bacheller, mother of our townsman Henry Bacheller, died at her home in Fort Wayne last Saturday. Deceased was 75 years old.

—Miss Lizzie Williams, of Falls City, Pennsylvania, is visiting her sister, Mrs. L. Johnson, wife of the agent for the W. St. L. & P. railroad at this place.

—Bob. Matheny and his "big" brother caught the largest string of black bass the other day that we ever saw pulled from the waters of Cedar Creek. One of them weighed seven pounds.

—Dr. Wm. Ryan has gone to Fort Wayne to take lessons in the erection of truss bridges. The boys say he purchased a return ticket, and if this be true, he will be back within thirty days —And now the button-hole bouquet squads stroll with their girls three a breast and let our livery enterprises lie idle. The average humble citizen has to "ditch" himself in order to pass them.

—Sherm. Hollister is a man who takes "time by the top-not." He has purchased a new hand-cart, "all painted red," and upon each side of it has inscribed in plain letters, "Take me home."

—T. P. Scott, marshal, gives notice that all hogs found running at large after Monday, May 16, will be taken up and put in the pound. Those owning porkers should govern themselves accordingly.

—The young ladies of Cedar Creek Chapel and vicinity will give a lawn social at the residence of W. I. Work next Saturday afternoon and evening. Supper will be served at six and nine o'clock. All are cordially invited.

—Now the sturdy tiller of the soil is greatly interested in preparing his ground for future crops, but is daily annoyed with the "elegant" chin music of the implement man, the fruit tree vender, etc. "Let there be peas," gentlemen.

—Eliza Shaffer, Geo. Staley and Charley Jackson went to Angola, last Saturday, to attend a dance. They didn't return until Monday, but we do not know whether they danced all day Sunday or not.

—Pete Brandon will not have to put a collar on his dog. A passenger train on the Saginaw road "collared" him and sent him to a land where legislatures have something else to do besides discussing the rights of the canine portion of the populace.

—Hardman Porter is not working for Husselman & Veley now. He hired out to them, came and staid all night, got supper and breakfast, hitched up in the morning and drove the team to the mill. He then went to settle with a "nigger," and they haven't seen him since.

—Jake Nye, of Sudan, the fellow who drives a pair of steeds that traced their ancestry back to Balaam's "hoss," was in town Saturday. Jake is erecting a new blacksmith shop, and will make the hum of the hammer ring loud in the ears of the Sedanites.

—Chris. Baker was cut out for an auctioneer as well as a landlord. He sold a barrel of fish Saturday that were lying in the B. & O. express office not called for, in about fifteen seconds. If there is any one who wishes to be sold out, let them walk under Chris'. hammer.

—We are informed by Surveyor Foltz, that one of Hensinger's boys, in Butler township, killed a blue racer snake that measured six feet in length. This snake story is perfectly reliable and not exaggerated the least bit. If a surveyor can't give the correct length of a snake, who can?

—The hook-and-ladder boys have been practising for several weeks on the back streets, and have become pretty well drilled in running and performing upon the ladders. Saturday evening they exhibited their skill on the corner of Main and Seventh streets to the satisfaction of a number of people.

—Joe Albright, Sherm. Hollister, Ralph Cobb and Charlie Pommert took the morning freight on the Wabash for Churubusco Tuesday. They're goin' a fishin'. Each one had a peck basket full of bait, and we may look forward for a decline in the market in this line of meat. Charlie will string 'em as fast as the other boys can haul them out.

—A rich man's son lives on his pap, while a poor man's son takes Dr. Marshall's Bromoline for his blood and liver, and earns his bread by the sweat of his brow. Big bottles, fifty cents.

—The farm residence of Ben. McQuiston, four miles north of town, was entered by burglars Thursday morning, who stole a watch and chain and other articles. Chase was given, but when brought to bay, the fellows pulled their revolvers and put an end to the race. The authorities were not notified in time to be of any assistance.—[Fort Wayne Sunday Mail.

The above gentleman is the father of W. H. McQuiston, of this place.

—In the course of time, Samuel Puffenberger will loose his situation at the Eighth street bakery. It will not be because Sam. is not a good, industrious, accommodating fellow, not at all, but on account of a little Baker boy who came to that household the other evening, who will, in a few years from now, run that dough shop on his own hook.

—Mr. Henry Martin, our clever tree man whom the naughty boys call "Gee Line," met with a sad misfortune and a heavy loss this week. About three miles east of town, his celebrated dun horse became tired and weary under the intense heat of old Sol, and Henry, taking pity on the beast, unhooked him from the vehicle and led him to a farm house near by. Here he was furnished with ten ears of corn and a bundle of hay; but the animal refused to eat. Corn is hard this time of the year, and consequently not much blade can be attached to the horse. Hen-er-i hired another team and had his trees brought to town. After he had planted them, he and Cyrus—that's his boy—returned to see if the horse had eaten the corn. But, alas! he had crossed the river, and his owner returned, a sad and sorrowful man.

Notice to Decorating Company.

All sons and daughters of soldiers, between the ages of 8 and 12 years, will meet in Soldiers hall on Saturday next at 4 o'clock in the afternoon to organize for decorating soldiers' graves in Auburn cemetery, May 30. A full attendance is desired, but if sickness prevents any from being present they will please send in their names.

COMMITTEE.

A CARD.

EDITORS COURIER:—Please give me space in your paper to return my sincerest thanks to the members of the sabbath-school at Fairfield Center for the recent expressions of their good will in the gift of a large and beautiful volume of "Holman's Quarto Edition of the Holy Bible." The book of itself should be valued very highly received from whatsoever source, but when received with the affections of those dear friends clinging to it, it is a treasure of inestimable value, and shall ever receive the fondest recollections.

A. W. ASH.

In Memoriam.

The following lines were written by a lady of this place on the occasion of the recent death of Mr. Kuhlman's little daughter, and are expressive of the grief of the bereaved parents:

Little Neva, how we loved her!
Precious little one was she;
Beauty on her brow was beaming
With a glow of ecstasy.

But she has forever left us,
She, our darling little pet;
Gone where sorrow ne'er will meet her,
And with tears her cheeks lie wet.

Could we see her this sad moment
With her dolly in her arms,
Whispering: "Dolly how I love you,
For they say that you are mine."

But we could not keep our darling;
She has climbed the golden stair,
Calling: "Come, now, papa, mamma,
I hear sweet music everywhere.

FIRE.

We are sorry to say to our readers that on last Thursday evening about five o'clock our old friend Henry Becher, near Corunna, had the misfortune to lose his dwelling house by fire, with nearly its entire contents. His old house also burned and the smoke house, with his supply of meat. There were two hound dogs tied in the old house and perished in the flames. In the cellar Uncle Henry had a large amount of maple syrup and a great many good things to eat, nearly all of which were burned. They succeeded in getting out a bureau full of clothing and supposed it was far enough away to be safe, but behold in a short time it took fire and was burned, the heat being so intense that they could not be removed. The loss is indeed a severe one to Mr. Becher, but we will bet a pint of fish hooks that he bears it like a philosopher and will proceed at once to build a nice new house! We understand that he had a small insurance. His barn caught fire a great many times but was saved.

School Report.

The following are the names of pupils neither absent nor tardy, in district number 6, Jackson township, for the month ending May 6: Minnie Johnson, Nettie Berry, Easter Cobbler, Henry Cobbler, Myrtle Johnson, Sylvester Johnson, George Johnson, Lewis Johnson, Joseph Furgeson, Charley Gilford, Cornman Gilford Mary Shearer, Ada Shearer, Bitha Baughman, Ollie Tarney, Alice Bishop, Jennie Furgeson, Clara Means, Tommy Morr. THE WEST.

The situation at Kansas City, on the 30th ult., was terrible. The Missouri river continued to rise at an alarming rate, and all the elevators and great packing houses were surrounded by water. Of the ten railroads running into the city but three were able to send out trains over their own tracks, the Chicago and Alton alone running their Eastern trains direct from the Union depot. Fully 7,000 people were homeless, and many of them had lost everything they possessed in the world. Box-cars, railway depots, tents and everything that could be used for shelter were being pressed into service, yet thousands were compelled to sleep in the open air and depend upon charity for food. Many of the houses had been moved to railway tracks, but several had gone down stream, and more were expected to follow. The Hannibal railway bridge, which cost $1,500,000, was in a perilous situation.

A horrible tragedy is reported from St. Paul, Howard county, Neb. Mrs. Koch, the wife of Christian Koch, a railroad night watchman, while laboring under a fit of temporary insanity, killed her three children by cutting their throats with a razor, and then cut her own throat. One boy was 4 years old, the second boy was 2 years and the third child a girl aged 6 months.

At Normal, Ill., a 5-year-old child of Mr. Bliss fell seventy feet into a well. The father got a rope and went down, where he found the little one almost uninjured in five feet of water.

Billy, the Kid, a noted outlaw of New Mexico, who had been sentenced to death for three murders, escaped from jail at Lincoln by shooting dead Sheriff Bell and Marshal Olinger....Jacob Annack, who erected the first brick bank building in Cincinnati, and assisted John J. Audubon in gathering ornithological specimens, is dead....The woodenware works, mill and lumber-yards owned by Milton Frost, in Detroit, were destroyed by fire, the loss being estimated at $60,000 to $75,000; partially insured. The fire extended to the tannery of the Croul Bros., which was consumed, with a loss of $75,000, upon which there is no insurance.

The reason given by some of the movers is the adoption of the prohibitory amendment.... Boston capitalists have leased the farm of N. K. Maxwell, near Fond du Lac, Wis., where gold quartz has cropped out, and have a stamp-mill on the way westward....A most remarkable and daring jail escape is reported from Lincoln county, New Mexico. Billy Bonney, alias "Billy the Kid," one of the most determined scoundrels known in the criminal annals of America, was confined in the Lincoln county jail. Last Saturday, while one of the two guards of the jail were absent, he attacked and killed the other, and, the second being called to the spot by the report of a pistol shot, he killed him also. His hands were shackled all the time. After he had finished the second guard, he managed to strike off his shackles with a hatchet; made a man in the jail-yard saddle a horse for him, and, arming himself with a rifle and four revolvers, rode away. Afterward he murdered William Mathews, who once shot him in the thigh, and who gave evidence against him in a recent trial. He also murdered another party with whom he fell in. He threatened to murder Gov. Wallace, Sheriff Garrett and a number of other persons, and says that he will not again be taken alive.

A marked change in the channel of the Mississippi has occurred in the vicinity of Chester, Ill., where the great river has crossed through the bottom lands to the Okaw, a distance of twelve miles. St. Mary's, Mo., has thereby been transformed into an inland town.

THE SOUTH.

At the Belle Meade sale of thoroughbreds, at Gen. G. W. Harding's farm, near Nashville, Tenn., the yearling brother of Luke Blackburn brought $7,900, and four sons of Great Tom brought sums ranging from $1,000 to $2,600.

A desperate conflict occurred among a congregation of negroes at a colored church in the Choctaw nation, in which pistols and knives were freely used, and several persons badly if not fatally injured. The colored minister while in the midst of his discourse was fired upon by parties in the house, after which a general fight ensued.... In the case of Payne, the Oklahoma raider, the United States Court at Fort Smith decided, after reviewing various treaties and acts of Congress, that the lands in question are not subject to pre-emption or homestead entry. Many representative Indians were present at the trial.

On the Texas Pacific road, near Dallas, Texas, a freight train went through a bridge, causing the death of the engineer and fireman, and the wounding of the conductor and a brakeman. Another accident, at Katula, resulted in the killing of the engineer, a brakeman, and a contractor named Anderson, of Dallas.

A Washington telegram states that "there are indications of jealousies in army circles. It is alleged by high officers that Secretary Lincoln is running things too much his own way for a green hand. It is not believed that all is pleasant between Gen. Sherman and Secretary Lincoln. On an average Gen. Sherman gets along well with only about half the War Secretaries who come into power from time to time."

GENERAL.

John Gothard, who killed a farmer named Joseph Woods, was hanged at Towsontown, Md., the widow of the murdered man witnessing the scene on the scaffold. Royal S. Carr, who took the life of a half-breed tramp, was executed at Windsor, Vt. For the murder of another colored man, Marshall Baxter was hanged in the jail-yard at Charlotte, N. C.

The twelfth annual convention of the American Labor Reform League has just been held in New York. Resolutions were adopted antagonistic to all existing systems of government, justifying the murder of the Czar of Russia, asserting the belligerent rights of labor in self-defense against capital, and much more in a similar strain....The quarterly report of the Bureau of Statistics shows that 593,703 immigrants came to this country in 1880.

Washington telegrams state that "the letter which the star-route ring threatens to publish unless the investigation be stopped is addressed to Jay Hubbell, who was Chairman of the Republican Congressional Committee. It is said to have been written in reply to one from Hubbell stating that Gen. Brady would not assess the star-route contractors without Gen. Garfield's consent. Gen. Garfield wrote back that he hoped Brady would do all in his power to facilitate the raising of funds necessary to meet the expenses of the campaign."

Prof. Chandler reports to the New York Board of Health that oleomargarine is superior in all respects to the poorer grades of dairy butter; that there is nothing objectionable in its material or manufacture, and there is no need of legislation to protect public health....Thomas, the defaulting cashier of the Panama Canal Company, who was reported to have fled with a large amount of the company's funds, was found at Arica, Peru, in a half-insane condition, and allowed to go free on restoring 15,000 francs.

The gross earnings of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railroad, as shown by the annual report for the year ending Dec. 31, 1880, were $18,749,460.

The new Fountain engine took the Vanderbilt party over the Canada Southern road, a distance of 229 miles, in 233 minutes, excluding stops. She consumed less than three tons of coal....The gross revenue of the Michigan Central railroad for the past year was $9,085,748; the net income, $1,505,404.

POLITICAL.

A Washington dispatch states that "the Virginia situation was discussed in all its bearings at a Cabinet meeting, and, although there was some difference of opinion on the subject, it was virtually decided to encourage the Mahone movement by a liberal distribution of patronage. At the same time, the Republicans who have heretofore stood the brunt of the battle in the South will receive a proportionate share of the offices."

Washington dispatches state that "Senator Conkling does not ask to have Judge Robertson's nomination postponed. He is willing to have the issues tried now. A Senatorial caucus committee informed President Garfield that Senator Conkling had given them to understand that he cared nothing personally for the continuance of the deadlock, but had promoted it in deference to his New York constituents, who believed that the delay would result in the withdrawal of Robertson's nomination. The President said emphatically that he would not withdraw it."....Hon. Washington McLean, of Cincinnati, declares that he would decline the nomination for Governor of Ohio....Senator Sherman is opposing the confirmation of the nomination of Sheldon as Governor of New Mexico.

Senator Dawes, as Chairman of the Republican Caucus Committee, lately received a brief note from the President in reference to the deadlock. In the letter the President stated that he was very desirous that there should be a free ballot and a fair count not only in Virginia, but in every Republican State, but that he would do nothing to assist the editor of a paper which constantly and maliciously assailed his administration to get office under the Republican party. The editor referred to is George C. Gorham, of the Washington Republican, and candidate for Secretary of the Senate.

A Washington dispatch says "it is now the belief there that, whatever may be the result of the deadlock in the Senate, neither Riddleberger nor Gorham will be elected to the places for which they have been nominated. The Democrats will not allow the election of the former, and the latter has antagonized many Republican Senators by his attacks on the administration through the columns of the National Republican."

Grubbs, Republican, has been elected Mayor of Indianapolis by 515 majority. The Lafayette municipal election resulted in the success of McGinley, Democratic candidate for Mayor. The new Mayor-elect of Hannibal, Mo., is a Democrat. The Council is Republican.

FOREIGN.

An attempt to evict some tenants at New Pallas, Ireland, failed utterly. There were 500 soldiers and police present, but a mob of 5,000 assembled and stoned the Sheriff and his assistants. The police charged upon the mob several times, but the bailiff's life being threatened he refused to point out the houses of the delinquent tenants. About 200 of the mob were armed with revolvers.... The superstition of the Russian peasantry at Elizabethgrad caused them to destroy a synagogue, and in the riot which ensued the troops shot down many persons....The anti-Jewish agitation in Prussia prompted a mob at Argenau, led by a school-teacher, to wreck the houses of some Hebrews and maltreat the inmates....A diplomat at St. Petersburg expresses the belief that the Czar and his counselors will institute repressive measures almost startling in their rigor.

A band of disguised men at Galway seized a bailiff named King and roasted him over a fire until he swore he would resign his office. Injuries were inflicted from which he can hardly recover....The French Chamber of Deputies adopted a motion of confidence in the Government by a vote of 272 to 1, 146 members not voting....Peace has been concluded between the Cape Government and the Basutos....War between Japan and China is considered imminent....Small-pox prevails to an alarming degree in London.

John Dillon, Irish member of Parliament, was arrested on the 3d inst. and incarcerated in jail at Dublin. The news of the arrest caused great excitement throughout Ireland....Lord Lonsdale has purchased a steamer of 1,000 tons, and proposes to go in search of the North pole....A number of Jewish families have fled from Argenau, West Prussia, on account of fresh outrages, but the authorities are determined to preserve order. Two hundred persons were injured in the riots at Elizabethgrad, Russia, and the streets are patrolled by troops....A boot-maker named Vigel, in Vienna, Austria, killed his wife and four children and made mincemeat of their bodies....Edwin Booth's first appearance at the Lyceum Theater, London, as Othello, was an immense success.

A committee of the International Monetary Conference, in session at Paris, adopted two lists of questions to be submitted as a basis for discussion. Great cordiality prevails among the delegates....It is announced by cable from Cairo, Egypt, that "Maspero has just opened some more pyramids of Sakkara, inclosing the tombs of the Kings of the Fifth dynasty. The mortuary chapels of each contain about eighty square metres of the smallest and most closely-written texts, giving precise details of the religious belief of that age. It is a complete coup de grace to the Osiris Masonic theory, and all previous conceptions are entirely upset. Except the finding of the Rosetta stone, in 1799, no discovery in Egypt equals this in scientific value."....The British war sloop Doterel was blown up last week in the Straits of Magellan, and, out of 156 on board, all but eleven perished.... The Porte has notified the Ambassadors of the powers that Turkey accepts without reserve the proposed solution of the Greek frontier question.....Advices from St. Petersburg intimate that the atmosphere is thick with omens of another approaching storm.

The committee appointed to arrange a programme for the Monetary Conference at Paris, agreed upon that drafted by Vrolik, the Dutch delegate. It consists of five questions relative to the cause and effect of diminution and oscillation in the value of silver; the effect of unlimited coinage of both gold and silver upon their stability; measures to reduce the minimum of oscillations in the ratio of value between the two metals; and, finally, as to what that ratio should be..... Further information regarding the catastrophe to the British war-sloop, Doterel, is to the effect that eight officers and 135 men were killed, and three officers and fourteen men saved.

There is a land agitation among the peasants in the Baltic provinces of Russia. They desire to own, instead of lease, their farms, and refuse to swear allegiance to the Czar until he shall have granted them laws and land rights equal to those possessed by the Russian people....A Land League manifesto has appeared in London, signed by Justin McCarthy, urging Irishmen to evict their landlords as they themselves have been evicted, and to wreak vengeance at the polls on apostates from Liberalism....The conditions on which the Nihilists are willing to cease their agitation were communicated to the Czar by a delegate of the revolutionary committee. The Czar listened to all he had to say, and then caused his arrest. ....The Grand Jury at London indicted Herr Most, editor of the Freiheit, for inciting assassination.

At the second plenary sitting of the monetary conference in Paris the series of questions reported by the committee was adopted as the programme. The delegates for Germany, Austria, England, India, Canada, Greece, Portugal, Sweden and Switzerland explained the views of their respective Governments. The speech of the German delegate was ordered printed and distributed among the members of the conference, as it contained statements of the highest importance.... The preliminary inquiry into the death of the late Sultan Abdul Aziz has been concluded, and twenty persons stand committed for trial for complicity in the murder.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

Mr. Farley, of California, spoke for some time, on the opening of the Senate on Monday, May 2, called attention to the large number of nominations awaiting action, and moved to go into executive session. The people of his State, of all political parties, were appealing to the Senate to consider important matters in which they were directly interested. Petitions were daily coming from California asking for consideration of the Chinese treaty. A debate ensued between Messrs. Dawes and Farley, the Chinese question receiving considerable attention. Afterward a few remarks were made by Messrs. Beck and Saulsbury, and the Senate adjourned. The Republican Caucus Committee, consisting of seven Senators, met and agreed on a report. They recommend that executive sessions be held immediately to transact business in the following order: First, to refer to the appropriate committees all nominations now on the table; second, to take action on the various treaties awaiting ratification; third, to consider all uncontested nominations, that is, such as are not objected to by any Republican Senator from the State to which the appointment belongs. When this programme is completed the contested nominations may be considered.

In the Senate, Mr. Davis, of West Virginia, made the first speech of the day on Tuesday, May 3, defending his State upon the debt question, and was followed by several other Senators upon the same subject. The Republicans were willing to adjourn early for the purpose of caucusing on the holding of executive sessions.

In accordance with the decision of the Republican caucus, Mr. Dawes moved that the Senate go into executive session, on Wednesday, May 4, the motion being unanimously adopted. The following appointments were then unanimously confirmed: Robert Hitt, of Chicago, for Assistant Secretary of State; ex-Congressman Hiram Price, of Iowa, for Commissioner of Indian Affairs; A. M. Jones for United States Marshal of the Northern (Chicago) district of Illinois; Sanford A. Hudson, of Wisconsin, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Dakota; Joseph G. James as Postmaster at Terre Haute, Ind.; W. H. Craig for Postmaster at Albany, N. Y. The other nominations were referred to the appropriate committees, and the Senate then began the consideration of the Chinese treaties. Senator Hoar opposed the ratification of the treaty on the ground that it is opposed to the genius of our institutions and to the general doctrine of the "brotherhood of man." Senators Miller and Farley and the other Pacific coast Senators strongly urge the ratification of the treaty on the ground that it gives the United States Government full control over the immigration of the Celestials. The President nominated Elliot C. Jewett, of Missouri, to be Assayer in charge of the Assay Office at St. Louis.

The Senate in executive session did a remarkably good day's work, on Thursday, the 5th inst. Both Chinese treaties were ratified by all but unanimous votes; also, an extradition treaty with the United States of Colombia, and treaties with Italy, Morocco and Japan. The Senate also confirmed eighty-four nominations, of which the following are the most important: William Walter Phelps, New Jersey, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Austria; Cortis Fessenden, of Rome, Mich., United States Surveyor General for Dakota; Richard W. Montgomery, Receiver of Public Moneys for Bloomington, Neb.; Gideon M. Strouson, Postmaster for Menasha, Wis.; Lionel A. Sheldon, of Ohio, Governor of New Mexico Territory; Edward S. Meyer, United States Attorney for the Northern district of Ohio; Henry Fink, United States Marshal for the Eastern district of Wisconsin; Thomas Wilson, of the District of Columbia, Consul at Ghent; John F. Jenne, of New Jersey, Consul at Nuevo Laredo; E. C. Jewett, United States Assayer at St. Louis. Surveyors of Customs—Joseph L. Gaston, of Chattanooga; John R. Leonard, of Indianapolis, Ind. Collector of Internal Revenue—Marcus Boggs, Eleventh district of Ohio. Registers of Land Offices—William Letcher, at Mitchell, Dakota; John P. Owens, at Taylor's Falls, Minn.; Charles B. Tyler, at Tracy, Minn.; Thomas H. Cavanaugh, at Oberlin, Kan.; Christopher H. Smith, Worthington, Minn. Receivers of Public Moneys—John Lind, at Tracy, Minn.; Charles E. Chandler, at Oberlin, Kan. A message was received from the President withdrawing the following names, who are regarded as friends of Senator Conkling: Stewart L. Woodford, United States Attorney for the Southern district; Asa W. Tenney, United States Attorney for the Eastern district; Lewis F. Payne, United States Marshal for the Southern district; Clinton D. McDougall, United States Marshal for the Northern district; John Tyler, Collector of Customs for the District of Buffalo. President Garfield nominated George P. Pomeroy, of New Jersey, Secretary of the United States Legation at Paris; Mrs. Julia P. Woolfork, Postmistress of Jackson, Tenn.; William R. Durfee, Agent of Indians, La Pointe Agency, Wis.; Malachi Krebs, Indiana, Receiver of Public Moneys, Boise City, Idaho.

The Uses of Mesmerism.

Mesmerism is being revived at the east, and is being brought to wonderful perfection as a science. Dr. Hammond, in a recent lecture and exhibition, put some old men and women under the influence and caused them to play a game of marbles, and they quarreled and jawed and told each other to "knuckle down" and "take to taw," just as the urchins do. He stated that the power of mesmerizing a person did not reside in the person mesmerized, but in the mesmerizer, and consisted simply in the exercise of a strong and magnetic will. Persons under the influence do not have the least responsibility for their actions, and the doctor states that if he were to tell the most timid girl to go and stick a knife into the heart of any person, she would do so at once. If that is the case it would seem as though a field was opened for the industrious Nihilists of all countries that is simply boundless in its possibilities. All that is necessary is for a Nihilist of strong and magnetic will power to mesmerize some poor devil, put a knife or pistol in his hand when the Czar or other person is to pass by or appear in public, and when the opportune moment arrives tell him to "sick 'em," and the thing is a bird! The Nihilist, of course, stands back in the crowd and watches the effect of his shot, so to speak, and if successful he can help turn in and arrest the base assassin and show his loyalty to the person who has been butchered to make a Roman holiday. It is a great scheme, and one that will doubtless come into general use where reform is necessary. But it would seem that the future usefulness of mesmerism will be largely in the direction of collecting bad debts; and we have no doubt that in a few years merchants and others, instead of placing their accounts in the hands of a lawyer, and submitting to a long delay and considerable expense, will take them to a mesmerist. The mesmerist will call on the debtor, present the bill and ask him if it isn't about time he straightened that matter up. The debtor will say that the cashier is away, that the auditor has been sick, and that he has been unable to get the committee together, and he will tell the mesmerist to come in about the 15th. But before he knows what is coming the mesmerist will get the clamps on him, he will go down into his pocket, or go out and borrow the money, and when the influence is thrown off, and he awakes to a realizing sense of what he has done, he will find a receipted bill in his hand and the collector will be far away o'er the billow. It will be impossible, almost, for the man to prove that he was mesmerized, and probably he would not case to do so if he could. He would have to show that he did not intend to pay the debt, that it was something he never had done, and was a rule in his business from which he never deviated, unless he was mesmerized or temporarily insane. There are men, of course, who would have no trouble in proving this, but there is nothing so uncertain as the verdict of a jury, and after it had been fully established they might not give the man a verdict. Mesmerism could also be utilized in the arts. A boy could be mesmerized and set to work setting type, or hoeing in the garden, and a dozen of his companions might come along with fish poles and cans of bait, and urge him to come along. He would not budge; he would not go without his father's word. It would be an improvement on the only other way ever discovered of keeping a boy at work during the fishing season, and is far more humane than sharpening a fence post and spiking him down to the ground. In cases where the course of true love did not run smooth, and the old folks were down on the young man so that his life was a burden, and the girl's too, mesmerism would be invaluable. If he was a young man of a strong magnetic mind, as he should be, he could get the focus on the old people and put them under bonds to keep the peace, and he needn't ever let up on them until the girl was his. Then he could give them occasional glimpses of reason—not too much, as it might result fatally to them, or him, when they realized what they had consented to—but bring them around by easy stages. We are convinced that when mesmerism is properly understood and appreciated, it will be regarded as a boon by the human race, and fully of as much importance as steam and electricity.—Peck's Sun.

You will not be troubled with carpet moths, if you scrub your floors with hot brine before tacking the carpet down, and once a week scrub your carpets with coarse salt.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

Water standing for a night in a close or crowded room absorbs the impure air, and becomes very unwholesome and positively injurious to health. Be careful not to use water which has stood in a lead pipe.

The following is said to be a cure for hoarseness: A piece of flannel, dipped in brandy and applied to the chest, and covered with dry flannel, is to be worn at night. Four or six small onions boiled and put on buttered toast and eaten for supper are likewise good for cold in the chest.

Diet for a Consumptive.—The diet of a consumptive, says a writer in an English medical paper, should be simple and nutritious. Very strict rules as to special articles are uncalled for, unless the stomach should have exhibited signs of imperfect power. Meat should be taken once or twice a day, with a good allowance of fat. Fish is nutritious, especially oysters. Milk is very nourishing, and two or three pints may be taken in the course of the day.

Take Seasonable Rest.—Dr. Hall says the best medicine in the world, more efficient than all the potions of the materia medica, are warmth, rest, cleanliness and pure air. Some persons make it a virtue to brave disease, to "keep up" as long as they can move a foot or wiggle a finger, and it sometimes succeeds, but in others the powers of life are thereby so completely exhausted that the system has lost all ability to recuperate, and slow and typhoid fever sets in and carries the patient to a premature grave. Whenever walking or work is an effort, a warm bed and cool room are the very first indispensables to a sure and speedy recovery. Instinct leads all beasts and birds to quietude and rest the very moment disease or wounds assail the system.

Tobacco Medicine.—It may be possible, writes Dr. J. H. Hansford, that there are a few persons who, after no little effort, almost convince themselves that tobacco—yes, that vilest of weeds—is really useful in some mysterious way in the removal of some forms of disease. And yet I never have known an instance in which the cure was effected, nor do I believe that a cure of any disease was ever effected by this so-called medicine. It is unlike other medicines—though it may be useful in killing vermin on calves, etc., if used with great care that the poison may not come in contact with the skin—since it takes a life-time to effect the cure, the victims never ceasing its use, for, as they assure us, the disease immediately returns if the medicine is discontinued for a single day. This fact is evidence that no cure is really effected—simply a substitute for a palliative. Indeed, it is quite certain that but few of these victims of an imaginary disease, it may be, would be willing to be cured in any sensible way, so servile is the power of this magic weed. It is rare that we find the same, or any, patients willing to adopt the use of any other medicine with the condition that it must be taken till death with no real cure. Would such recommend the same medicine for the wife, the daughter, or even a valuable horse?

Suing for Pardon.

This story is often told, in and about Richmond, of an interview, said to have occurred after Lee's surrender, between Secretary Stanton and Major Drewry, commander of Drewry's Bluff at the time of the attack upon it by the Union fleet in May, 1862. The Major, who had been a dry-goods merchant in Richmond before the war, and who is a common-sense man of the world, knowing that all further resistance was vain, went at once to Washington to see the Secretary of War. Very doubtful whether Stanton, always stern and unusually overbearing, would see him, if he knew his name and mission, he went into the Secretary's private office unannounced. In his presence the ex-rebel, without any preamble, said: "Mr. Secretary, I am Major A. H. Drewry, of Richmond. I have fought against the Federals as well as I could for four years. But now the war is over, and I want to go to work again. I have hundreds of acres of wheat land on the James; they have been sadly neglected all this time, and they need my immediate attention. We've been whipped. I've got sense enough to know it. Now that peace has come, I want my pardon."

"On what grounds?" inquired Stanton, severely.

"First, on the grounds of having had fighting enough; secondly, because I have helped to improve your navy by showing you how poor wooden ships are in action. After I had driven off the Galena, Aroostook, and the other vessels, you began to build iron boats and made your navy what it ought to have been at the start. You owe me a pardon for the valuable information I furnished to your cause."

Stanton relaxed as the Major went on, and finally, pleased with his candor and boldness, invited him to call the next day at a certain hour. Drewry was prompt. The two had a long talk, the Secretary gaining much needed information about the South, its condition, and prospects, and handed the Virginian his pardon.

The Major kept his word. He went to work immediately, and has continued to work ever since, without troubling himself about politics or political theories. If more of the Southerners had imitated his example the South would be in a far better condition than it is today. He was, we believe, much blamed in Richmond for what was called his precipitance in suing for Federal favor; but results have shown his wisdom, if not his patriotism.—New York Times.

A Fresh-Water Spring in the Atlantic.

Says the Savannah (Ga.) News: One of the most remarkable displays of nature may be seen on the Atlantic coast, eighteen miles south of St. Augustine. Off Matanzas inlet, and three miles from shore, a mammoth fresh-water spring gurgles up from the depths of the ocean with such force and volume as to attract the attention of all who come in its immediate vicinity. This fountain is large, bold and turbulent. It is noticeable to fishermen and other passing in small boats along near the shore. For many years this wonderful and mysterious freak of nature has been known to the people of St. Augustine and those living along the shore, and some of the superstitious ones have been taught to regard it with a kind of reverential awe, as holy [illegible] [illegible] effects of supernatural influences. When the waters of the ocean in the vicinity are otherwise calm and tranquil, the upheaving and troubled appearance of the water shows unmistakable evidences of internal commotion. An area of about half an acre shows this troubled appearance—something similar to the boiling of a washerwoman's kettle. Six or eight years ago Commodore Hitchcock, of the United States Coast Survey, was passing this place, and his attention was directed to the spring by the restless upheavals of the water, which threw his ship from her course as she entered the spring. His curiosity becoming excited by this circumstance, he set to work to examine its surroundings, and found six fathoms of water everywhere in the vicinity, while the spring itself was almost fathomless.

A Leadville Minister.

The following remarkable report of Protestant Episcopal life in Leadville was made by the Rev. T. J. Mackay, a missionary in charge of that church, on a recent Sabbath in one of the large churches of that denomination (Dr. Newton's), in Philadelphia. After stating that when he went to Leadville, he found, instead of a hamlet, a thriving town, with churches of every denomination, five banks, five daily newspapers, etc., he said:

"My first vestryman could drink more whisky than any man in the town. Shortly after I made my appearance in the town my parishioners invited me to a church sociable, and upon going I was astonished to see the worthy people waltzing and dancing in the most scandalous manner. To add to this there are two streets whose entire length were made up of low dance-houses. How was I to overcome such a gigantic evil? I secured a hall, had the floor waxed, and after engaging a band of music, I sent out invitations to all the young men of the place to come down and have a dance. I instructed my floor manager—who, by the way, made lots of money and skipped—not to allow any waltzing. The result was, after enjoying square dances until 11 o'clock, the participants quietly dispersed. Some few said: "Wait until the preacher goes, then we'll have a waltz," but I was too smart for them—I carried the key of the hall in my pocket, and did not leave until all had departed. Every other week I gave such a sociable, and the results are remarkably good. This character of mission would not do in Philadelphia or Boston, but it will do in Leadville. It may seem ungodly to practice such a course, but it is the only way to reach these people. When I first went out there the congregation used to applaud me when I was preaching, but I finally got them out of such an unholy habit. No matter who dies, the procession is headed by a brass band. When I buried Texas Jack, the partner of Buffalo Bill, the cortege was headed by a brass band of forty-two pieces. Leadville is also a great place for titles. Everybody has a title. Captain is pretty good but to command attention one must be a Colonel or a General. I am a sort of a General. I belong to five military companies, and in my capacity as a militiaman I watch over my congregation."

A Live Man.

A prominent citizen of Western Texas was in Galveston, and was introduced to Gilhooly. They got to talking about the frontier telegraph. Gilhooly said it was a great blessing to the people of the frontier, but the stranger shook his head, and said it had caused the arrest and imprisonment of his uncle.

"What did he do?"

"Nothing—only robbed a stage."

"Well, you know that is an isolated case."

"Yes, that's so; he has been isolated ever since."

"But, you know," observed Gilhooly, "that the Government allows private individuals to use the wire, and that is a great convenience to people on the frontier."

"That's where you are fooling yourself. I used a few hundred yards of the wire to make a wire fence of, and I have been subjected to all sorts of expense and inconvenience. You just go West, and try it, and you will change your mind about that telegraph company being any comfort to a live man."—Galveston News.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1881.

INDIANA NEWS.

THREE-FOURTHS of the bees in Southern Indiana were killed by the hard winter.

DR. HOMER IDDINGS has been appointed physician to the Northern penitentiary.

COLLECTOR CUMBACK has decided to remove the Collector's office to Lawrenceburg.

THE Evansville directory for the present year will have fifty-two pages over the previous year.

THE New Albany woolen-mill has secured a $200,000 contract for manufacturing army clothing.

THE entire depth of snow-fall in Warsaw since the 17th of October has been seventy-seven and one-half inches.

MRS. MARY E. BUNSON, of Muncie, has accepted the appointment as a member of the Board of Managers of the Female Reformatory.

THERE are now in the Evansville Orphan Asylum sixty-one children—thirty-six in the white and twenty-five in the colored department.

JUDGES FRAZER, Turple and Stotsenburg have been appointed by the Governor as Commissioners for the publication of the revised statutes.

A TROTTING stallion owned in Greensburg, and for which an offer of $6,000 was recently refused, was found poisoned with strychnine the other morning.

JOHN LAWLER, living near Muncie, took a fit, fell in a pool of water only a few inches deep and was drowned. He was found within fifteen minutes after leaving home.

THE Seventeenth Indiana Union State Sunday-School Convention will be held in Trinity M. E. Church, Evansville, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, May 31, June 1 and 2.

SOME Evansville children were given castor beans to plant, but ate them instead. Six of the children became very sick, and were only saved from death by prompt medical assistance.

PROF. JOHN COLLETT has been reappointed State Geologist. His term as Chief of the Bureau of Statistics has also expired, but he will continue to hold it until his successor is appointed.

JOHN GRIFFETH, Esq., of Seymour, is aged 91 years, and claims the honor of being the oldest Presbyterian in the United States. He writes a beautiful hand, reads without glasses, and walks without a cane.

AN uneven pane of glass in the residence of Dr. Stiers, of Selma, acted as a sunglass, and set fire to a stool a few feet away. If there had been no one at home a mysterious conflagration would probably have resulted.

THE codification of the School laws of Indiana having failed to pass the Senate, the School laws, as published in 1877, remain in full force and effect, with the single change that women are made "eligible to any office under the general or special School laws of this State."

MRS. GEORGE TALLS was found lying stark and stiff in her garden, a few miles east of Clinton. She was cleaning out the weeds and rubbish when her dress caught fire and she was literally burned to a crisp. As no one was near, her cries for help were not heard. She was about 70 years old.

COL. R. N. HUDSON, of Terre Haute, has claims upon real estate in Evansville, including streets once occupied by the Wabash and Erie canal. His claims have been confirmed in the litigation that has been in progress for some years, and he now seeks either to be paid for the property by the present occupants or to have the same relinquished to him.

AT Midway, Spencer county, Mrs. Larkin Gowen went too near an open grate, and her dress caught fire. She jumped upon the bed, where her infant lay, hoping to smother the flames with the blankets, but only succeeded in setting the bed on fire. She screamed for help, but when her husband rushed in both herself and the child were so badly burned that they died soon after.

GOV. PORTER has concluded that the condition of the law in relation to the State Bureau of Statistics, although obscure, is such that the department can be properly continued. He will not, however, make any appointment of Chief of the Bureau at present, as the appropriation for the Statistical Department is not available until next November.

JACOB TASH was born in Rowan county, N. C., in 1790, and came to Indiana in 1816. He died a few days since at Salem, aged 91 years. He left seven children surviving him, fifty-four grandchildren, 1,006 great-grandchildren and fourteen great-great-grandchildren. He leaves, as the offspring of his wives, 1,084 living descendants, and fifty-four that have deceased before him, making a total of 1,135.

The New Road Law.

The new Road law enacted by the Legislature provides for the election, in every township in the State, on the first Monday in April, 1882, and every two years thereafter, of a Superintendent of Roads, who shall have charge of the roads within his township, of all of which he shall have charge both for construction and repair. He shall also execute all orders of the Board of County Commissioners concerning the change, location and the vacation of any highway in his township, and shall have charge of all funds for road or bridge purposes. A road poll tax of $2 is to be assessed upon every able-bodied man between the ages of 21 and 50 years and the County Commissioners shall also levy a tax not exceeding 25 cents on the $100 on all property in the township subject to State taxation, except that property in incorporated towns shall be exempt from such tax. The Township Superintendent shall put all the roads in his territory in as good order as possible during the months of April, May and June of each year and make such ditching, draining and embankments, and build such bridges and culverts as shall seem to him prudent and best to construct a road not less that eighteen feet in width, and when material is at hand may cover nine feet of the same with gravel or any other substance which will make a hard surface, expending all the available means in his hands by the 15th of November of such year. He shall also cause all roads to be mowed at least twice a year in August and November. The work is divided into "extraordinary" which must be done during the months of April, May and June, and "ordinary" which must be done between April 1 and November 15, and when the citizens of any township contribute work or money to make any ditch, drain, embankment, or to gravel any such road, the Superintendent shall contribute an equal amount if he has the means at hand for this purpose. The Superintendent shall appoint at least one roadmaster in each township, and as many others as he may deem necessary, such roadmasters to employ laborers, mechanics and teams at specified wages usual in the township for such work, such employes to work ten hours a day, the road-master being held responsible for the manner and quality of such work. He shall have the power to discharge any hand employed, and shall give his order on the Township Superintendent, which shall be sufficient voucher. The road-master is to receive $1.50 per day, of ten hours, and the Superintendent $2 per day. The Superintendent may let out all work over $25 by contract, with power to reject any or all bids. Any person who shall injure any dam, drain, embankment, ditch or other construction made for the protection of any highway, or injure or deface any guide post or inscription, or hinder passengers by obstructing any highway or bridge, or who shall fail to keep to the right hand when meeting another vehicle, shall be subject to a fine of $5, and it is made the duty of the Township Superintendent to prosecute the same when information is conveyed to him. The Superintendent is authorized to enter upon any land adjoining the highway and take any necessary material for the construction of said highway, for which any person aggrieved has action against the township, the methods for the determination of which are fully set out. It is made the duty of the owner of any land through which any highway runs to remove all obstructions as soon as knowledge of the same comes to him, for which he shall be entitled to reasonable compensation. The office of Supervisor of Roads is abolished, and all his duties are made incumbent upon the Township Superintendent. Persons are to be permitted to work out their poll tax under the direction of the Superintendent. The law contains no emergency clause.

An Oriental Sunday Among the Merchants in Bombay.

An Indian correspondent of the Washington Republican writes: The Sabbath in Bombay is, as it is on the Continent, a busy day. The natives find that the labor of six days does not render them revenue enough, and therefore continue their traffic on the seventh. The Europeans remain quietly at home, but this does not prevent them from being visited by the merchants and their wares. They enter the hotels and boarding-houses and strew the floor with their goods, and very beautiful they are, too. Cashmere shawls, embroidered Persian garments in silver and gold, cunningly wrought jewelry, sandal-wood fans and boxes. The customs and manners of the merchants are unique and not just what we are accustomed to in a civilized land. His goods are transported by a coolie who remains outside. The merchant who is barelegged and not over-dressed, squats on the floor while he displays his merchandise and glibly tells of the superior qualities of the articles. He names at first an astonishingly high price. He expects to be beaten down; and, as you express disapproval, gradually lowers the price, until, if you purchase, it has been lowered nearly two-thirds. The Jews, who have always carried off the palm for this particular mode of trade, would find themselves in nearly every instance put to shame by a native Indian trader. There is no necessity for ladies to go out shopping in Bombay, for all kinds of apparel and fancy articles are brought to the houses and bungalows for them to choose from. All of the native shops are open on Sunday, and mechanics go to their daily labor as a matter of course, the large cotton-mills and manufactories rumble on regardless of the holy day. The natives have different days for their religious worship throughout the month.

The Anti-Smokist.

She was not to be convinced—not she! She knew that tobacco was poison and nothing but poison—she didn't care in what shape it was used; but she considered smoking the worst.

"Why," said she, with terrible energy, "the noxious habit is doing more to depopulate the earth than all other causes combined. Look! Look for yourselves and see how smoking—O! the vile—the abominable habit! See how it is shriveling up and carrying off our people!"

Upon this a young lady present ventured to remark that her grandfather had smoked tobacco ever since she could remember—that he had smoked in his youth—and that he smoked it now.

"And," she added, "he is 80 years of age, and as healthy and happy as you could wish to see."

"Aye—but what of his children? What health have they?"

"Good—exceedingly good—and they are living—every one of them; and several of them smoke."

"Bah! You say your grandfather is only 80?"

"Yes. He was 80 last March."

"Well, now mark me. If he had never smoked, he might have been 90 by this time."

EVERY enterprise of life, from the simplest to the most complex, has its necessary drudgery. On the faithful performance of this is founded all true success; and only those who are willing to bear the burden with courage, energy and perseverance have any right to expect prosperity.

THE trouble about taking a medicine warranted to cure all diseases is that it may not know exactly what is wanted of it, and in that case it will go fooling around in the system trying to cure you of some disease that you have not got.

THE STAR ROUTE RING.

Startling Revelations—Stephen W. Dorsey the Chief of the Ring.

[Washington Cor. New York Times.]

Those who claim to know all the points of the investigation which is being made into the methods of the star route ring say the half has not yet been made public and will not be until measures are taken to bring Brady to justice, and the penitentiary, if possible. The whole steal is divided between what is known as the Dorsey gang and the Gilmer and Salisbury party, the latter being by far the most extensive operators in the swindle. Dorsey's gang is composed of J. W. Dorsey, J. M. Peck and J. R. Miner, who have acted as blinds for Stephen W. Dorsey, ex-Senator from Arkansas, and Secretary of the Republican National Committee, bidding for and receiving contracts. J. W. Dorsey is a brother of Stephen W. Dorsey. Only a little over three years ago he was a farmer in Vermont, an ignorant, stupid specimen of humanity. He was not so stupid that his more brilliant brother could not use him as a cat's-paw to pull gold from the public treasury, and he was brought out to Washington for this purpose. J. M. Peck, the second worthy of this trio, is a brother-in-law of Stephen W. Dorsey, having married a sister of the latter's wife, and J. R. Miner is a partner of the great original Dorsey himself. He was brought from Sandusky, Ohio, expressly to go into the star-route business. The amount known to have been pocketed by the Stephen W. Dorsey gang in excess of the amount called for by the original bids is not less in round numbers than $412,000. What percentage of this was transferred to Brady as his share of the spoils, only Stephen W. Dorsey and his partners can tell. The firm of Gilmer, Salisbury & Co., which did even more extensive business in the swindles than the Dorsey crowd, is composed of J. T. Gilmer, Munroe Salisbury and O. G. Salisbury, the younger brother of Munroe. J. T. Gilmer was formerly stage-driver on the Holliday overland route from St. Joseph to Sacramento, Cal. He was a very ignorant man, and could scarcely write his own name, but he had a shrewd eye for business. In 1868 he formed a partnership with the Salisburys and bought out the stage-line of Wells, Fargo & Co., over which most of the mails in the Territories were at that time carried. Since then the firm has been engaged in the star-route business and made a large fortune. Among the agents who have made straw bids in the interest of these firms are N. W. Parker, T. A. McDevitt, A. S. Patrick, Luke Voorhees, Geo. H. Platt, O. J. Salisbury, Patrick & Brown, A. H. Brown, G. W. Messerole, C. A. Cosgrove, W. A. Giddings, C. D. Seely, F. W. W. Gilman, brother of J. T. Gilman, W. D. Hill, Hugh White, Salisbury & Nichols, William Hamilton, M. V. Nichols and William H. Force. The excess of pay received by the Gilmer & Salisbury combination over that called for by the original contracts amounts to the neat little sum of $778,508, with more still to hear from.

In addition to the money given these large contractors, who made their bids through straw agents, small fortunes have been divided between Brady and the smaller contractors who made their bids on their account. In Louisiana Dr. J. H. Pearson secured an excess of $40,261 on a route of 261 miles. Dr. Pearson was formerly a member of the Warmoth ring in Louisiana, but now lives in this city upon an income derived from dealings with Brady. Chase Andrews, who received on two routes, each twenty miles long, an excess of $12,257, is a Washington man. He was formerly a clerk in the Postoffice Department here, but was removed by Postmaster General Jewell for malfeasance in office. J. A. Walsh, who secured an increase of $166,475 on a route from Prescott, Arizona, to Santa Fe, for which he originally contracted for $18,500, is a native of Louisiana. When the war broke out he joined the rebel army, but after the reconstruction of Louisiana he joined the Warmoth ring. He was indicted in New Orleans for making illicit whisky, and was saved from imprisonment by Brady, who was at that time the Supervisor of Internal Revenue at New Orleans, and refused to appear as a witness against him.

THE SOLID SOUTH.

[From the New York Sun.]

> I for one am frank to say—I have said it before—that I would to God there was a division in the South. I shall rejoice in the day when there is a healthy, wholesome division.—Senator Butler.

The above is undoubtedly the sentiment of the wisest and best men of the South, who have long seen that sectional unity in politics is not only a bar to success in that direction, but is a positive injury to material prosperity, by exciting the distrust of capital and the prejudices of immigration.

Outside of a limited class of what may be called professional politicians, the people of the South really care little for parties. They are seeking to build up the waste places and to repair the broken fortunes left by the desolation of civil war. And the industrial development exhibited by the census furnishes the best possible proof that these efforts have produced astonishing results.

The very best thing that could happen for the South would be a dissolution of its solidity, and, if let alone for a single year, that end would be achieved by a natural law. The plain truth is, there is less interest felt in politics in the Southern States than is good for the general weal. Give them control of the State and municipal affairs, without interference, and most of them would be quite willing to let national affairs take care of themselves.

The managers of the Republican machine have contrived to keep in power by unscrupulous devices to make a solid South first, and then to stir up Northern passions, so as to consolidate a majority against the weaker section. This game has been played for fifteen years, and it is only astonishing that the stale methods and the old tricks could be repeated successfully for four Presidential elections.

Take away the solid South, and the Republican party would fall to pieces. It would have died long ago but for that cause. The solid South elected Grant twice, helped to consummate the great fraud of 1876, and put Garfield in the White House. No wonder the Republican leaders nurse and cherish this source of their political existence and preferment, without which they would soon come to grief.

The whole scheme of the machine managers is to provoke bad blood between the North and South; to denounce the Southern people for every form of infamous crime; to charge them with polluting the ballot-box; to arraign them for unnumbered outrages; and to hold them up before the civilized world as enemies to and outlaws of civilization.

The natural effect of this cold-blooded policy is to provoke retaliation and to unify sentiment in the South. In other words, to accomplish the very object sought to be attained by its selfish authors. Whenever an issue of North against South can be raised the latter must inevitably go to the wall. And this is the platform of the Republican party, in all its length and breadth.

For more than a month the Republicans of the Senate, having procured what they call a "constitutional majority," by a corrupt bargain with Mahone, have obstructed the public business, thrust aside important treaties and neglected several hundred nominations for foreign, domestic and judicial appointments. They have done this to carry out the contract with Mahone by electing Gorham, who negotiated the sale, Secretary of the Senate, and Riddleberger, an ex-Confederate Captain, and author of the Readjusting bill in Virginia, Sergeant-at-Arms.

Since the foundation of the Government, in but a single instance, in 1863, when an official under charges had to be dismissed, has the Senate ever elected officers at an executive session. It is contrary to all the accepted traditions of the body and against its uniform practice. In this instance, the condition of the bond with Mahone required an immediate performance for use in Virginia.

This, and this alone, is the true secret of the deadlock which Mr. Conkling has persisted in continuing, and which enables him thereby to postpone action on the nominations of Judge Robertson and others, to which he is bitterly opposed. Up to this point he has committed the party to a blunder, the weight of which is daily becoming more obvious and oppressive.

The coalition with Mahone involves corruption and support of repudiation in Virginia. This is plain to all who will not close their eyes against light and truth. The best portion of the Republican press openly condemn the alliance, and demand that the treaties and nominations shall be considered. In this dilemma, Mr. Frye, the first lieutenant of Mr. Blaine, is put forward in the Senate, to rally the solid South.

He revamps the ancient outrages, which have often figured heretofore; repeats the election stories; makes wild charges, and goes through the familiar programme of firing the Southern heart. This attempted diversion lacks the merit of novelty. Everybody understands the motive of the movement, and the South will be more foolish than it usually is if it walks into the trap.

If Mr. Blaine set his representative on to do this work, as in some quarters he is suspected of doing, he, who prides himself as being a smart man, has made a foolish mistake. The administration needs votes in the Senate, and cannot get them outside the South, which is well disposed to give it a fair trial, and all reasonable support. Is this the way to gain good will, by re-opening a sectional crusade at the start, for Mr. Conkling's benefit?

Dawes' "Southern Outrage."

That "Southern outrage," which Senator Dawes, of Massachusetts, from his place in the Senate, sent forth to the country a few days ago, is a fair sample of the "Southern outrages." A Senator of the United States rose in the Senate Chamber to tell the country a melancholy story of a man in Mississippi, a Republican, whose property had been burned and who had been driven out of that State to his home in Massachusetts because of his political convictions. He was asked to give names and particulars, but declined to do so. But the story went to the country as the truth. Last Wednesday Mr. Dawes again arose in the Senate to present an elaborate statement of the wrongs of this Massachusetts man from Mississippi, a newspaper statement printed in Boston, several columns in length. Mr. Dawes asked leave to amend. He had charged the entire State of Mississippi with incendiary persecution of some man whose name he could not give. Mr. Dawes asked leave to transfer the charge to the State of Louisiana, and gave the name of the man whose accumulations and home and whole property had been burned to ashes by the State of M——no, of Louisiana. The name of the martyr was Charles Heath. There was no mistake about it this time. The harrowing details were all given. They were almost as terrible as the outrages committed upon the negress and prostitute, Pinkston, who was the principal witness for the conspirators against the inauguration of President-elect Tilden four years ago.

Well. It now turns out that Charles Heath owns, and owned, no property in the parish in Louisiana where his immense manufacturing enterprises were located. His brother owns some property there, appraised at $2,340. Mr. Dawes represented the man as a millionaire. The ward in which this vast property is situated is officered by colored men and under the control of colored voters. A Grand Jury in the locality found that the fire which burned Charles Heath's brother's property was the work of an incendiary, and that the loss was "fully covered by insurance." It was the opinion of the Grand Jury and court that the property was burned to obtain the insurance money. After getting the insurance money their martyr stopped in Washington long enough to enable Dawes to manufacture a "Southern outrage," and Dawes willingly deceives the country.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

THE water used in mixing bread must be tepid. If it is too hot, the loaf will be full of great holes.

A CURIOUS use was made of the marriage ceremony in Cincinnati the other day. A young girl having put her infant to death was, at the suggestion of her lawyer, married to her lover, who was the only witness against her. The two being married the State was deprived of its only evidence.

CENTAUR LINIMENTS; the World's great Pain-Relieving remedies. They heal, soothe and cure Burns, Wounds, Weak Back and Rheumatism upon Man, and Sprains, Galls, and Lameness upon Beasts. Cheap, quick and reliable.

THE SYMPTOMS

of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels alternately costive and lax; Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; Debility, Low Spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a dry Cough often mistaken for Consumption.

Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y

Is The Great Connecting Link between the East and the West!

Its main line runs from Chicago to Council Bluffs, passing through Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, West Liberty, Iowa City, Marengo, Brooklyn, Grinnell, Des Moines (the capital of Iowa), Stuart, Atlantic, and Avoca; with branches from Bureau Junction to Peoria; Wilton Junction to Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Eldon, Belknap, Centreville, Princeton, Trenton, Gallatin, Cameron, Leavenworth, Atchison, and Kansas City; Washington to Sigourney, Oskaloosa, and Knoxville; Keokuk to Farmington, Bonaparte, Bentonsport, Independent, Eldon, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Oskaloosa, Pella, Monroe, and Des Moines; Mt. Zion to Keosauqua; Newton to Monroe; Des Moines to Indianola and Winterset; Atlantic to Griswold and Audubon; and Avoca to Harlan and Carson. This is positively the only Railroad, which owns, and operates a through line from Chicago into the State of Kansas.

Through Express Passenger Trains, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, are run each way daily between CHICAGO and PEORIA, KANSAS CITY, COUNCIL BLUFFS, LEAVENWORTH and ATCHISON. Through cars are also run between Milwaukee and Kansas City, via the "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line."

The "Great Rock Island" is magnificently equipped. Its road bed is simply perfect, and its track is laid with steel rails.

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

The principal R. R. connections of this great Through Line are as follows:

At CHICAGO, with all diverging lines for the East and South.

At ENGLEWOOD, with the L. S. & M. S., and P., Ft. W. & C. R. Rds.

At WASHINGTON HEIGHTS, with P., C. & St. L. R. R.

At LA SALLE, with Ill. Cent. R. R.

At PEORIA, with P. P. & J.; P. D. & E.; I. B. & W.; Ill. Mid.; and T. P. & W. Rds.

A Big Mistake.

Recently a church had a new minister. He is a nice sociable gentleman, but being from a distant state, of course was unacquainted with our people; therefore it happened that, during his pastoral calls, he made several ludicrous blunders. One of them was as follows: The other evening he called upon Mrs. Huddon. She had just lost her husband, and naturally thought that his visit was relative to the sad occurrence. So, after a few commonplaces had been exchanged, she was not at all surprised to hear him remark:

"It was a sad bereavement, was it not, Mrs. Huddon?"

"Yes," faltered the widow.

"Totally unexpected?"

"Oh, yes, I never dreamed of it."

"He died in the barn, I suppose?"

"Oh, no; in the house."

"Ah, well, I suppose you must have thought a great deal of him."

"Of course, sir"—this with vim.

The minister looked rather surprised, crossed his legs and renewed the conversation.

"Blind staggers was the disease, I believe," he said.

"No, sir, appoplexy," snappishly answered the widow.

"Indeed; possibly you may have fed him too much."

"He was always capable of feeding himself, sir."

"Very intelligent he must have been. Died hard, did he not?"

"He did."

"You had to hit him on the head with an axe to put him out of pain, I heard."

Mrs. Huddon's eyes snapped fire.

"Who ever told you so didn't speak the truth," said she haughtily. "James died naturally."

"Yes," replied the minister, in a slightly perplexed tone, "he kicked the side of the barn down in his dying agony, did he not?"

"No, sir."

"Well, I have been misinformed, then. How old was he?"

"Thirty-five."

"Then he did not do much active work? Perhaps you are better off without him, for you can replace him with another quite as good."

"Never, sir—never again will I see as good a one as he was."

"Oh, yes, you will. He had the heaves bad, you know."

"Nothing of the kind."

"Way, I recollect I saw him one day with you on his back, and distinctly recollect that he had the heaves and he walked as if he had the stringhalt."

Mrs. Huddon stared at her reverend visitor as if she imagined that he was crazy.

"He could never have had the stringhalt, for he had a cork leg," she returned.

"A cork leg! remarkable! But really now, did he not have a dangerous trick of suddenly stopping and kicking a wagon all to pieces?"

"Never. He was not a mad man, sir."

"Probably not. There were some good points to him?"

"I should think so."

"The way in which he carried his ears, for example."

"Nobody else ever noticed that particular merit," said she with asperity.

"How long did it take him to go a mile?"

"Fifteen minutes."

"Not much of a goer. Wasn't his hair liable to fly a little?"

"He didn't have any hair. He was quite bald-headed."

"Quite a curiosity."

"No, sir; no more of a curiosity than you are."

The minister shifted uneasily and got red in the face. But he returned to the attack.

"Did you use the whip much on him?"

"Never, sir."

"Went along without, eh?"

"Yes."

"Must have been a remarkably good sort of a brute?"

Mrs. Huddon turned very white, but she made no reply. The minister hardly knew what to say, but finally blurted out:

"What I most admired about him was the beautiful waggle of his tail."

The widow sat down and cried.

"The idea of you coming here and insulting me," she sobbed. "If my husband had lived you would not have done it. Your remarks in reference to that poor man have been but a series of insults. I wont stand it."

He colored and looked dumbfounded.

"Ain't you Mrs. Blinkers?" he stammered, "and hasn't your old gray horse died?"

"I never owned a horse, but my husband died a week ago."

Ten minutes later the minister came out of that house with the reddest face ever seen on mortal man.

"And to think," he groaned as he strode home, "that I was talking horse to that woman all the time, and she was talking husband.

CROWN SEWING MACHINE IS THE BEST

It is the result of 20 years' experience and experiments in Sewing Machines. It combines the good points of all present and former makes, and is not a "one man" or "one idea" machine, as others are. It avoids the defects of others, and possesses new and valuable features and conveniences. It is large, light-running, noiseless, handsome, convenient, durable, and simple. Warranted and kept in repair free for 5 years. Circulars with full description sent free on request. It is surely the best. A trial will prove it. Don't fail to see it before you buy. MANUFACTURED BY FLORENCE MACHINE CO., Florence, Mass. | WHOLESALED BY GEO. P. Making Watches.

Defective Watch Cases are one of the chief causes of so many watches not being good time pieces. The cases being thin and not fitting well, admit dust and dirt to the movement, which soon interferes with the running parts of the watch, necessitating cleaning, repairing, etc., and the amount thus paid out, if applied toward buying a good case in the beginning, would have saved all this trouble and expense. We have recently seen a case that meets all these requirements, it having been carried for over twenty years and still remains perfect. We refer to the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, which has become one of the staple articles of the Jewelery trade, possessing as it does, so many advantages over all other watch cases being made of two heavy plates of solid gold over a plate of composition, and we advise all our readers to ask their Jeweler for a card or catalogue that will explain the manner in which they are made.

It is the only STIFFENED CASE made with two plates of gold, seamless pendants, and center, solid joints, crown pieces, etc., all of which are covered by letters patent. Therefore buy no case before consulting a Jeweler who keeps the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, that you may learn the difference between it and all imitations that claim to be equally as good.

For sale by Abright the Jeweler. Ask to see the warrant that accompanies each case, and don't be persuaded that any other make of case is as good.

"I Don't Want That Stuff!"

Is what a lady in Boston said to her husband when he brought home some medicine to cure her of sick headache and neuralgia which had made her miserable for fourteen years. At the first attack, thereafter, it was administered to her with such good results, that she continued its use until cured, and so enthusiastic was she in its praise, that she induced twenty-two of the best families in her circle to adopt it as their regular family medicine. That "stuff" is Hop Bitters.

Kidney-Wort moves the bowels regularly, cleanses the blood and radically cures kidney disease, gravel, piles, bilious headache and pains which are caused by disordered liver and kidneys. Thousands have been cured; why should you not try it? Your druggist will tell you that it is one of the most successful medicines ever known. It is sold in both Dry and Liquid form and its action is positive and sure in either.—[Dallas Tex. Herald.

"FESSIN' UP."

HOW INDIANA WAS DEMORALIZED AND "SAVED" BY THE DORSEY CROWD.

Where the Flood of Bright, New $2 Bills Came From.

THE CONFESSION OF THE CHAIRMAN OF A REPUBLICAN CENTRAL COMMITTEE.

[Indianapolis Journal of May 4.]

To the editor of the Indianapolis Journal:

DEAR SIR:—One year ago, I sent twenty letters from the leading republicans of Indiana, asking my appointment as inspector in the postoffice department. Among the letters, was one from General Harrison, Will. Cumback, John Overmyer, J. M. Butler, M. C. Hunter, Judge Vinton, General Packard and Senator Hay. I now have these letters returned to me by Tyner, and a refusal to give me the place for the reason, I believe, that Dorsey, New & Co. know from my refusal to import voters, it would not do to have me in the service where men wink at fraud. I say I believe I should have been appointed, had not a protest gone up that I would not be a party to "division and silence." For these reasons, I desire to publish the inside history of how Indiana was carried. I offer you the opportunity to make public the facts. If you refuse to do so, find stamps inclosed and return manuscript to me, so I may offer it to the Sentinel.

Respectfully yours, S. P. CONNER.

Kentland, Ind., May 3.

HISTORICAL—CHAPTER I.

[Written by S. P. Conner.]

Since a few republicans of Kentland have entered the arena to disrupt the republican party and give aid and comfort to the enemy, I propose to have them cease taking liliputian treatment and swallow heroic doses. To this end I invite the reader's attention to the secret history of the doings of the republican party of Indiana during the last political campaign. Being chairman of the republican county central committee, I was invited to the inner council at Indianapolis, and witnessed the "expediting" process, by which the republicans captured the state. I conversed freely with John C. New, his secretary and all his clerks, and then met Jo Gray, the lieutenant of Senator Dorsey. After learning from Gray how double tickets were voted and counted, and being fully instructed, I was ushered into the presence of Senator Dorsey, who was secretary of the national republican central committee. I was presented to Dorsey, by John C. New, the chairman of the republican state central committee, and, after being introduced, Mr. New withdrew and left me. Senator Dorsey had his bankers in an adjoining room, upon whom he drew to furnish the money with which to corrupt and carry the election in Indiana. Senator Dorsey demanded of me 600 majority in Newton county. I told him we could not give it. He then said he would give me money to help us, and, being on the Illinois line, we could colonize from Illinois and make the 600 majority. I told him frankly I was not zealous enough in the cause to engage in such disreputable business. As autocrat, he seemed greatly incensed, and dismissed me from his august presence, with a promise to see me later. I met him again at an appointed hour, and he gave to Jo Gray a piece of paper and waived us from the room. I was led into an adjoining room by Jo Gray (all of this was in the New Denison hotel, at Indianapolis), and there I met an old gray headed man and a middle aged man. Jo Gray gave them the paper he had received from Dorsey, when the bankers retired to an adjoining room, and returned in a few minutes with a package of bills just printed for the business of carrying Indiana. I was informed that, my county being small, I must be content with a half a thousand. I learned that larger counties received from 1,000 to 5,000 of these new $1 and $2 bills just printed to carry Indiana for Porter and Garfield. I then met United States Marshal Dudley and received many encouraging words from him. I felt that the Star Routes had all been "expedited," and that Garfield ought to reward Grier, John C. New did the work, and his influence at Washington brought the money, but the political ring gave all the credit to Dorsey for carrying the state. Poor New was forced to silence, and Garfield refused to give him any office. Garfield rewarded Grier just as Hayes rewarded the Louisiana scoundrels who counted him in, but John C. New was crushed to silence and Dorsey walked off with the honor of having carried Indiana. Where the money came from I cannot tell. It was printed by Uncle Sam's process, and maybe it is the Star Route fund. Let Brady and John Sherman answer this. Every speaker brought to Indiana had his pockets stuffed full and then sent to work. Every county had a generous supply. It was new and just from the press, and somebody furnished it to carry Indiana, and it did carry Indiana for the republicans.

S. P. CONNER,

Chairman Republican Central Committee, Newton County, Indiana.

STORIES OF PANTHER HUNTING.

Adventures of Old Hunters up in Ulster—A Bear's Fight with a Panther.

[Monticello (N. Y.) Cor. New York Sun.]

"No, there are no more panthers in the Sullivan or Ulster forests," said an octogenarian hunter and trapper of this region. "Once in a while a report comes to the settlements that a panther has been seen lurking around in the woods, but on investigation, the cause of the alarm never turns out to be anything more than a big wild cat, or maybe once in while a Canada lynx."

"But I can remember when the woods of these counties were full of them. I've killed many a panther within a stone's throw of where the Monticello court-house now stands. There are plenty of deer and bear within a circuit of less than fifteen miles of the place yet. The townships of Bethel, Rockland, Neversink, Forestburg and some others in this county, have still so much wild land that game of all kinds find haunts almost as secure as it did before there were any settlements at all. Hardenberg, Denning, Shandaken and, in fact, the whole northern part of Ulster county, have hundreds of thousands of acres where no one but hunters and fishermen ever venture. There, bears are very common, and scores of them are trapped and shot every year.

Panther hunting was a favorite pastime fifty years ago in this county. I shot a panther on the head waters of the Neversink when I was twelve years old. We used to have dogs trained on purpose to hunt this game. It was hard to get a dog with pluck enough for the sport. A man who had a good panther dog was the envy, sometimes, of the whole region. They were scarce, and a good one would be in demand from all parts of the country. Sam Darbee, who lived in Rockland, had a dog sixty years old that was the best one for panthers ever in the county. He would not hunt anything else. He got killed in a funny way. Darbee had a fox trap set in his barn-yard. It was covered over with chaff. One night he heard a panther [illegible] in a piece of woods, on the edge of which his log house was built. He got up, took his gun and dog, and went out to kill the animal, which he knew was prowling around after a calf or sheep. He had hardly stepped out of the door, when he saw the panther bounding toward his barnyard. He fired and hit it just as it leaped over the long enclosure. Maje, the dog, followed the panther into the yard, and pounced upon it. The dog was well posted in the tactics of these animals, but he had scarcely commenced the fight when he struck both fore feet in the fox trap. The trap closed on him, and before Darbee arrived on the scene, the panther had torn Maje to pieces. A second shot killed the panther; but Darbee never got over the way his dog fell victim to its foe, and never set another fox trap in his life.

There were some famous panther hunters in Sullivan county in those days. Besides Darbee, there were the Overtons, Peter Steward, Cyrus Dodge and Nelson Crocker and many others. Peter Steward is still alive, I believe, and must be getting along toward ninety years of age. He lives in Rockland, where he was born. The narrative of his adventures would make a book. I suppose that Cyrus Dodge killed more panthers on one single hunt that any other hunter that ever lived. He killed seven in less than one hour. He was hunting one day in the spring of 1818, and when in the neighborhood of Long Pond, discovered a panther's den. It had two kittens in it, the old panthers being away on a foraging expedition. He took both of the young ones and started home with them, placing them inside his hunting shirt. He hadn't gone far before he heard the mother yelling behind him. He knew he was in for a fight, and placed himself in a position to do his best. Pretty soon the panther came tearing along through the woods. When she caught sight of Dodge, she bounded to within thirty feet of him and couched for a spring. He shot her, but did not kill her. Her cries were terrible, and Dodge knew that in a short time any other panthers there might be in the vicinity, would soon hasten to the scene. She was disabled, and another shot put an end to her. Then Dodge made for the pond, which was a half mile or so away. Cries from all sides told him that he was not yet through with his work. By the time he reached the pond, he could hear panthers leaping through the branches of the trees. A panther will not enter water. Dodge waded out as far as he could and prepared for business. Within gun-shot of him he discovered five large panthers in the trees. He [illegible] The loud [illegible] his shirt [illegible] the old panthers, [illegible] the spot at the sound of the gun. They bounded frantically in the branches, and two of them rushed to the water's edge and switched and lashed their tails in fury. Dodge shot both of these, and killed the other two, and two more that reinforced them, without leaving his tracks in the pond. The skin of the largest of these panthers is still preserved by the family. Dodge took the kittens home, but as they grew, they became so savage that they had to be killed.

Peter Stewart was once hunting in Rockland, when he saw some deer bones lying at the mouth of a crevice in some rocks. He knew that it must be a panther's den, and that the bones were the remnants of a feast the occupants had made of a deer they had captured. Stewart hid himself behind a tree and awaited developments. Imagine his surprise when he saw a big bear come out of the cave, carrying under his arm a panther kitten, which was squalling and kicking with all its might. The bear rose on his haunches and, giving the kitten a box or two on the side with his fore paw, squeezed it to death and threw it on the ground. The bear then returned to the cave, and in a short time came out with another kitten under his arm. This was treated as the other had been. What the future intentions of the bear were, Stewart never found out, for the second kitten had barely been killed when the mother panther appeared on the scene. This seemed to take the bear by surprise. The old panther saw her kittens lying on the ground. She bounded first to one and then to the other, smelling and licking them, and uttering plaintive cries. Then she turned on the bear, which had remained in the erect position it had assumed when squeezing the second kitten to death. With a yell that almost froze the blood of the hunter, used as he was to the fury of panthers, she sprang upon the bear and fastened her claws in its shaggy coat and its fangs in its throat. The bear hurled its antagonist ten feet away with its powerful paws, and then attempted to escape a second attack by flight. But the panther was upon it again in an instant, and a terrific combat ensued. The bear endeavored to catch the panther in its hug, but the latter was too agile, and with every spring upon its huge enemy the panther inflicted terrible wounds with its sharp claws. The blood poured from a dozen great gashes in the bear's body, and at last the panther leaped on the bear as it stood facing her, and, fastening her teeth on its throat, thrust the long sharp nails of her hind feet into its vitals. The bear fell to the ground dead. As the panther was running to its dead kittens, Stewart shot her through the heart.

I shot and killed a panther once, where Corby's hotel now stands at White Lake. I lived in Bethel, and my wife's people lived in Mamakating, now Wurtsboro. One winter she wanted to visit home, and she started on horseback to make the journey. When she was between White Lake and Thompson's, now Monticello, she heard a panther, and discovered that it was pursuing her. The horse needed no urging, for it knew the danger and started at the top of its speed. But a horse at full speed is no match for the great leaps of a panther, and my wife found that the animal was rapidly gaining on her. At the end of a mile, the panther was not more than a hundred yards in the rear. My wife expected to be torn to pieces, but it happened that Nelse Crocker was hunting in that neighborhood, and was on the look-out for the same panther, which had been around for several days. He heard the sound of the horse's feet and the cries of the panther, and came out on the road in time to stop the career of the panther, and save my wife's life."

THEY had almost a returning-board case in Indianapolis at the recent city election. In the Twenty-second ward, W. F. A. Bernhamer, democrat, received 290 votes, and John Egger, republican, 290 votes. In counting out the votes, the judges found a republican ticket that was double, and a single ticket, from which the name "Egger" was erased, and "Newman" written instead, leaving the first name, "John" not erased. The board decided to count one of the double tickets but to throw out the other, and also the one with Egger's name scratched. The count had shown one more ballot in the box than there were names on the tally-sheet. But the inspector of the ward afterwards made out a separate return, signed it alone, and gave the two extra votes to Egger, electing him by one majority.

The passion for the possession of remarkable relics has led to extraordinary prices being sometimes given for things of little value in themselves, or, sometimes perfectly worthless. The following instances of extravagant sums paid for objects more or less curious, have been recorded: A tooth of Sir Isaac Newton's was sold in 1816 for £730. It was purchased by a nobleman, who had it set in a ring which he wore constantly on his finger.

The prayer-book used by King Charles I. when on the scaffold, was sold in London in 1825 for 100 guineas.

The pens used in Paris for signing the treaty of peace, at the close of the Crimean war, were presented to the Empress Eugenie, by whom they have no doubt been carefully preserved.

A wig that had belonged to Sterne was sold at a public auction in London, for 200 guineas.

An old wig which had belonged to the German philosopher, Kant, was sold after his death, for 200 francs.

Voltaire's cane realized 500 francs at a sale in Paris.

A waistcoat belonging to J. J. Rousseau was sold for [illegible] francs, and his metal watch for [illegible] francs.

The hat worn by Napoleon Bonaparte at the battle of Eylau, was sold in Paris, in 1835, for 1,920 francs, (about £80). It was put up for sale at 500 francs and there were thirty-two bidders.

The ivory arm-chair presented to Gustavus Vasa by the city of Lubeck was sold, in 1825, to the Swedish chamberlain, M. Schmekel, for [illegible] francs.

The coat worn by Charles XII. at the battle of Pultawa, and preserved by one of his officers and attendants, was sold in 1825 for 561,000 francs.

The two pens employed in signing the treaty of Amiens, were sold in 1825 for £500.

At the French village of Pezenas some years ago, there was an old arm chair, which was said to have been frequently used by Moliere. When he was living in this village, he was accustomed every Sunday afternoon, to go to a barber's shop, in a corner of which this chair was kept. The shop was the resort of all the idlers and gossips of the town, and there politics were discussed, and all the news of the day repeated. The chair formed a kind of observatory for the dramatist, who was in the habit of attentively watching all that was going on around him. The old chair was brought to Paris to be sold, and realized a considerable sum.

How a Rebel Won His Pardon.

The story is often told in and about Richmond of an interview said to have occurred just after Lee's surrender between Secretary Stanton and Major Drewry, commander at Drewry's Bluff, at the time of the attack upon it by the Union fleet, in May, 1862. The major, who had been a dry-goods merchant in Richmond before the war, and who is a common-sense man of the world, knowing that all further resistance was vain, went at once to Washington to see the secretary of war. Very doubtful whether Stanton, always stern and unusually overbearing, would see him if he knew his name and mission, he went into the secretary's private office unannounced. In his presence the ex-Rebel, without any preamble, said: "Mr. Secretary, I am Major A. H. Drewry, of Richmond. I have fought against the Federals as well as I could for four years. But now the war is over and I want to go to work again. I have hundreds of acres of wheat land on the James. They have been sadly neglected all this time, and they need my immediate attention. We have been whipped, and have got sense enough to know it. Now that peace has come I want my pardon."

"On what grounds?" inquired Stanton, severely.

"First, on the grounds of having had fighting enough; secondly, because I have helped to improve your navy by showing you how poor wooden ships are in action. After I had driven off the Galena, Aroostook and the other vessels you began to build iron boats, and made your navy what it ought to have been at the start. You owe me a pardon for the valuable information I furnished to your cause."

Stanton relaxed as the major went on, and, finally, pleased with his candor and boldness, invited him to call the next day at a certain hour. Drewry was prompt. The two had a long talk, the secretary gaining much needed information about the south, its condition and prospects, and handed the Virginian his pardon.

The major kept his word. He went to work immediately, and has kept to work ever since without troubling himself about politics or political theories.

THE OLD BROWN SCHOOL HOUSE.

BY THE REV. DWIGHT WILLIAMS.

In memory's hall hangs the picture,
  And years of sad care are between;
It hangs with a beautiful gilding,
  And well do I love it, I ween.
It stood on a bleak country corner,
  But boyhood's young heart made it warm;
It glowed in the sunshine of summer;
  'Twas cheerful in winter and storm.

O, gay were the sports of the noontide,
  When winter winds frolicked with snow;
We laughed at the freaks of the storm-king
  And shouted him on, all aglow.
We dashed at his beautiful sculpture,
  Regardless of all its array;
We plunged in the feathery snow-drifts,
  And sported the winter away.

We sat on the old-fashioned benches,
  Beguiled with our pencil and slate;
We thought of the opening future,
  And dreamed of our manhood's estate.
O, days of my boyhood, I bless ye,
  While looking from life's busy prime;
The treasures are lingering with me
  I gathered in life's early time.

O, still to [illegible] country corner
  Turns [illegible] in weariness yet,
Where, leading my gentle young sisters,
  With youthful companions I met.
I cast a fond glance o'er the meadow;
  The hill just behind it I see;
Away in the sheen of the distance,
  Old school-house, a blessing on thee!

ONE DEBT'S PAYMENT.

It was the dusk of evening, and night's shadows were quickly gathering in the little German village through whose outskirts two lovers strolled.

They had left behind them the cottages, and had wandered off among the green fields and under the shade of the trees, behind which the sun had almost sunk to rest.

It was an old story, the story of their loving. They had been betrothed since the girl was 14. It was well-nigh five years now, and on her 19th birthday they were to be married.

She was an orphan, and her snug dowry, lying so safely nestled away in the village bank, she had accumulated by the labor of her own hands. But a shade was on her lover's face to-night, and even in the shadow her quick eyes discerned it.

"Sing to me, Hans," she whispered, knowing that in song Hans Werter forgot all else.

After a moment's silence, he obeyed her, and the sleepy birds woke in their nests and almost indignantly drew their heads from beneath the soft shelter of their wing, to listen to this strange, wonderful rival to the sweetness of their notes. The air was filled with the exquisite melody. It rang full and clear and sweet. It sank down to the violets, as they stirred in the listening wind, then soared to the stars.

Poor little Marguerite! Hans' music always brought the moisture to her blue eyes, but to-night it seemed filled with something she had never heard before, and her little hands were tightly interlaced, and her red lips parted in a sort of painful ecstasy.

But at the close she was all unprepared to see him end the last note in a dry sob, then fling himself down on the sward and bury his face in his hands.

"Hans, what is it?" she cried, sinking herself down beside him, and trying to raise his head upon her breast.

Was he weeping? She had never in all these years seen him thus moved. His powerful frame seemed shaken to its innermost centre by the torrent of emotion that swept over it.

Almost rudely, in his unconsciousness to all but his own suffering, he repulsed her, only the next moment to be filled with remorse.

Conquering himself by a mighty effort, he drew her to him with gentle force.

"Forgive me, dear," he said, softly, "but never ask me to sing again, Marguerite. It only teaches me what I might have been, and what I am. Think what it would be if I had the money to reach Italy! I could have the world at my feet, Marguerite—I could be great and famous. I know it—I feel it. But I am chained here, tending my herds and feeding my cattle, powerless to break the chains. I need so much money—so much—and I have so little. Though I sold all I have in the world, it would not bring me to my journey's end. No, no, I must give it all up; but never—never ask me to sing again."

The girl answered him nothing, as she stroked the hot brow with the little, cool hand, which, all browned and hardened as it was, fell very softly, very lovingly.

In her eyes he was a King, this shepherd lad. Instinctively she knew that silence is oftentimes more healing than speech; and, beside, a wonderful, dazzling thought had crept into her own busy brain, and driven all lighter thought away.

Still silently they rose, and walked silently home. At the door of her little cottage, he stooped and kissed her on the brow, as they stood beneath the stars.

In two more months he was to share her cottage—the home left her by her dead parents—so they both had thought scarce an hour agone. To-night, Marguerite knew differently.

How much would it bring, the sale of this humble little shelter?

It was this problem which banished slumber through the long night hours. It was solved three days later, when the papers for its possession by strangers lay in her hands, and, added to it the nest-egg from the bank, made in the child's eyes a fortune.

What mattered it that she was beggared? It was for Hans' sake! It was now her turn to be silent, as, hand-in-hand, they walked beneath the gold-studded sky.

She felt, for the first time, timid, almost afraid, in his presence. That she had performed an act of almost heroism, she never dreamed. He was a hero; she was but a little, humble maiden, whose proudest duty was to serve him.

"Hans," she said at last, very softly, "I have been thinking, dear, since the other night, and—and, Hans, we won't be married yet awhile. A wife would only pull you down, instead of helping you soar to the birds, where you belong. I don't want you to think of me. I want you to go away and study to be a great singer."

In the gloom, the man could see the pallor on the speaker's face, as it grew reflected on his own.

"Are you mad, Marguerite?" he questioned, at last. "I've crushed the dream, child! Don't flout it again before my fancy."

"You couldn't crush it, Hans, for it is no dream, but a very part of yourself, and that is the highest, noblest part! Nor is it madness, Hans. See here!" and she unloosed the string of a little bag she held tightly clutched in her trembling hands, and showed to his dazzled eyes the glittering gold pieces lying on a snug little pile of notes. "It's enough, Hans!" she said, in answer to his gaze of utter bewilderment. "It's more than what I heard you once say would let you be taught for a whole year. And it's yours, Hans—all yours."

And, as she spoke, she strove to thrust the bag within his grasp.

"Marguerite!"—she shrank from the sternness of his tone—"how did you get the gold?"

"Honestly!" she answered, proudly. "The gold was to have been my dowry; the notes—I—I sold the cottage for those."

"You did this for me, and you think so meanly of me as that I would accept such a sacrifice?"

His voice quivered as he spoke.

"Hans, I was to have been your wife," she whispered. "Who had the right, if not I? Oh, I shall be so proud—so proud, some day, when you come back for your little Marguerite and I shall be the wife of the great singer! They will point at me and say, 'Yes, he married this little nobody, this little Marguerite, but they say he loves her,' and they will think it strange that you should love me from your great height. But you won't forget to do that, Hans—ever, ever—will you, my love?"

"Never, until my voice forgets its music. I would pray God to still it forever, could my heart prove so false. Something within me, Marguerite, conquers myself. It is hope springing within my breast. I will take your money, little one, a sacred debt. Wait for me two years, fraulein. Then I will return to give you richest payment. I swear it, and I seal it with this kiss."

Hans had gone, and Marguerite was left alone. She lived now in one little room, high up many stairs—up which she toiled wearily in the evening's gloom. There were no more restful walks under the stars now. She might have had lovers, like other girls; but no—Hans must find her without reproach on his return. All day she had to labor from early dawn, even for the humble shelter now hers. Sometimes she was hungry, sometimes cold, but all mattered not to her. It was for Hans' sake.

The winter's icy breath but hastened the spring's blossoms, and their first fragrance would herald the incoming summer, which would make the year complete since Hans had left, and then there would only be another year to wait.

At long distances apart, letters came. Oh, how eagerly Marguerite spelled them out! She slept with them under her pillow by night, and they sank and fell with every pulsation of her heart by day. Labor grew light. She even forgot her loneliness, for they told her that step by step Hans was nearing his goal.

Then there were weeks—aye, months—when she heard nothing, and the child's figure grew thin and her cheeks pale, while every night she would run breathlessly up to her room, only to find the table vacant and that the postman had had no errand for her.

But one evening, when she had almost given up hope—when the great dread lest Hans should be ill, dying or dead remorselessly shadowed her pathway—the silent messenger smiled her a welcome. She burst into a passion of tears ere she broke the seal. It seemed as though the joy must kill her.

But at last she unfolded the sheet, when something white and fluttering fell to the ground. She stooped to pick it up.

What did it mean? It was a little slip, with some figures in one corner. They represented the exact amount she had given Hans. Bewildered, she turned to the letter. Its first words explained:

> I pay you my debt. Think, my little love, what it cost us, yet I earned it—earned it, Marguerite, on the very night of my debut. I have sung, and people have listened. I looked about among all the faces—on all the young and beautiful women, with their eyes fixed upon me—but nothing inspired me. Then I thought of you, and, looking straight into space, I forgot them all, darling. There was your sweet, pale face floating in the air, your blue eyes looking, not as theirs looked, but down into my soul, and I sang to you, darling—to you. The flowers rained at my feet. Great ladies tore the roses from their breasts; but I would have given them all, darling, for one little wild blossom your hand had plucked. They say I will be rich and famous. I cannot tell—the world is fickle. The village banker will cash your order. But you need not buy back the little home. I am coming for you soon, to bring you to a cage better worthy my mountain-bird.

Again and again Marguerite read and reread the precious words. What cared she for the money? It had made Hans great.

* * * * *

"Going back to your native village—you, who have the world at your feet!" sighed one of Florence's most famous beauties, as she looked into the young singer's eyes.

Six months had passed since he had paid his debt to Marguerite, and still he lingered. He had spent thrice the amount since then on a trinket to clasp some fair lady's arm. Did he, in holding it so lightly, forget that once it had been a girl's all? Why, then, did the sigh the lady uttered find a response in his own breast?

"It is duty which calls me."

"Duty!" she murmured. "Are you sure it is not mistaken duty? All your life has changed, Herr Werter. If, in its early time, you pledged it to some rustic maiden, think—could she fill its measure now?"

The beauty's voice trembled. The cool softness of her flesh pressed lightly against his burning palm.

"And if I give her up," he said, "what then? You will be mine?"

But the "Yes" she uttered was hushed by the madness of his kisses.

And Marguerite watched and waited. He was coming, therefore he did not write.

"He is great now, Marguerite; he has forgotten you," the gossips said, while she turned her back upon them, in the hottest wrath her gentle spirit had ever known, that they dared thus malign him.

It was the second anniversary of the day which was to have celebrated her wedding, when they burst into her room.

"Ha, ha!" they said, "did we not tell you so?" pointing, as they spoke, to the paragraph in the paper, which announced the betrothal of Herr Werter and the greatest beauty in all Florence.

"Leave me," she said at last, when they looked to see what she would do. "I wish to be alone."

But one of kinder heart, after some hours had passed, stole back into the darkened room.

The child lay tossing in delirious fever, and the physician, when called, shook his head.

The strain has been too great, he said. She must die!

On the third day after, as the watchers sat about the bed, a step sounded on the stairs. A man, stained with the dust of travel, burst impetuously into the room.

"Marguerite!" he exclaimed—"Marguerite!" Then he stopped and gathered the import of the scene before him. "I did but falter," he cried, falling on his knees beside her bedside. "I came back, my wild German daisy, to tell you so. Oh! Marguerite, is it thus I pay my debt?"

Then, as though that voice must penetrate even the mists of fever, the blue eyes opened, a wonderful ecstatic light in their depths.

"Hans," she whispered—"Hans! Forgive me for the doubt which killed me!"

And with the words—a dagger-thrust in his own remorseful heart—the spark of life flickered and went out.

Marguerite was dead. She who had lived for him died for him. They found the paper he had sent her among his letters.

Thus had he redeemed his debt! An empty slip of paper, worthless to all, to return to him, but bearing the interest of a broken heart.

A Relic of Washington.

An old walnut cabinet of antique design has been discovered in the store of Frank Ware, a second-hand furniture dealer in Staunton, Va., to which unusual interest attaches. In moving the desk Ware turned it up and his eye fell upon a singular looking inscription, to decipher which he called in the aid of several gentlemen, to make it out as follows: "To George Washington by D. Webfter in ye year 1777," and in another place: "Ye desk was presented to George Washington in ye year of ye Lord 1777 by D. Webfter." The inscribton is quite distinct, except the "D" preceding Webster. The cabinet was bought recently at a sale of the effects of the widow of the late Samuel Clark, a former Mayor of Staunton, and is about three feet long and one deep and stands upon four slender crooked legs. A drawer runs the whole length of the cabinet at the top and there are smaller shallow ones beneath this, with an old fashioned brass handle. It has been found that Samuel Clark married a daughter of Sampson Matthews, who was the first man who ever kept a tavern in Staunton. His tavern, which has long since disappeared, was a rendezvous for Continental soldiers. General Matthews, a brother of the tavern-keeper, was a friend of General Washington and was Governor of Georgia after the war. The old desk evidently passed from General Washington into the hands of Governor Matthews and so into his brother's family. Its identity is much strengthened by the strong resemblance between the inscription upon it and the handwriting of Washington as seen upon an old autograph letter of his which has been hunted up and compared with it.—Philadelphia Times.

Bungs.

The bung is a homely device, lacking altogether the symmetry of an obelisk and having little even of the grace which corks often possess. But its uses are of a most important kind, and wherever liquids are contained in casks or barrels there must the bung be also.

It is almost impossible to estimate the quantity of bungs made and used annually, but the number is well up in the millions. They are made of wood well seasoned, and are cut by machinery which is patented. In no country are so many bungs made as in the United States, for nowhere else are the woods which are used so plentiful. Oak, hickory, spruce and pine are among the varieties utilized, and the bung factories are scattered about the country in the neighborhoods where the woods used are found. By cutting the bungs before shipping, the cost of transporting the waste material is saved. A great many bungs for beer casks are sent both to Germany and England from this country, not because they are better but because they are cheaper than those made abroad. Bungs are cut by peculiar and ingenious machinery which works against the grain of the wood, tapering the bung with the grain. In many cases the taper is made but slight in the cutting, and then the bung is submitted to a powerful compression to increase the taper.

Bungs of ale and beer barrels are of a standard size, measuring one and seven-eighths inches, while bungs for oil barrels are two inches. Whisky barrel bungs are used over and over again. Beer and oil barrel bungs are always picked out, because hammering the staves to start the bungs is sure to injure the coating of the barrels.—New York Sun.

Reckless Extravagance.

At a recent dancing-party, one of the events of the season, one of our lovely young debutantes was noticed standing beside a costly upright piano, chatting with her escort. Supper was in progress, and at the lady's elbow, on the top of the piano, was a plate of terrapin. Presently, another gentleman appeared, carrying an ice; in the service he had somewhat soiled his dainty hands; and in her anxiety to repair the damage, the fair subject of his devotions bade him hold his hands over the terrapin plate, while she deluged them with the contents of a champagne glass that stood by. Naturally, the liquid carried with it the greasy contents of the small dish, and down went the whole mixture into the delicate machinery of the piano. Did my lady care? Not a whit; she was only a debutante, but she was a true convert, and she laughed merrily, and showed her pretty teeth, as if heartily amused at the devastation. She seemed even to resent the interference of an elder lady, who, disgusted at the destruction, and, perhaps, moved to pity by the injury being done to the piano, almost "a thing of life," came to the rescue, and stopped the sticky stream that was pouring relentlessly over the keys and fragile wires.—Progress.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

TO CURE sore throat pour a few drops of spirits of camphor on a lump of sugar and allow it to dissolve in the mouth every hour. The third and fourth dose will enable the patient to swallow with ease. This, it is said, has cured the last stage of the disease.

It is recommended to treat inflamed wounds by smoking them with burning wool or woolen cloth. Twenty minutes in the smoke of wool, it is said, will take the pain out of the worst wound, and, if repeated once or twice, will allay the worst case of inflammation arising from a wound. This remedy is certainly very simple, and within the reach of every one.

AN exchange says: "That painful affliction, a felon, can readily be prevented by moistening the finger with the tincture of lobelia in the early stages of the attack. If allowed to progress too far before the remedy is applied it will have no effect. If it cannot be conveniently obtained, rock salt pulverized, after being dried in an oven and mixed with an equal part of turpentine and applied frequently, will destroy a felon in twenty-four hours."

AN old-fashioned remedy for a cold: A warm "stew," getting into bed with covering well tucked in, hot bricks to feet, and drinking abundantly of hot teas until there is a dripping perspiration, to be kept up an hour or two or more until the system is relieved, and then to cool off very gradually in the course of another hour, is derisively styled an "old woman's remedy;" but for all that it will break up any cold taken within thirty-six hours; it will promptly relieve many of the most painful forms of sudden disease, with the advantage of being without danger, gives no shock to the system, nor wastes its strength.—How to Live Long.

NEVER eat till you have time to digest, for digestion requires leisure; we cannot assimilate our food while the functional energy of our system is engrossed by other occupations. After a hearty feed, animals retire to a quiet hiding-place, and the "after-dinner laziness," the plea of our system for rest, should admonish us to imitate their example. The idea that exercise after dinner promotes digestion is a marvelous fallacy. Jules Virey settled that question by a cruel but conclusive experiment. He selected two curs of the same size, age and general physique, made them keep a fast-day and treated them the next morning to a square meal of potato chips and cubes of fat mutton, but as soon as one of them had eaten his fill he made the other stop, too, to make sure that they had both consumed the same quantity. Dog No. 1 was then confined in a comfortable kennel, while No. 2 had to run after the doctor's coach, not at a breathless rate of speed, but at a fair, brisk trot for two hours and a half. As soon as they got home, the coach-dog and his comrade were slain and dissected; the kennel dog had completely digested his meal, while the chips and cubes in the coach-dog's stomach had not changed their form at all, the process of assimilation had not even begun. Railroad laborers, who bolt their dinner during a short interval of hard work, might as well pass their recess in a hammock; instead of strengthening them, their dinner will only oppress them, till it is digested, together with their supper, in the cool of the evening.—F. L. Oswald, in Popular Science Monthly.

Opening Oysters.

There is just as much difference in the manner in which two men open shell oysters as there is in the way they go to church or walk on the street. Who has not watched a thorough oyster-opener at an Eastern oyster market, and observed the tender manner in which he takes up the shell and looks at it, as though it was a friend of his. He inserts his instrument between the shells as delicately as a dentist will probe an aching tooth, and by a little turn of the wrist your oyster is uncovered and reclining upon the half-shell plump and juicy, inviting you to fire him down your neck. How different it is when an amateur attempts to open oysters. He commences by getting red in the face, and knocking off an inch of the edge of the shell, and letting all the juice run out and drip down between his fingers. He knocks some skin off his thumb, and that bleeds, and your heart bleeds for the oyster. He inserts an iron that looks like a stove-hook into the shell, then pries and grunts, the shell opens and the oyster sticks to both sides of it and splits. He saws off the mantel-piece that holds the oyster to the shell, and hands you the half-shell with something on it that looks like scrambled oyster. The dirt from the shell gets on the oyster and it is about as much comfort trying to eat it as it is to eat a hickory nut that has been cracked by laying it down on the side and mashing it with a hatchet. The oyster opened by an amateur looks ragged and discouraged, and the man who opens it looks about the same, while the oyster opened by a man who understands his business looks as though it enjoyed life, and the man who opens it looks like a thoroughbred who is not ashamed of his business, and knows he can do it as well as anybody. The world is full of men who do everything the way an amateur opens oysters. They try to do that for which they are not fitted, and it is hard to make them believe they are not doing what they attempt to do well, but they always act as though they wanted to apologize for something being wrong. This oyster business is a little out of season, but you have all noticed how it is.—Peck's Sun.

Science and Memory.

A scientific writer defines instinct as "nothing else than an obscure remembrance of experiences which were made by earlier generations." A clear remembrance which extends over the boundaries of our individual life has, it is true, not yet been found among men, but this does not prove anything against the above assertion. Such a remembrance we do not possess, even for the complete period of our present life. Our memory does not extend back to the first years of our infancy. It is interrupted by sleep; it may be strengthened by exercise or weakened by neglect; it may be interrupted by many abnormal states by which life itself is not interrupted. Whether in dreams, or in conditions of abnormal nervous excitement, in hysterics or other sickness memory is increased, so that it really extends over the period of our so-called individual life, is a question which, although much abused by humbugs and impostors, might still arrest the attention. Whether the memory of man has such an extension, and though even for the human race the contrary may be proven, it nevertheless might be possible that some animals are endowed with a memory which reaches far beyond their so-called individual existence.

Anecdotes of the Late Johns Hopkins.

He left $9,000,000, a moiety of which was divided between eighteen relatives, and the bulk retained for a university and several hospitals. The nephew who was often at variance with him received almost twice as much as his brothers who never contradicted him. Mr. Hopkins never married. The daughters of Epaminondas were that hero's famous victories. The children of Johns Hopkins are the splendid institutions he has left to learning, to mercy and to science. There never was a stronger man. He started life with $400, and built up, by his own exertions, a colossal fortune. From the beginning he declared that he had a mission from God to increase his store, and that the golden flood that poured into his coffers did not belong to him or to the hundreds who sought to borrow or beg it from him. He declared that a supernatural power prevented him from taking money from his pocket to bestow foolish alms, and that some day the world would know that he was not the grasping, avaricious and narrow-minded man he was accounted. He nevertheless helped secretly many worthy persons, and after his death it was discovered that not a few merchants had been saved by him from financial embarrassment and sorrow.

An uncanny old tramp used to station himself under a giant oak that stood sentry by the lodge of "Clifton." This made Mr. Hopkins nervous and became a mortal offense. He told one of his nephews of it and said he did not know how to abate the nuisance. "Why not pay him, uncle, and send him away?" queried the young man. "Pay him money!" Mr. Hopkins shrieked, while his long arms flew about like windmills; "pay him money! God forbid! When I do that there will be a hundred vagabonds here instead of one!" "Well, then," added the nephew, "if I were you, Uncle John, I would kick him out." "I cannot do that," the old man pleaded, "I am afraid!" "What!" the nephew retorted, "are you afraid of such a cur as that?" "No, no!" Mr. Hopkins whispered hoarsely, "I am not afraid of him, but afraid of God. Did you never read in the Bible how Dives treated Lazarus? Would you have me repeat the story and burn in hell forever?" That ended it.

On one of the last days of his earthly existence Mr. Hopkins called his devoted gardener to him and said: "I am beginning to hate this place, because it does not bring in money. I hate everything that does not bring in money. Did you ever feed hogs? Have you not observed that the strong animals bear away the ears of corn and that the weaker ones pursue them squealingly, in hopes that all or some of the treasure will be lost or dropped?" The gardener replied that the sketch was a true one. "Well, then," said Mr. Hopkins, "I am that strong hog. I have that big ear of corn, and every piggish rascal in Baltimore is intent upon stealing it or wresting it from me! Sir," he said, turned brusquely to the gardener, "do you think a very rich man is happy?" The gardener answered: "The extreme of poverty is a sad thing. The extreme of wealth, no doubt, bears with it many tribulations." Mr. Hopkins rejoined: "You are right, my friend; next to the hell of being utterly bereft of money is the purgatory of possessing a vast amount of it. I have a mission, and under its shadow I have accumulated wealth, but not happiness."

Sheep that Dive from Cliffs.

John Muir, the naturalist of the Sierra, writing of the wild sheep of the Sierra and of their well-authenticated habit of diving from precipices and alighting on their horns, relates the following anecdote:

"At the base of Sheep rock, one of the winter strongholds of the Shasta flocks, there lives a stockraiser who has the advantage of observing the movements of wild sheep every winter, and, in the course of conversation with him on the subject of their diving habits, he pointed to the front of a lava headland about 150 feet high, which is only 8 or 10 degrees out of the perpendicular. 'There,' said he, 'I followed a band of them fellows to the back of that rock yonder, and expected to capture them all, for I thought I had a dead thing on them. I got behind them on a narrow bench that runs along the face of the wall near the top, and comes to an end where they couldn't get away without falling and being killed; but they jumped off, and landed all right, as if that were the regular thing with them.'

"'What!' said I, 'jumped 150 feet! Did you see them do it?'

"'No,' he replied, 'I didn't see them going down, for I was behind them; but I saw them go off over the brink, and then I went below and found their tracks where they struck on the loose debris at the bottom. They sailed right off, and landed on their feet right side up. That's the kind of animal they is—beats anything else that goes on four legs.'"

Denver People.

A Denver correspondent of the Hartford Times says: To discriminate in speaking of society here is to prepare to receive the censure of some and the approval of others; but your correspondent can safely assert that it is decidedly a mixture. Culture is not a necessary qualification. It would seem that wealth is taken for an equivalent for education and refinement. Recent discoveries in the mines have made "bonanza kings," and paved the way to social as well as official position. But this city is not alone in this respect. During the day the city is thronged with people rushing to and fro, all full of business or cares of some kind. Let it be great or small business, a man goes about it just the same as if his success depended on the day's work. This is a noted characteristic of the average Denverite.

IT is a mistake to say that ideas govern the world. It is not so. The world is governed by sentiment.

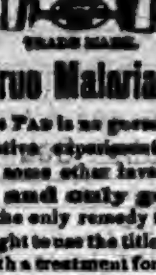
HOLMAN'S PAD

CURES Without MEDICINE Simply by Absorption



The Only True Malarial Antidote.

DR. HOLMAN'S PAD is no guess-work remedy—no feeble imitative experiment—no purloined hodge podge of some other inventor's idea; it is the original and only genuine curative Pad, the only remedy that has an honestly-acquired right to use the title-word "Pad" in connection with a treatment for chronic diseases of the Stomach, Liver and Spleen.

By a recently perfected improvement DR. HOLMAN has greatly increased the scope of the Pad's usefulness, and appreciably augmented its active curative power.

This great improvement gives HOLMAN'S PAD (with its Adjuvants) such complete and unfailing control over the most persistent and unyielding forms of Chronic Disease of the Stomach and Liver, as well as Malarial Blood-Poisoning, as to amply justify the eminent Professor Loomis' high encomium: "IT IS NEARER A UNIVERSAL PANACEA THAN ANYTHING IN MEDICINE!"

The success of HOLMAN'S PADS has inspired imitators who offer Pads similar in form and odor to the genuine HOLMAN PAD. Beware of these Bogus and Imitation Pads, gotten up to sell on the reputation of the GENUINE HOLMAN PAD.

Each Genuine Holman Pad bears the Private Revenue Stamp of the HOLMAN PAD COMPANY with the above Trade Mark printed in green.

Dr. Harter's
IRON
TONIC

Is a preparation of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and the Phosphates, associated with the Vegetable Aromatics. Endorsed by the Medical Profession, and recommended by them for Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Diseases, Want of Vitality, Nervous Prostration, Convalescence from Fevers and Chronic Chills and Fever. It serves every purpose where a TONIC is necessary.

Manufactured by The Dr. Harter Medicine Co., St. Louis.

The following is one of the very many testimonials we are receiving daily:

Gentlemen:—Some three months ago I began the use of DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC, upon the advice of many friends who knew its virtues. I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the TONIC. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the TONIC has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit.
Most gratefully yours,

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.

Scientists agree that ants possess something approaching to language.

The common garden spider has been known to live ten months without food.

Flies have been known to [illegible] after having been immersed twelve months in wine.

Pearls are sometimes so numerous in the pearl oyster that the animal cannot shut his shell, and so perishes.

Le Vaillant says that he heard a parrot repeat the Lord's prayer from beginning to end in the Dutch language.

A tame owl has been known to hop about upon the keys of a piano, apparently delighted with his performance.

The sense of smelling is less perfect in the lion than in most other animals. He hunts rather by sight than by smell.

Compressed air as a motive power has recently been used in England to run a locomotive. The experiment was regarded as a success.

By English law a boy is marriageable at 14 and a girl at 12. A Frenchman cannot marry at any age without the consent of his parents, if living.

A flea will eat ten times its own weight of provisions in a day, and will drag after it a chain a hundred times heavier than itself. It leaps a distance of at least 200 times its own length.

Two crows built a nest in one of the two fine plane trees in the center of the city of London, inside the archway in St. Paul's Churchyard. The plane trees in question are remarkable as the home each night of from 5,000 to 6,000 of the London sparrows.

Nerve impulses are conducted along the nerves very slowly in comparison to the speed of electricity along a copper wire. The latter travels 18,000,000 times as fast as a nerve impulse, and yet the nerve impulse travels with the speed of the fastest railroad train.

The waste of material in coal mining is enormous. It is estimated that only two-thirds of the coal in workable veins is taken out; there is a further loss of 25 per cent. in the preparation and delivery. The Reading Railroad Company has spent $300,000 in the attempt to utilize waste coal by burning it in locomotives constructed for the purpose.

There are 50 injurious insects in our vegetable gardens, 50 in our vineyards, 75 attack our apple trees, more than 100 injure our shade trees and more than 50 our grain fields. Seventy-five millions of dollars was the damage done to the wheat in Illinois in one season, and nearly ten years ago the annual loss in the United States, from insects alone, was $400,000,000.

At a meeting of the Maryland Academy of Sciences Dr. Theobald showed a species of beetle and gave the following figures: Weight of beetle, 2 grains; weight moved by it, 5¼ ounces—2,540 grains, or 1,320 times the weight of the beetle. A man weighing 150 pounds, endowed with the strength of this insect, should therefore be able to move 198,000 pounds, or nearly 100 tons.

In Jessamine county, Ky., a man by the name of Bowen would never enter his house except by the back door, and never leave except by the front. He selected early in life the spot for his burial, beneath an old oak tree, remote from all other graves, in an open field, and there was buried. Mr. [illegible] Duncan, of the same county, whose occupation, that of a carpenter, is altogether unfavorable to the pursuit of knowledge, is one of the most learned men, after a fashion, in America. He knows the date of every important event in the world's history, year, month and day, and, when essential, the minute. His knowledge of the family history of all prominent people is something marvelous.

The Forehead.

The upright forehead, with its various modifications of squareness and partial curving, generally denotes the sound and noble understanding, as opposed to the retreating form, which indicates the precise reverse. A merely high forehead does not, however, imply a good forehead; for the form, proportion, sloping, height, arching and position of the bone of the forehead, are tests of the mental power and character. Even the color and smoothness of the skin, together with the lines of the wrinkles, must be taken into account, for they express the passions and state of the mind. A perfect forehead should be one-third of the whole face, or equal to the nose in height, the covering skin clearer than the rest of the face, and smooth and free from wrinkles, yet have the power of wrinkling in deep thought, anger or pain. A forehead, to be perfect, should be, when seen in the profile, neither too upright nor too retreating. The higher the forehead, the more comprehension and less activity. The more compressed, firm and short, if not too short, the more concentrated and firm the character. The more curved the top, the more flexible and gentle the character; while the less curved—that is, the more square the top, the more determination, perseverance and sternness. If the forehead is perfectly upright from the eyebrows to the roots of the hair, there will be a deficient understanding; while a projecting forehead will denote imbecility, [illegible], weakness or stupidity, according as modified by the other features. On the other hand, the upright forehead, which is gently arched at the top, denotes a calm, cold, deep thinker.

How Queen Louise Kept Her Guest.

It is related of Queen Louise of Prussia, mother of the present Emperor William, that one of her frequent visitors, a special friend of her husband, was an old General called Koeberitz. This old soldier, after having dined with his royal friends, always manifested at a certain time a peculiar nervousness and restlessness, as if wishing to depart; while at other hours of the day he was only too glad to stay and have a friendly chat. But after dinner he always showed this great anxiety to get home. Louise was puzzled at the old man's strange behavior and resolved to find out the cause. She made inquiries of his steward, who, after a few questions, explained that the old General had indulged for so many years in the habit of smoking a long pipe after dinner that now he could not possibly do without it. The next time the old General came to dine, he exhibited, after the repast, the same nervous restlessness, and rose to take leave. Whereupon, Louise rose too, and said: "Wait a little, General; I want to show you something." She went into the next room. On her return, she held a long pipe already filled in one hand, and a burning wax-light and a "spill" in the other. Handing the pipe to the astonished old man, she said: "There, my old General, make yourself comfortable; this time you shall [illegible] us."

Personnel of Our Earlier Presidents.

The Presidents of the United States were generally men of good personal appearance. The extremes in point of stature were Polk and Lincoln—the latter of whom was six feet four, while the former was a little more than five feet three. Van Buren, also, was a small man. The first four were men of much dignity. Concerning Washington, nothing need be added on this point. He was the beau-ideal of manly beauty, even in his latter days, and when Stuart undertook to paint his portrait, the artist was so overcome with the majesty of his patron that at first he was unable to proceed with his task. John Adams lacked Washington's noble stature and grandeur of mien, but he was a man of much dignity. Jefferson was of noble personnel—tall, well-built and of imposing appearance. Madison had merely a respectable look, and, being dressed in black, presented much the appearance of a clergyman. Monroe and Washington were the only Presidents that served in the field during the Revolution. They were together at Trenton, where Monroe was a Lieutenant and received a ball which he carried through life. He was the last of the Revolutionary Presidents, and wore the cocked hat and continental uniform, which became him to a remarkable degree. John Quincy Adams, like his father, was stout, thick-set and deficient in point of stature. Jackson was tall and gaunt, with bristling hair, and a nervous but deficient countenance. Van Buren lacked personal dignity, and, indeed, was the most deficient of all our Presidents in physique excepting Polk. Harrison was a man of much personal dignity. Tyler was a spare-faced man, with a broad, thin nose, which gave him rather a comical appearance. It was his station as President that won the hand of the rich woman, Gardiner, rather than any personal attraction. Polk was, as has been said, a small man, with a cold, repulsive countenance, and a hard, staring pair of eyes that were singularly free from anything like a kindly, genial look. Taylor was a heavy-built man with a rough visage, as might have been expected of one whose life was passed on the frontier. He was bred a soldier, and loved the service. His face had a pleasant smile at times, but was often impressed with the stern character of military life. Fillmore had a lymphatic countenance—dull, except when lit up by business or pleasure. He was agreeable in society and interesting in conversation, to a degree much beyond many of his predecessors. He was of more than an average size, and of proportions that suggested dignity if not elegance. Buchanan was a feeble-looking old gentleman, whose white choker suggested the clerical order. His countenance, however, showed that he was not a man of progress, and rather suggested the fossil order of intellect.

Treatment of the Insane.

"Noisy as Bedlam," "mad as Bedlam" they used to say a generation or two ago; but few thought of the terrible reality hid under the familiar expression.

The word is corrupted from Bethlehem, from 1547 to 1814 a noted English mad-house. He who entered its door left hope behind. Indeed, even before entering, the most fearful terrors were brought to bear on his bewildered brain, dislodging whatever of reason might be left, under the absurd idea that the insane can be ruled by fear alone.

Within this house were life-long horrors beyond ordinary conception—cells, chains, clogs, strait-jackets, stripes, blows with the fist, noisome food, filth, foul air, drunken keepers.

Let one think of his own mother or daughter thrust into such a place! But the long succession of inmates, who, for three centuries, were relieved of the horrors of Bedlam only by death, were equally sensitive to suffering; equally shrank from terror; would have been equally susceptible to kindness; and might, by right methods, as easily have had their fevered brains cured or calmed.

It is only since 1793 that, in Paris, the law of love, with its miracles of healing, began to displace the law of force; and it is only forty years since the same change was inaugurated in England. In our own land many of the old ideas still prevail; and nothing can save our insane from the bad tendencies of unfit attendants but stringent laws and State supervision. Kind treatment alone tends to the cure of insanity, otherwise the disease tends to hopelessness.

Uses of Charcoal.

Charcoal, laid flat, while cold, on a burn, causes the pain to abate immediately; by leaving it on for an hour, the burn seems almost healed, when it is superficial. And charcoal is valuable for many other purposes. Tainted meat, surrounded with it, is sweetened; strewn over heaps of decomposed pelts, or over dead animals, it prevents an unpleasant odor. Foul water is purified by it. It is a great disinfectant, and sweetens the air if placed in trays around apartments. It is so very porous in its "minute interior" it absorbs and condenses gases most rapidly. One cubic inch of fresh charcoal will absorb nearly 100 of gaseous ammonia. Charcoal forms an unrivaled poultice for malignant wounds and sores, often corroding away dead flesh, reducing it one-quarter in six hours. In cases of what we call proud flesh it is invaluable. It gives no disagreeable odor, corrodes no metal, hurts no texture, injures no color, is a simple and safe sweetener and disinfectant. A teaspoonful of charcoal in half a glass of water often relieves a sick headache; it absorbs the gases and relieves the distended stomach pressing against the nerves, which extend from the stomach to the head.

A Syracuse woman has obtained $200 damages from a pool-room keeper for the ruination of her son. It is an important decision.

Origin of Familiar Phrases.

"You cannot say 'boo!' to a goose." When Ben Jonson, the dramatist, was introduced to a nobleman, the peer was so struck with his homely appearance that he exclaimed, "What! you are Ben Jonson? Why you look as if you could not say 'boo!' to a goose." "Boo!" exclaimed the witty dramatist, turning to the peer and making his bow.

"He's a peg too low." "Taking a man down a peg," may be traced to the pegging, or marking the drinking cup, which was introduced by St. Dunstan to check the intemperate habits of the times, by preventing one man from taking a larger draught than his companions. But the device proved the means of increasing the evil it was intended to remedy; for the most abstemious were required to drink precisely to a peg or pin, whether they could soberly take such a quantity or not.

"Blue Hen" is the nickname given to the State of Delaware. The origin of the term is this: Capt. Caldwell, an officer of the First Delaware regiment in the Revolution, was very fond of game cocks, but maintained that no cock was truly game unless its mother was a "blue hen." As he was an exceedingly popular man, his regiment was called "The Blue Hen," and the term was afterward transferred to the State and its inhabitants.

There's many a slip
'Twixt the cup and lip.

The ancient Greeks had the following story as to the origin of this proverb: A King of Thrace had planted a vineyard, when one of his slaves, whom he had much oppressed in that very work, prophesied that he should never taste of the wine produced in it. The monarch disregarded the prediction, and when at an entertainment he held a glassful of his own wine, made from the grapes of that vineyard, he sent for the slave, and asked him what he thought of his prophecy now. To which the other replied, "Many things fall out between the cup and the lip," and scarcely had he delivered this singular response before the news was brought that a monstrous boar was laying waste the favorite vineyard. The King, in a rage, put down the cup which he held in his hand, and hurried out with his people to attack the boar, but being too eager the boar rushed upon him and killed him without his having tasted of the wine.

CARRY THE NEWS.

[From the Attleboro Chronicle.]

Mr. John Etzensperger, manufacturing jeweler of North Attleboro', Mass., lately communicated to us the following: I suffered so much with pains in my arm that at times I was completely helpless. I used that incomparable remedy, St. Jacobs Oil, and was completely cured as if by magic.

Interviewing.

Interviewing has reached its lowest depth when we find newspaper reporters dancing attendance on a cat's-meat man. Yet this is what has happened in America, and we are compelled to confess that the reporter found the purveyor of skewered victuals far more interesting than most of the notabilities who are interviewed on the public behalf. The particular "cat-man" was indeed somewhat of a hero—one of the self-made men of whom cities are so proud when they die. It appears that when he began catering for pussy he went his rounds himself, but he has now grown so prosperous that four assistants carry his baskets for him. His cat customers do not heed the change, for they remark only the quality of the meat purveyed and not the quality of the purveyor. Left to themselves, the animals, though having the run of large warehouses, would starve, for American rats and mice will not remain in dry-goods stores, which are lean livings, so long as they have choice of fatter incumbencies; but, mice or no mice, the cat is an institution, and so the "cat-man" drives a thriving trade. A wicked rival tried to ruin our hero by hawking fish instead of meat, and pretending to pussy's owners that, as fish contained much phosphorus, and phosphorus made brains, no one could expect to have a really-smart cat that was not fed upon fish. But the "cat-man" promptly checkmated his rival by distributing a handbill to the effect that fish made cats mangy, whereas meat gave them sleek and glossy coats. As proved in the sequel, the New Yorkers prefer fat cats to smart ones, and the fish fellow had no chance against his antagonist.—London Telegraph.

[From the Detroit Post and Tribune.]

I have a little girl, said Mr. Henry Dale, of this city, in a conversation, who was troubled with a severe lameness in her legs, pronounced by some Erysipelas, by others Rheumatism. I had tried several remedies without effect, when I was induced to apply St. Jacobs Oil and I am happy to say that the use of but one bottle cured her, and she is now able to go to school again.

A Sea Waif.

A very curious anecdote is told concerning Admiral Bythesea, V. C., C. B., who retired from the service, after having for many years filled the post of Consulting Naval Officer to the Government of India. It is stated that the Admiral was picked up, when an infant, far out at sea, lashed to a bale of goods. A lady—presumably his mother—was with him, but she was dead, and there was no evidence of any kind by which the name of the waifs could be traced. The officers of the man-of-war which picked up the poor little infant did all they could by advertisement and inquiry to discover his relatives, and, finding all their attempts futile, they determined to adopt the child, to which they gave the name of "By the Sea." He was sent to a naval school, and, when old enough, joined the navy. By a happy coincidence the first ship in which he served was the one which had saved his life as an infant. He took to his profession, and during the Crimean war distinguished himself at the Island of Wardo, where he earned the Victoria Cross and the decoration of C. B. Later on his services in India gave him the Companionship of the Order of the Indian Empire, and he retired from the service with the rank of Admiral—a consummation little dreamed of by the kind-hearted officers who rescued and educated him.

"Now I Do Most Unhesitatingly Aver, as an old practitioner, that Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is among the most valuable discoveries of the nineteenth century. I cannot say too much in its behalf.

Whales.

The birthday of whales is celebrated occasionally in the public schools like that of the poets. The following is a little girl's composition prepared lately for that occasion:

"Whales is big fish. Whales live a long time and don't die when they get old. We had a railroad whale here a little time ago, just for show. Whales don't always travel that way. They mostly go by water so they can see more. Most people like to go by rail deadhead, but whales ain't like most people.

"A good while ago people used to make light of whales, but they don't some now; 'tain't quick enough. The lamps won't blow up.

"We wouldn't have no newspapers if it wasn't for coal oil, and railroads, and pistols and so forth; 'cause there wouldn't be no news.

"Whales is like shoes—right and left. Our railroad whale was a right whale. Sometimes a whale gets left when the tide goes out—kind of untied. Maybe there is other kind of whales. Some of the boys catch 'em in school, but I don't like that kind, they ain't interestin' to girls."

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: In the fall of 1876 I was taken with bleeding of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as a half dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of Dr. William Hall's Balsam for the Lungs. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years past. I write this hoping every one afflicted with diseased lungs will take Dr. William Hall's Balsam, and be convinced that consumption can be cured. I can positively say it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, IND. MAY 19, 1881.

J. A. BARNS, D. Y. HUSSELMAN, EDITORS.

DORSEY won't carry Indiana any more. His star-route contracts will be load enough by the time he is fully expelled.

ANOTHER comet has been discovered, this time by Prof. E. E. Barnard, of Nashville, Tennessee. As in the case of the other planet discovered recently, the lucky man receives the prize of $200 in gold, offered by Warner, the Safe Remedy man.

THE little station of Ray, formerly State Line, on the Jackson road, is fast becoming the Gretna Green of this part of the country. A justice has located himself conveniently on the north side of the state line, and holds himself in readiness to unite all transient Hoosiers in the holy bands of wedlock.

STANLEY MATTHEWS was last week confirmed by the senate, by a majority of one. Rather a close vote to put a man into so responsible a position as United States supreme judge for life. When one-half of the members of the senate find such serious objections to a former member of their own body, it does seem as if some better man would have been found for so elevated a position.

IT is reported that the Navajo Indians, numbering all told about 20,000, will soon go on the war path. They are causing great trouble in some parts of New Mexico, interfering with railroad work, stealing stock and whisky, and making themselves a nuisance generally. They even go so far as to charge some of the railroad men for the water used from springs and streams along the route.

THE two New York senators, Conkling and Platt, both sent in their resignations on Monday. This created great surprise in the senate, as it was not thought such a course would be taken. This gives the democrats a majority in that body, but it is not expected that any change in the organization or the officers will be made, but will tend to make the confirmation of Robertson certain. The legislature of New York is now in session, and it is believed that both men will be re-elected.

WE are in receipt of a letter from Mr. Theodore Reed, dated St. Paul, Minnesota, in which he speaks of the great northwest as follows: "I am delighted with the 'great northwest;' the climate is admirable, and every person seems to be making money. The Northern Pacific railroad has 870 miles in operation through the best wheat country in the world. Another division of 200 miles will be completed this year. The road had no serious trouble with snow during the past winter; all the blockades were on roads south of us. St. Paul and Minneapolis—twin cities—each claiming a population of 60,000, are making rapid strides in improvement, more especially the former."

SPEAKING of the alleged bargaining away of the Federal offices by Garfield last year, in order to induce Conkling and other New York leaders to go to work, the New York Herald says: "The first count in the indictment was that he offered either the secretaryship of the treasury, the control of the syndicate to fund a portion of the government debt, the mission to England, or the mission to France, provided a sum of money should be raised; and, as the Hubbell-letter shows, he was not particular or scrupulous as to how it should be done, to inspire courage and spirit into the desperate, waning canvass. The second count was that, without solicitation on the part of anyone, he offered, agreed and pledged himself to make no appointment to office in the city or state of New York without consultation with the acknowledged, undisputed leaders of the party in the state. No one ever made or thought of making the suggestion that he should do any of these things. From first to last, the conception and execution of the scheme was his own. The plot was born in his fertile, scheming brain. He is as responsible for its paternity as he is for the authorship of the letter to Oakes Ames, whom he begged to call the Credit-Mobilier dividend a loan, or for the $5,000 argument he made in the De Golyer contract fraud before "Boss" Shepherd. I challenge the denial; and when it is made by some responsible, recognized representative of the president, or representative even of the unscrupulous, impudent politician who molds him as he would a piece of putty, I shall be ready with the proof."

VAN AMBURGH, FROST & CO'S CONSOLIDATED LEVIATHAN SHOW.

Reorganized for the Season of 1881.

The Great Consolidated Van Amburgh's Golden Menagerie and Frost's Roman Circus and Colosseum will exhibit in Waterloo, Saturday, May 28. Without a doubt this is the largest show now traveling. It has been before the people of this country for over fifty years, and for 25 consecutive years, under the management of Mr. Hyatt Frost. In this stupendous aggregation will be found 36 cages of wild animals, birds and reptiles, comprising a rare collection of over 300 living curiosities. [illegible] the show has the largest [illegible] in this country, the only [illegible] in America, a herd of camels, a living [illegible], sea lions, Alaska walrus, giraffe, ant-eating bear, etc. A circus company composed of over 100 of the principal equestrians, acrobats, and athletes in the profession. The number of horses employed in transporting this huge institution is 212, and the number of men, women and children (including performers) is 325. The Great Van Amburgh Show has always been one of the leading institutions of this country, and we are assured that the combined menagerie and circus this season is far superior to all former years. That the great show will meet with liberal patronage in Waterloo will not admit of a doubt. It is meritorious as an exhibition, and its reputation for upright and honorable dealings with citizens, has gained for it a name most enviable. Remember it will be in Waterloo Saturday, May 28.

Neighborhood Nippings.

C. S. Myers, so long editor of the Hicksville Standard, is back on a visit.

General Milo S. Hascall has been appointed a member of the board of visitors at West Point.

There have been twenty-seven deaths among the old settlers of the Noble county association since the last meeting.

A gas well has been discovered on a farm near Kendallville, and the residence upon the farm illuminated by means of pipes laid from the well to the house.

C. L. Heath, an old resident of Angola, committed suicide about a week ago, by hanging. Prolonged and painful sickness is supposed to be the cause.

The Hicksville News says: Charles Hassett, of Waterloo, has arrived with his jewelry and watch repair store, and has opened up in Love's store. We now have three jewelry stores.

The people of Bedford, in this state, had a big scare over a wicked-looking wind-cloud that suddenly came over that place the 12th. It made a great deal of noise, and caused much excitement, but did no other damage.

Hicksvillville News: Regular trains are now running over the Paulding & Cecil railroad, arriving at Paulding at 11:30 a. m. and returning at 11:30 p. m., and connecting with trains on the Wabash.

Lagrange Standard: General Lew. Wallace is to be appointed minister to Turkey. We hope the general will have good luck in getting to this dish, and not miss the road, as he did the road to the battle of Shiloh.

The Antwerp Banner says: Lew Banks on Saturday last, shot a couple of terns, on the reservoir. The tern is a species of the sea-gull, and is described in natural history as a sea-bird. How they came to this country, or why they stay, is a mystery.

Who says corporations have no souls? The Pennsylvania railroad company is about to contract for 50,000 plants of various kinds, to be delivered at the stations between Jersey City and Philadelphia. The purpose is to have flower-beds at every station along the route. This is a delightful contribution to the pleasures of travel.

There was another wreck on the B. & O. at Albion about a week ago. Some scoundrel had placed a tie in the cattle guard, west of the depot, and a freight train, going at the rate of 25 miles an hour, ran into it and was thrown from the track. The engine rolled down an embankment, and eight or nine cars were smashed.

The B. & O. railroad company seems determined to make a clean sweep of the officials on this division. What their object can be in making so many changes is a mystery. The name of a new official is hardly known the length of this line before he is invited to step out of the traces to give place to another. Truly, railroading is an uncertain business; and the men appointed to official position on the B. & O. need only bring their dinners with them, for they may tarry but a day.—Garrett Herald.

Capt. T. B. Wightman, of Indianapolis, will be in charge of the club-house at Cedar Beach, near Syracuse, this summer. The Wabash Courier, in speaking of this summer resort, says: For the accommodation of visitors to Cedar Beach the C., W. & M. road will extend, until further notice, half-fare rates to Milford Junction. Negotiations are pending which will possibly result in securing half fare rates from the B. & O., thus enabling all visitors to Cedar Beach to make the trip at much less cost than at present.

Angola Herald: A small dog, supposed to be mad, was killed at the residence of John K. Morrow, last Sunday. It was a small terrier belonging to O. K. Ingersoll. It ran into the house just as the family had finished their dinner, snapping and barking at a frightful rate, jumping up the walls and upon the bureau in the room, and circling about until it was shot. Andrew Croson, Sr., his son Anthony and Vet. Ewers, all of whom saw the canine, concluded it was mad. John K. has shut up his hound, fearing it was bitten.

FAST TIME.—Wednesday last a telegram was sent from San Francisco to Boston, informing Mr. M. H. De Young, editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, of the dangerous illness of his mother. Mr. De Young immediately started westward, and telegraphed yesterday from Detroit to Chicago for a special train, which would reach Omaha in time to catch the overland train which starts from that place at noon. Mr. Trotter, general manager of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad, placed his special car at Mr. De Young's disposal. The special reached Council Bluffs at eleven this morning. The actual running time, distance four hundred and ninety-one miles, was twelve hours and twenty-four minutes. The last three hundred miles were made by one engine. This is regarded as remarkable time, being twenty minutes faster than the run made two years ago, when Congressman Whittaker, of Oregon, made his quick time from Omaha to Chicago, on his way to Washington.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Local and Miscellaneous.

—The base ball returns are beginning to come in. A young boy living in the south end, received a bat over the head which called forth the family physician and his father's financial box. We couldn't learn his name, but are reliably informed that the club was turned out of an ironwood stick.

—Robbers entered the store of Quince & Son, at St. Johns, last Wednesday night and took a number of articles and about ten dollars in cash. Sheriff Leas was notified on Thursday morning, and has been on the look-out for the light-fingered gents since that time. At the present writing there is no clue as to who committed the crime.

—The following gentlemen will serve as jurors for the term of court now in session. The grand jurors are John McOscar, Sam'l K. Firestone, John Stout, Geo. Headly, Sam'l Swihart and Nelson Griffith. The petit jurors are John W. Tarney, Wm. Walter, R. G. Daniels, L. D. Britton, J. R. Boland, Simon Ochs, Sam'l K. Firestone, C. A. Mead, George Barney, C. R. Wanamaker, Wm. Beughna and J. M. Lawrence.

—Mr. C. Reynolds, of Fairfield, has leased the ground of Wm. Ashelman and will establish a brick-yard in a short time. Mr. Reynolds comes highly recommended as a first-class moulder of clay and we bespeak for him a good financial result. This place and the country surrounding it gives ample territory for the sale of brick, and an enterprise of this kind properly managed, cannot fail to be prosperous.

—An old man named Jarvis Porter, living several miles east of town, fell upon the sidewalk on the north side of the square last Saturday and cut his face badly. Mr. Porter is quite an aged man, his joints are stiffened and his ways are not nimble, and a mistep upon his part is likely to cause him to fall. We think the tumble he received Saturday, was caused simply from the want of ability to balance himself.

—The agent for Van Amburgh's circus was in town last week making an effort to get accommodations for the employes of this combination. All of our hotels were willing to furnish food and lodging with the exception of S. C. Swineford. He was offered a half dollar more a day than his usual price, but he stubbornly refused. Mr. Swineford should bear in mind that circuses and all other public gatherings furnish a "fat take" for a number of our business men.

—With faltering pen we are compelled to record the fact that the juvenile brass band will be organized next week. Stuff your ears full of cotton, go off and hide yourself, do anything to allay the pangs and sufferings occasioned by a new band. The one that has been practising a year or more is hard enough to endure, let alone the struggling efforts of a new juvenile band. Give us Mother Shipton's prophecy before the opening of another morning's dawn.

—Sam. Lindley, an old man who has been teaming here for the past year or more, left town quite awhile before daylight Monday morning. Sammy had been appropriating wood that Sam. Gibson chopped "by the sweat of his brow" and he kicked liked a mule in a hornet's nest. He tried to compromise with Sam No. 1, but was dead broke and could not retaliate. Gibson got out the necessary papers to have the teamster hand-cuffed, but "Sammule" objected very emphatically to this mode of settling for his fuel, hence his sudden exit.

—Dull this week.

—Fire up the soda fount.

—Auburn will celebrate the 4th.

—Showmen are billing the county.

—Now the dandy's collar has to wilt.

—Abe. Canon has a new pair of pants.

—Picnics and pleasure[illegible] are popular now.

—Hindenbaugh has "touched up" his dray.

—Everybody will get paid off "after harvest."

—Snyder's house has reached the first story.

—Overcoats were very acceptable last Sunday.

—The Anderson carriage factory is crowded with work.

—We have been blessed with beautiful growing weather.

—Isaac Cool has made some improvements on his property.

—The trees are leaving out and are admired by everybody.

—What is home at this time of the year without a front gate?

—Soon come to the front: Flies, bed bugs, fleas and mosquitoes.

—Ice cream, lemonade, mosquitoes, fever and ague, and so forth.

—Hank Shull, the new milkman, has got it down to four cents a quart.

—Ed. Eldridge has fixed up his business room and put in a new cooler.

—The pestiferous worms are destroying the currant and gooseberry bushes.

—Fred. Buehrlager has a new tailor sign. It is on the "mock nix ouss" order.

—The first circus of the season will be at Waterloo one week from Saturday.

—Several of our citizens visited Pleasant Lake on the Sunday excursion.

—Remember the county Sunday-school convention at Newville, June 14 and 15.

—Sterm. Hollister is talking of putting another story on his business house.

—Denison & Kiplinger, of Waterloo, are selling a sack-holder that is highly complimented.

—Myers & Maxfield, pump men, had a difficult time in getting water at the lower grist-mill.

—Business is exceedingly dull in the matrimonial line. Won't revive until "after harvest."

—A lady by the name of Mrs. Ab. Coon, living in the south end of town, died last Friday.

—Go to McCord's for plants, such as tomatoes, cabbages, Yellow Jersey sweet potato s, etc.

—Sam and Charley Pummert, our popular barbers, are selling twelve shaves for one dollar.

—Charley Kntz has swapped horses again, and now he drives one of the nobbiest teams in town.

—A new sidewalk will be built along the south side of Eight street. It will make it quite convenient.

—Sunday was a cold, windy day, not altogether desirable to the church-going part of the community.

—John Kruger will make more improvements upon his ashery and abandon the manufacture of black salts.

—Now the small boy has a pocket full of peanuts and a bag of marbles. He earned the money dropping corn.

—The B. & O. and Lake Shore strikes still continue, and those interested seem to be of a firm, determined mind.

—A. M. Johnston and family have removed from Pleasant Lake, Steuben county, to Pierceton, Kosciusko county.

—"Somethin nails me to-day," ejaculated Judge Picker, when he fell and run a ten-penny through his hand.

—Hen fruit is down to ten cents a dozen. They taste better at this price than they do at twenty and twenty-five cents.

—The potato market is loaded down They dropped from $1.10 to 80 cents last Saturday, and "only the half has been told."

—Johnny Collier has quit working at Allen's livery barn, and is employed by George Clark to rub down his blooded steeds.

—Hi. Griswold and a force of workmen are fixing up some of the wrecked bridges that were damaged by the recent freshets.

—Billy [illegible] has a new sign, the handiwork of Abe. Canon. It is a tasty "bill board," the same as all work done at this shop.

—Buck Allen occupies the Canon residence on the corner of Van Buren and Twelfth streets. Don't see how he can straighten up.

—Philo Lockwood is an industrious fellow. He has whitewashed several trees this spring which are looming up in front of his residence.

—Hank Shull tried to kick down the first story of Ed. Eldridge's house on his way home Monday night, and he wasn't out of humor either.

—We hear that John L. Davis will extend his business room the entire length of the lot, making it thirty or forty feet larger than it is at present.

—Fred. Davis made a trip to Pleasant Lake the other day. He took an "artificial fountain" out on the lake and had more fun than a barrel of monkeys.

—A lightning-rod peddler having died recently, his widow had him cremated. She sifted enough brass out of his ashes to make a door-knocker.

—One of our attorneys got a good joke on himself in Squire Henderson's court last week. He introduced his evidence without having the jury sworn.

—Thomas D. Gross and State Bros. appear upon the criminal docket this term of court for violation of the liquor law. Starting out rather soon, ain't ye, boys?

—Mrs. F. Barclay, nee Mellissa Groag, has purchased Baldock's piano. Mr F. Long was captain of the squad that moved the furniture from the latter to the former residence.

—We erroneously stated in last week's issue, that Miss Linda Ochs, of Butler, was married. We now learn by a very polite letter from the lady herself, that such is not the case.

—Saturday night Marshal Scott and Joe Ruffner "hooked up" a team to the band wagon and hauled the boys around town. They filled the town full of music to the delight of many.

—Horace A. Hoffman is at home from the state university for a short time. He graduates in June. We predict for him a successful future.

—Sam Beck and Albert Yeagy, of Waterloo, "unloaded" part of their eggs north of town last week, by simply having some of the boxes slide off the wagon.

—"The Ship Came Sailing Over the Sea" and brought a bilious passenger. He took Dr. Marshall's Bromoline and was cured. Big bottles and price reasonable—fifty cents

—Last Friday night the b'hoys and g'hals of the south end had a pleasant hop at the residence of Mrs. Strause. They kept going it "eight hands 'round," until the wee sma' hours.

—The social of the Presbyterian church will be entertained in the basement of the church on next Wednesday afternoon. All are cordially invited.
MRS. H. ELSON, Sec'y.

—Benjamin Gaskill is going to have a little war of his own, if reports are correct. Ben. has been "wronged," and his persecutors shall have their names written in "letters of blood."

—Dave Baker, who has been working in the Republican office for several months, went to Fort Wayne last Monday. Dave is a good printer, and will not have to tramp far before he gets a "sit."

—Lovers of sport now amuse themselves by fishing. Nearly every day a party visits some of the lakes at our neighboring towns. We have failed, so far, to get a clear record of any fish story, but as usual the largest fish got away.

—Dr. Humphrey made an attempt to pull a tooth for a rural chap Tuesday evening. The rural chap became excited, and taking hold of the forceps, brought the aching ivory out a-flukin'.

—Lots of flowers now, girls, and it is a splendid time to win the heart and smile of the young man and prepare him for the ice cream season, by presenting him with numerous button-hole bouquets.

—Adam Forepaugh is advertising for a number of handsome ladies. Come to Auburn, Adam, if you want real beauties—we've got 'em. Our ladies are very presumptuous, but a big salary might induce some of them to travel.

—John Crow, of Garrett, and Lydia Funk, of Butler, were married at the Methodist parsonage last Wednesday evening. Also Maurice Elsner, of Baltimore, Md., and Ida Seward, of Vinton, Iowa, at the Swineford house last evening.

—Our friend Wm. L. Meese is meeting with good success in the marble and tombstone business. He sold a nice $300 monument last week. Mr. Meese keeps a nice line of goods, sells cheap and deals fair with his customers. When you want anything in his line, do not fail to call on him and get prices.

—The Butler Record is not to be sold as reported last week. The person from whom we received our information was one that we supposed knew, but appears to have been mistaken. We published it merely as an item of news and with no intention to misrepresent.

—The beautiful moonlight nights that we have been having for the past two weeks were enjoyed hugely by the young man and his "Dulcinea," strolling among the tomb-stones of the cemetery, at a time of night when "graveyards yawn and ghosts are dancing their usual highland fling."

—Father Young met with a serious accident at Waterloo last week. While coming through that town he was attacked by Peter Montavon and a lot of others, who held his horse, and right then and there did willfully and with malice aforethought put a bran new harness on the horse and then—let him go again.

—The farmer's oldest boy now puts on his heaviest boots, gets a grip on the plow handles, and, with his lines around his neck, yells and shouts and swears because the span don't "haw" and "gee" just right in turning the corners. You'd never suspect that he was the same fellow who has been raising havoc among the girls all winter with his stunning plaid ties and stand-up paper collars.

Personal Mention.

—One of Frank Strebe's boys is sick with fever.

—Jacob Brand, of Waterloo, called on us Tuesday.

—We are sorry to state that Luther Roth is looking poorly.

—Little Eddie and Mattie McKay are both sick with measles.

—A nephew of Mrs. S. C. Swineford is lying quite sick at the hotel.

—Harry Weamer and O. L. Young, of Butler were in town Monday.

—Thos. H. Sprott, made a business trip to Fort Wayne, Tuesday.

—H. J. Lowry, of the Republican, has been sick this week. We weep.

—Ezra Hoffman will wrap up goods at Hoff's establishment next week.

—A young man named Hale, of Elkhart, is visiting with Charley Jones.

—Joe. Pommert, of Edgerton, Ohio, is passing away a few days in the city.

—Willie Shryock, of Huntertown, is jerking teeth at Dick Elson's shop this week.

—Mr. & Mrs. A. W. Bair, of Fairfield Center, made us a pleasant visit on Saturday.

—Hon. L. D. Britton and daughter Minnie, of Corunna, were guests of M. B. Willis Saturday.

—Mrs. Sadie Ruffner, who has been at Fort Wayne for several weeks, has returned home again.

—C. K. Baxter, of the Press, was down here Monday with an entire new outfit on—straw hat and all.

—Barney Dearborn and Geo. Knaur, of Corunna, stopped here Saturday on their way from St. Joe.

F. M. Gunsenhouser, of Newville, dropped in to see us yesterday. He has joined the married brigade.

—Mr. and Mrs. Forkner, managers of the DeKalb House at Garrett, were in town last Friday, guests of the Swineford.

—O. A. Rhine, of the Goshen Independent, called at our office Monday. We are glad to see our editorial friends doing well.

—O. C. Shiffer, clerk at the Junction for the B. & O., has been appointed agent of that road at Avilla. A deserved promotion.

Supreme Court Commissioner Best came up from Indianapolis yesterday to make some disposition of his business in court here.

—We learn that Jim. Orr, at Corunna, is sinking away fast with consumption. About a year ago he appeared to be a strong, robust man.

—Jimmy Rose will go west in a few weeks. He is certainly not going to grow up, and what his anticipations are is beyond our comprehension.

—E. E. Williams, who formerly resided here, and now lives at Ada, Ohio, is shaking hands with his young friends in the city. He grows like a stalk of sweet-corn after a refreshing rain.

—F. B. Berry, and nephew and namesake, F. B. Berry, of Ohio, dropped in to pay their respects to the COURIER Tuesday. Mr. B. jr. seems to be well pleased with Auburn and its institutions.

—Mr. Tom. Hartford's daughter, living at Garrett, has been very low with spotted fever, but we are informed that she is recovering rapidly. Dr. Cowan, of this place, is the attending physician.

FIRST OF THE SEASON.

The Oldest on the Road—Larger Than Ever.

Van Amburgh & Co's. Great Golden Menagerie has been consolidated with Frost's Roman Circus and Colosseum, for the season of 1881, and will pitch its thirteen tents in Waterloo, Saturday, May 28. This is the 61st consecutive year of the Van Amburgh Menagerie—the oldest show organization in the world—which has always been recognized as the leading exhibition of wild animals, both in this country and in Europe. As years have gone by, the Van Amburgh show has striven to keep pace with the times, and to-day it boasts of a greater variety of beasts, birds and reptiles than any other exhibition on the continent. The present consolidation with Mr. Hyatt Frost's Roman Circus and Colosseum, places the combination in the very foreground of all institutions of a like character. It is a pleasure for us to chronicle the fact that no one of the thousands that will fill the spacious tent will be annoyed by that nuisance found and encouraged in similar institutions—we allude to the chronic lemonade and candy peddler. The audiences will not be annoyed by this impecunious individual. Another, and if anything, better arrangement, is the fact that swindlers of all kinds and descriptions are ignored and utterly repudiated by the Van Amburgh, Frost & Co's. Combination. Mr. Frost, the veteran manager, keeps constantly employed, at his own expense, a U. S. detective for the protection of all against the schemes and devices of the light-fingered gentry who follow in the wake of all great shows.

The monster show, as now organized, gives constant employment to over 250 laborers, and has a troupe of nearly 100 lady and gentleman performers; among the latter no less than 12 equestriennes, and of the latter the ONLY female hurdle rider in the world. It requires no prophet's ken to see that we are to have a superb show, and we predict crowded tents at each performance.

Court.

—Court was called on Monday by Judge Tousley who attended some preliminary business. Then, on account of ill health, he appointed Judge Carpenter to hold court. The latter took the oath of office and at once entered upon the discharge of his duties as Judge for this term. The following cases have been dismissed: State, ex. rel. Matheny vs. Spencer, Klotz vs. Beish, Moore vs. McCormack et al., Snyder vs. Weamer, Whitmer vs. Swineford, Kelly et al. vs. Crane et. al.

The following state cases have been disposed of: State vs. Tarney, State vs. Garfield, State vs. Jos. Hartman, continued; State vs Sterben, defendant plead guilty and was fined $1 and costs; Myron Miller, John Rhodarmer, Walter Guthrie, Dallas Headly, Louis Greist and H. Hathaway were tried for riot, or in other words for making too much noise in the quiet village of Newville. They were very promptly acquitted by the jury and permitted to go hence without day.

Kahn vs. Rinehart et al: judgment for plff. $66.67. Emma Shaw vs. John W. Shaw, divorce granted to plaintiff, also the custody of her three children. As we go to press Myron Miller is on trial for an attempt to provoke an assault. They say he made a snoot at a man.

—Rev. W. F. Matthews, who officiated at the Presbyterian church last sabbath, seems to have made a good impression upon the members of the congregation and will probably be employed by them.

MARRIAGES.

TROUT—BUSS.—At the residence of the bride's parents, on Thursday, May 12, Mr. H. E. Trout, of Waterloo, to Miss Frankie Buss, of Fairfield township, Rev. F. E. Christine officiating.

The happy couple took a trip to Detroit and Toledo, returning home this week. If anyone expresses a doubt as to the future happiness of the young couple, let it be known that they remembered the printer in the way of a liberal supply of cake, which settles the whole matter.

GUNSENHOUSER—HULL.—In Newville, at the residence of Dr. Hull, May 11, 1881, by Rev. W. H. Clay, Mr. F. M. Gunsenhouser and Miss Minnie M. Hull, both of this county.

Waterloo.

Mrs. John Leas is still very sick.

John C. Brand is in Michigan this week.

Robert Patterson spent Saturday and Sunday at home.

Mr. Cheyney has moved his family to Ohio, and will follow them shortly.

Dr. Winslow is much better, and is now able to be out a little while each day.

Preparation is going on for decoration services one week from next Monday.

J. D. McAnally has been making some more improvements about his premises.

Everybody was out buggy riding last Sunday. Also the family or girl thereunto belonging.

There was an excursion over the Jackson road last Sunday. A party from Ft. Wayne had a picnic at Pleasant Lake.

J. P. McCague is building an extensive additon to his house. He will soon have one of the most desirable residences in the place.

John Koons went to Indianapolis on Monday as representative to the Grand Lodge of Odd-Fellows, which meets there this week.

Dr. C. Martz of Fairfield Center, has rented rooms over H. T. Smith's store, and will practice medicine on the homeopathic plan.

The hotels all refuse to entertain the showmen. S. J. Locke has come to the rescue and provided suitable accomodations for all of them.

S. R. Rickel fell from the roof of J. D. Kelley's house in Smithfield, Tuesday, breaking his collar bone, and receiving other severe injuries.

J. D. Kelley had a runaway yesterday going home. He was thrown out, had two or three ribs broken and was otherwise hurt, but not dangerously.

Charlie Clark and J. M. Somers are ahead as bird catchers. They trapped seven Baltimore orioles last Saturday morning before nine o'clock.

R. H. Murch, conductor on the Wabash road, was in town Thursday. He is to have a position on the new division from Butler to Detroit, and will remove his family to Butler.

The festive bill-poster has ornamented all the available space in town, and children of all ages, from 5 to 75 are having their heads turned looking at all sorts of impossible animals.

One of our best looking young ladies went fishing last week and caught a Trout that weighed several pounds. And about the same time, the aforesaid Trout helped himself to a very nice Buss.

—The Eckhart Carriage Works have made the following sales since last Thursday: George Pepple, one phaeton and one two-seated extension top carriage, both first-class; Samuel H. Long, one two-seated buggy; George M. Eric, of Fairfield, one top carriage; James B. Decker, Edgerton, Ohio, one two-seated extension top carriage.

—Weamer, of the Butler Record, is a philanthropist of the standard measure. He, last week, in one sentence, paid more attention to his neighbor's debts than he has in all his life bestowed on his own.

—Constipation of the bowels biliousness, impure blood, general debility are all cured by Dr. Marshall's Bromoline, the Big Blood and Liver cure. Sold by all druggists.

—The elm tree on Fourteenth street is simply grand, her branches reaching from one side to the other of the thoroughfare. It would be a capital place for the young man and his girl to do their cooing under the radiant beams of star and moonlight.

—Frank Sterhn walked up to the bar of justice Tuesday and counted out $20, which pays in full for his recent arrest.

—Some fellow who had "snakes" was selling patent medicine on the street yesterday.

—Pleasant Lake will be ready to receive picnic parties by the 20th of May. The grand opening will be June 2.

—The action of Conkling and Platt in resigning was sustained by the general republican committee of New York.

—The Auburn Woolen Mills are prepared to work up your wool for you. Highest cash prices will be paid for wool. 1t

—Senators Conkling and Platt, of N. Y. have both resigned. They act like a pair of school boys who have got whipped and are going home to tell their mamas about it.

—In the Press of last week we are charged with a lack of sand in not announcing that the village officers over at Butler were all republicans. Just as though the democrats had never been beaten before.

Spencerville.

'Squire Barney has returned.

Rebecca Kester Sundayed out of town.

Hats and bonnets just received at the millinery store.

A new lot of goods received at the millinery store.

T. Rhoades' brother paid him a short visit last week.

Frank Lancaster Sundayed in Garrett. Where else, Frank?

Mrs. Allen spent Saturday and Sunday with her parents, Wm. Tyndall.

Dr. T. Dills, of Fort Wayne, was visiting his brother, J. W. Dills, last week.

Mark Barney, of St. Joe, was in town Sunday. He took dinner at the Pioneer house.

Miss Carrie Kinsey spent a few days at home on account of her mother being much worse.

Becks Erick has recovered from a protracted illness. Hereafter, Becks, do not make two engagements for one evening.

Miss Alice McKay and Miss Ella Kelso drove down to Fort Wayne Sunday, and returned Monday evening. They report a very pleasant time.

Rev. Synder, of Davenport, Iowa, preached at the Lutheran church on Sunday in behalf of home missions. He will spend several days in this place.

A number of our young people "took in" the literary at Newville Thursday night. Girls, we know your voices are sweet, but do not pitch so high another time, as it is injurious to the voice.

We invite the ladies of Spencerville to call and examine the large stock of nobby hats and bonnets just received at the millinery store. RUSTIC.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

Warrants have been issued in Philadelphia for the arrest of five persons charged with having committed frauds upon the Government in connection with the issue of worthless bonds by [illegible] contractors. Three of the conspirators have already been arrested and placed under $5,000 bonds.

The deaths in New York from cerebro-spinal meningitis, otherwise known as spotted fever, have been of sufficient frequency to call for special action by the Health Department, which is endeavoring to prevent an epidemic of the disease. The total number of cases reported since January is 268, of which 228 were fatal....The Federal Grand Jury has indicted fourteen Captains of European steamships for bringing an excess of passengers. Two of the indictments are against Capt. Brandt and Capt. Myers, both of whom committed suicide a few weeks ago.... A rowboat containing a fishing party of four was capsized near Trembly point, on Staten Island sound, and Frederick Stark, Charles Stark, his son, aged 6 years, and David Roach were drowned....The Pennsylvania Senate has adopted a resolution providing for the transfer of the remains of William Penn from Jordan's Meeting House graveyard, in Buckinghamshire, England, to Philadelphia.

The paper-mill at Niagara falls was burned just as it had started up with new machinery. The loss is $125,000.

THE WEST.

The Chicago Times prints an exhaustive review of the condition and prospects of the wheat crop. An expanded acreage and strong growth are reported from Dakota, Minnesota and Nebraska, while Iowa, Illinois and Wisconsin have not sown as largely as usual, and the crop is not up to the average in condition. In the region near Chicago the farmers show a decided preference for winter grain.... With the exception of Maud S. and St. Julian, for whom a special purse will be offered, the name of every flyer of national renown appears in the list of 187 entries made for the summer trotting meeting at Chicago....Having closed the Cincinnati theaters on Sunday, Mayor Means has served the saloon-keepers with a printed notice that he will enforce the Stubbs law should they dare to open their doors on the Sabbath.

A coal-shaft in Osage county, Kan., caught fire from a furnace in the air shaft. Twenty-two men were at work at the time, but fifteen of them were rescued. The remaining seven, with three others who had gone to their assistance, were taken out dead.

It is evident that the Utes are preparing to resist the execution of the treaty. The matter has been complicated by the indictment of Agent Berry and Commissioner Meacham, at Denver, for complicity in the murder of Jackson, the freighter.

A correspondent which the Chicago Tribune dispatched to the flooded regions of the Upper Missouri river sends to that journal a graphic description of the ruin wrought by the high water in Dakota. The bulk of the suffering from the flood, he reports, is confined to the territory between Yankton and Elk Point. In the river bottom, between these points, hundreds of once fertile farms are now covered with five feet of sand. In addition to their present mournful condition the unhappy dwellers in the inundated districts have to face the distressing prospect of wholesale malaria, resulting from the decomposition of thousands of dead animals, and of future want, because it has been necessary to eat up all the grain and vegetable seeds saved for this year's crops in order to sustain life. The situation of these people is one that cries aloud for immediate relief in the way of donations of money and articles of food.—The Quartermaster at Yankton has issued nearly 50,000 rations to the sufferers by the flood. Capt. Clague, who was sent by Gen. Terry on a tour of investigation, reports that the officers at Fort Randall saved 700 persons from possible starvation....The Pope has appointed the Very Rev. John McMullen, Vicar General of the Archdiocese of Chicago, to be Bishop of the new Diocese of Davenport, and the Very Rev. Killian C. Flasch, of Milwaukee, to be Bishop of the Diocese of La Crosse, Wis.

Emil Danks, living near Stoughton, Wis., assaulted his mother with a hatchet and cut her throat. After he supposed his bloody work was done, he deliberately severed his own windpipe. Both will die.

Two children of Charles Lafever, a boy and a girl, aged 4 and 6 years respectively, were drowned in the mill-race at Rochester, Minn.

The machinery of a glucose factory at Buffalo is to be removed to Peoria, at an expense of $50,000....More than 4,000 emigrants passed through Chicago in one day, last week.

THE SOUTH.

G. Frost, President of the Franco-Texan Land Company, has absconded from Weatherford, Texas, leaving heavy debts behind him. It is said he appropriated $20,000 of the company's money.

A negro boy, aged 18, who admitted assaulting an 8-year-old negro girl and afterward murdering her in a most brutal manner, was taken from the jail at Sparta, La., and shot to death by a party of fifty-eight men, mostly colored.

Lieut. Bullis, of the Twenty-fourth Infantry, commanding the Seminole scouts, reports from his camp, about ten miles south of the mouth of the Pecos river, in Texas, that he attacked an Indian camp, killed four bucks and one squaw, captured one boy, and wounded one squaw and twenty-one horses. The Indians were the same who killed a family named McLaurin in Frio Canon some time ago.... A statue of Stonewall Jackson in Metairie Cemetery, New Orleans, was unveiled in the presence of several thousand persons. Gen. Fitzhugh Lee delivered the address, and Jeff. Davis responded to calls by a brief speech....Four negroes at work on an Alabama and Great Southern construction train were killed near Tuscaloosa, Ala. They were digging under a bank when it caved in upon them.... Two chivalric Georgians named Hart and Register fought a duel with knives in Sumter county, Ga. The fight resulted in the death of both....Cowpens monument, at Spartanburg, S. C., was unveiled on the 11th inst., by young ladies descended from heroes of the battle.

A terrible tragedy is reported by telegraph from Talladega, Ala. "A picnic excursion went out to the falls on the river. Among the number was Dr. William Toole, who was accompanied by his little daughter, a child of 7 years. The mother of the little girl had dressed her up very nicely, putting on gold ornaments and a diamond pin. During the early part of the afternoon the child was missed, and the father went in search of her. As he approached the falls he saw a negro man carrying something with flying garments, and, rushing at him, he saw that it was the dead body of his child. The negro had murdered her, stripped her of her jewelry, and was about to throw her body over the falls. The frantic father rushed on the savage fiend; grappled with him, and a furious fight took place over the body of the child. The father's cries for help were responded to by some of the picnic party. The negro was overpowered, and a rope being improvised he was hung to a tree."

GENERAL.

The Mexican Senate passed a bill giving the President authority to make contracts for the construction of railroads during a recess of Congress....In Palmer & Sullivan's camp, near Acambaro, Mexico, Engineer Sackrider became insane and killed Engineers Martin and Jones. Sackrider was then killed by the chief of the party, a man named Foley.

The fifty-fourth annual meeting of the Home Missionary Society was held in New York last week, under the Presidency of the Rev. Theodore D. Woolsey. The receipts of the society for the past year amounted to $290,952 and the expenditures to $289,111. There are 1,032 ministers in the employ of the society.... The annual report of the American Tract Society shows donations and legacies, $105,000; sales, over $256,000; rents, nearly $12,000; which, with other resources, make the receipts for the year [illegible]. The number of volumes of Bibles and Testaments printed during the year [illegible], and tracts, etc., 4,974,454; making a total of over 72,000,000 pages.

The sixty-first annual meeting of the American Bible Society was held in New York last week. The annual report shows: Life members, [illegible]; new auxiliaries organized, 39; receipts during the past year, [illegible],484, while [illegible] has been appropriated for foreign work during the year. Of the Bibles, [illegible] copies were issued at the Bible House, [illegible] imported from abroad, 375,982 printed abroad, 54,988 purchased, 1,152,496 issued at home and 316,106 abroad. Three hundred and fifty-six volumes were issued for the blind, making the aggregate 12,349 volumes in thirty-eight years. Since the organization the issues of the society amount to 38,882,811. Gratuitous work for the year, $342,[illegible]....A Catholic Young Men's Convention was in session in Chicago last week. A colored delegate read a paper demonstrating that the record of the Catholic church on the slavery question in all times is an abolition record. After the reading of the paper, resolutions were adopted inviting the colored people to full fellowship, on terms of perfect equality. Resolutions were also adopted denouncing the public-school system of the United States, and predicting all manner of evil if that system should be maintained.... The Brewers' Association, in session at Chicago, last week, resolved to test the constitutionality of the Kansas Prohibition law in the Supreme Court....The Marquis of Lorne will, it is rumored, retire from the Governor Generalship of Canada after his return from his Manitoba journey.

POLITICAL.

Chairman Jewell, of the Republican National Committee, has issued a circular inviting expressions of opinion from Republicans throughout the country in regard to the best methods or rules which should be adopted for electing delegates to the next National Convention in 1884.

The State Convention of the Greenback-Labor party, of Iowa, has been called to meet at Marshalltown, on the 1st day of June.

There is talk in Ohio political circles of the Democrats bringing out ex-Senator Thurman as a candidate for Governor in the coming fall campaign.

An Associated Press telegram from Washington says: "The report was revived and generally circulated to-day that Judge Davis, of Illinois, will resign his seat in the Senate. The Western Associated Press reporter obtained an interview with Senator Davis, who pronounced the report entirely groundless, and said he had no idea of resigning, and had not thought of such a thing."

WASHINGTON.

The President, acting on the advice of the Secretary of War and Gens. Sheridan and Sherman, has decided to abolish the recently organized Department of the Gulf, and reduce the number of departments to what they were before the recent changes made by President Hayes. Gen. Schofield, who commands the Gulf Department, is placed on waiting orders, but with full pay. The Gulf Department becomes part of the Division of the Missouri, with Gen. Sheridan in command; the Pacific Division will be commanded by Gen. McDowell, as at present, and the Atlantic Division by Gen. Hancock.

A Washington dispatch says that "the evidence which is daily accumulating against the ring of fraudulent mail contractors, bidders, bondsmen, Postmasters and intermediaries is both direct, documentary and circumstantial. The prosecutions will be conducted in a dozen States, and in nearly, if not all, the Territories. Besides this evidence for criminal prosecution the Postmaster General is empowered and in position to recover a very large amount of the money got from the treasury in the name of 'expedited' and increased mail service. On one route a contractor has already been fined $31,000, which will lead also to criminal proceedings against a number of Government officers whose connection with the fraud is now clearly established."

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

In the Senate on the morning of Friday, May 6, Mr. Dawes made an attempt to secure action on the resolution for the election of Senate officers, but the Democratic Senators resumed their tactics of alternating motions to go into executive session and to adjourn, until Dawes gave up the fight for the day, and, upon his motion, the Senate went into executive session. When the doors reopened the Senate adjourned.

On the meeting of the Senate on Monday, the 9th inst., Mr. Ransom called up the resolutions offered by him March 15, directing the Committee on Commerce to inquire into the condition of the Potomac river front of the city of Washington, the navigation of said river, and the effect of a bridge across the same with regard to navigation, floods and the health of the city, and to report at the next session what steps, if any, should be taken with reference thereto. Adopted. Mr. Kellogg offered a resolution calling on the Postmaster General, Secretaries of War, Navy, State and Treasury for the names of all clerks and other employes in their respective departments, together with the date of their appointment, the State to which each is charged, and the persons on whose recommendation each was appointed. On objection from Mr. Ferry, the resolution was laid over under the rules. The Senate, in executive session, confirmed Postmasters Henry Davis, of Bedford, Ind.; Benjamin W. Sholty, of Decatur, Ind.; George E. Wood, of Mitchell, Ind., and Isaac T. Brown, of Columbus, Ind. After a very short session a caucus of Republican Senators was held which remained in session about six hours. Senator Conkling instead of going into caucus, entered a committee-room and remained there until the caucus sent a request that he would join in its deliberations. A proposal or suggestion to rule out Robertson's case for action by agreeing to act only on nominations to all existing vacancies was speedily discarded, as such a rule would include fully half the nominations made. However, a general discussion arose, participated in by Messrs. Blair, Hawley, Frye, Edmunds, Dawes, and, in fact, by nearly all the Senators present. The discussion took a wide range, and embraced all the topics now of interest to the Republican party. Much of the time was consumed in debating the policy of continuing the fight for the election of Gorham and Riddleberger. Some Senators opposed the policy of renewing the fight, and several who are warm friends of the President declared that they would not again join in the fight for Gorham and Riddleberger; that new and more acceptable nominations would have to be made to induce them to resume their former stand. Conkling made a speech of over an hour, stating his objections to Robertson, admitting that Arthur and Platt carried his ultimatum to the President, and appealing to the Republicans to sustain him. He dwelt more particularly on what he called the "President's usurpation and invasion of the Senate's rights and privileges," and said: "If the Senate did not maintain its rights, they would be taken from that body." Edmunds and Dawes, it is understood, spoke, saying that, if the President attempted to usurp any functions of the Senate, they would resist, but their speeches were rather noncommittal, though some construe them as favorable to Conkling. The caucus adjourned finally without reaching any conclusion, to meet again next day.

The Senate met at the usual hour on Tuesday, May 10, and at once went into executive session, and confirmed the following nominations: Gen. Longstreet, United States Marshal for Georgia; Absalom Blythe, United States Marshal for South Carolina; Samuel W. Melton, United States District Attorney for South Carolina; Philip H. Emerson, Associate Judge of the Supreme Court of Utah; and Albert B. Woodcock, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Third district of Illinois. The President nominated Judge Thomas A. McMorris, of Colorado, Commissioner to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Ute Indians of Colorado. Also, the following Postmasters: Jerome H. Fee, of Adrian, Mich., and Joseph C. Dickey, of Waterville, Kan. The Republican Senators were in caucus again for nearly six hours, and, contrary to expectation, reached no conclusion. No committee was appointed to-day to wait upon the President, nor was any time fixed for an adjourned caucus. Everything was left to future consideration, and the caucus adjourned subject to the call of the Chairman, Mr. Anthony. During the protracted session nearly every Senator spoke. No speech exceeded five minutes in length. The burden of all the speeches was a great desire to avoid a split in the party, and a consideration of the various propositions was of compromise.

The Senate went into executive session soon after the hour of convening on Wednesday, May 11, and confirmed the following nominations: Michael J. Kramer, now Minister to Denmark, for Minister to Switzerland; George P. Pomeroy, of New Jersey, to be Secretary of the United States Legation at Paris; Thomas A. M. Morris, of Colorado, to be a member of the Ute Commission, vice J. B. Bowman, resigned; George W. Atkinson, United States Marshal of West Virginia; John B. Stickney, District Attorney for Northern Florida; Charles M. Wilder, to be Postmaster at Columbia, S. C.; and A. Newton Kimball, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Jackson, Miss. The case of Stanley Matthews, nominated for Judge of the Supreme Court, then came up. Messrs. Bayard and Edmunds made strong speeches opposing the confirmation, saying that Matthews had not the necessary qualifications for the exalted position of Supreme Court Judge; that he was only a mere politician. Mr. Edgerton, the new Senator from Minnesota, also spoke against Matthews, claiming that he was not acquainted with the circuit to which he had been nominated. He held that the nominee should come from among the lawyers of that circuit. Mr. Ingalls made the principal speech in favor of Matthews. Senator Sherman put a few questions to the opponents of Matthews in order to reply to points made against him.

On the morning of Thursday, May 12, Mr. McDill called up the resolution directing that hereafter there shall be contained in the official register of the United States information as to the Congressional district from which each Government employe is appointed. Mr. Brown offered an amendment providing that it should also contain information as to whether such employes are white or colored. Mr. Hoar offered a resolution directing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to inquire and report at the next session of Congress what measures are needful to secure the ascertainment and declaration of the result of the election of President and Vice President. Adopted. There was a sharp discussion before going into executive session over Kellogg's resolution for information about clerical appointments in the several departments. Stanley Matthews' confirmation took up the whole executive session. This was affected, by a vote of 24 to 23, notwithstanding the adverse report of the Judiciary Committee.

Petroleum for Coughs.

Dr. Moubro, writing to the Gazette des Hopitaux, of Paris, gives his experience of petroleum capsules in simple and chronic bronchitis. This balsamic had been brought before the Therapeutic Society by Dr. Blache a year ago, at the suggestion of a Paris chemist, who named it Gabian oil, in order to prevent public prejudice. Each capsule contains twenty-five centigrammes of pure petroleum, the ordinary oil not being used, as it has to be distilled in contact with sulphuric acid to render it fit for lighting purposes. At the Hopital Beaujon, where these capsules have been freely ordered for chronic bronchitis, a rapid diminution of the secretion and fits of coughing was observed. In tuberculosis this medicine gave encouraging results.

Progress on the Jump.

"I am proud of dis importunity to address you," remarked Bradder Gardner, of the Lime-kiln Club, "and, as an honorary member of de club fur de last two y'ars, I have been deeply interested in all your plans an' purceedins. De oder night on a freight train between Richmond an' Washington, I got to thinking ober what progress de cull'd race of dis kentry had made in de last fifteen y'ars, an' I jumped from dat to de progress of de world. What did we have in dis world 100 y'ars ago worth libin fur? Dar wasn't a grindstun, cider-mill, hoss-radish-grater, bootjack or street kyar to be found, an' sich a thing as a lemonade wid a straw in it was not eben dreamed of. I tell you dis world am jumpin' 'long right smart. We has got about all dat any world wants, an' yit de wheels of genius, science an' art am not gwine to stop. Fifty y'ars ago we all believed in ghosts. To-day we believe in big bridges, long tunnels, immense ingins and fast trains. Twenty y'ars ago de howlin' of a dog at midnight would make a whole nayburhood shiber wid fear of death. Let a dog open his yawp to-night an' a dozen men would ris from deir beds to pelt him off de block wid taters an' clubs an' boot-jacks. Ten y'ars ago when a man entered a barber-shop he foun' no one dar' but de barber. To-day he finds a boy to black his butes an' brush his coat an' talk polyticks an' sing him outin a quarter of a dollar. Fifteen y'ars ago a man who stole a hoss an' got away wid it was counted sharp. Nowadays we doan' flatter de pusson who can't copper half de cash in a bank vault. Progress am on de jump, an' de cull'd man am pushin' clus up to de leadin' hoss. He's gwine to git second money, an' doan' you forgit it. I simply say to you, keep yer eyes wide open; doan' let your feet grow at de expense of yer head; pay cash down as fur as ye kin; git up airly in de mornin', an' doan' leave de wood-shed doah open when ye go to bed. You can't obertake de white man in dis race of progress, but you kin keep so clus to him dat he won't have no time to stop an' look around. Wid dese few remarks, frown off widout a palpable effort, an' intended to execute your harmonious feelings, I return my thanks and will expectorate to my cha'r."

Flint-Lock and Percussion Cap.

The flint-lock musket and fowling-piece died hard, as will be apparent to all who remember that in 1807 the Rev. Mr. Forsyth took out the first patent for a percussion gun, and that it took at least twenty years from that date for the weapon to be generally accepted and employed by English sportsmen, and thirty years from 1807 for it to be adopted by the British army. Such is the ineradicable conservatism of the British nation, and of its Governmental departments, that every great soldier who had won his spurs in the Peninsular war, including, among many others, the Iron Duke and Sir Charles James Napier, wrote absurd platitudes against "the new-fangled substitute for the glorious weapon with which our soldiers won Albuera, Salamanca and Waterloo." The new percussion musket was viewed with such suspicion and mistrust by the War Office pundits that it was issued, in the first instance, only to one company in every regiment. Happily, it had an opportunity of manifesting and establishing its incontestible superiority over the matchlocks pitted against it in Afghanistan and upon the Sutlej; nor was Sir Charles Napier slow to confess that to the new weapon, admirably handled by the Twenty-second regiment of British foot, and by the Twenty-ninth regiment of native infantry, he mainly owed his astonishing victory over 35,000 Beloochees at Meeanee in the February of 1843. The percussion musket was not introduced into the French army until 1840; but Meeanee was its "baptism of fire" throughout the civilized world, and it is doubtful whether 1,800 British soldiers, of whom little more than 400 were Europeans, ever gained a more honorable or meritorious victory. But, while the new weapon was slowly making its way as a military small-arm, it was eagerly seized upon and adopted at a much earlier date by sportsmen, who were quick to recognize the advantages secured by the rapidity of ignition and certainty of explosion imparted by the percussion detonating cap to the charge of gunpowder within the barrel.

Precocity a Sign of Inferiority.

M. D. Delaunay, in a communication to the French Societe de Biologie, has advanced the opinion that precocity is a sign of biological inferiority. In support of his position, he adduces the fact that the lower species develope more rapidly, and are at the same time more precocious than those higher in the scale. Man is the longest of all in arriving at maturity; and the inferior races of men are more precocious than the superior, as is seen in the children of the Esquimaux, negroes, Cochin Chinese, Arabs, Japanese, etc., who are, up to a certain age, more vigorous and more intellectual than small Europeans. Precociousness becomes less and less, in proportion to the advance made by any race in civilization—a fact which is illustrated by the lowering of the standard for recruits, which has been made necessary in France twice during the present century by the decreasing rapidity of growth of the youth of the country. Women are more precocious than men, and in all domestic animals the female is formed sooner than the male. From eight to twelve years of age a girl gains one pound a year on a boy, and in mixed schools girls obtain the first places up to the age of twelve. The inferior tissues and organs develope before the higher ones, and the brain is the slowest of all the organs to develop. M. Delaunay concludes his paper by stating that the precocity of organs and organisms is in an inverse ratio to the extent of their evolution.—Sanitarian.

GARFIELD—CONKLING.

Political Circles in Washington Excited Over the Withdrawal of the New York Nominations.

[Associated Press Telegram.]

The message of the President withdrawing the New York nominations which are regarded as belonging to the stalwart wing of the party is the only subject of public interest here. Everybody is talking and speculating about it. A Western Associated Press reporter, in seeking suitable information, saw representative men of both sides. The President is firm and determined. He has been urged by close friends for some time to take aggressive measures, but hesitated, hoping that some way of maintaining harmony in the party, consistent with his honor and dignity, might be found. He could not surrender any particle of his executive prerogative, as he has held, by withdrawing Robertson or consenting to any compromise. He expressed himself on all occasions as anxious to do full justice to both wings of the New York Republicans. When Senator Conkling carried through the Republican caucus his policy, which was directly antagonistic to that of the administration, with regard to Robertson, the President felt compelled to take some action.

Vice President Arthur and Senator Platt were at the White House this morning, by the President's request, and he talked frankly to them. When the President learned positively that nothing short of permitting Robertson's nomination to lie unacted upon would satisfy Senator Conkling, he informed Mr. Arthur what he intended to do. When the message was opened in the Senate Mr. Arthur was in the Vice President's room, in the rear of the Senate chamber. A Senator went in and told him of the message. Arthur replied that he had been expecting that message.

Senator Hale said to-night that the President ought to have taken this step several weeks ago. The President's purpose is declared to be to fill all the New York Federal offices with men who will not fight the administration for Conkling. He does not intend to make war on Conkling in New York, but at the same time he will not put power in Conkling's hands for him to use against the administration.

When the message was read in the Senate Conkling was reading a paper and did not look up. He knew beforehand what it was. His friends, who have talked with him to-night, say he is not dismayed; that he is confident the stalwarts will rally closer around; that he considers the message as an implied warning to Republican Senators that if they don't vote for Robertson their patronage will be cut off, and that "honorable Republican Senators can't be bulldozed in that way."

Senators generally agree that this forces the fight on Robertson's nomination, and those who are for Robertson claim he will be confirmed next week and that he will get not less than forty-five votes. The President's aggressive stand has had the effect of bringing wavering Democratic Senators to his side. The Democrats all applaud the President's course, and one of the most experienced Senators on that side said to-night that not over three Democratic votes will be cast against Robertson.

Another effect has been to make Republican Senators speak out more freely, as each feels that he must support his side of this issue. Republicans who warmly espouse one side or the other talk of the injury the fight will do to the party in New York, but cooler heads point to the former contest with the New York Custom House, and predict that this one will terminate similarly; that the defeated side will submit, and no great break in the party will be caused.

[Telegram to Chicago Inter Ocean.]

Henceforward Mr. Conkling and his followers may be relied upon to fight the administration, and the President has thrown down the gage of battle. In conversation with an intimate friend of the President, who speaks by authority, the reasons which impelled the President to withdraw the nominations were given. This gentleman said: "The President has not taken this step without deliberation. It is in no spirit of revenge that he has recalled the names of Mr. Conkling's friends. The caucus had decided not to consider the nomination of Mr. Robertson. He alone of all the New York nominations was singled out for destruction. It is no secret that as soon as the present executive business is disposed of the Senate will adjourn sine die, or the members will go away and leave the Senate without a quorum. Mr. Conkling would have had his friends installed in office and the one man representing the independent element in State politics would have been laid aside until next winter. The question was one of Senatorial courtesy versus executive right. By withdrawing the nominations of Mr. Conkling's friends the President has put all the vacant offices in the State on an even footing. All Conkling's men will go in the same boat with Mr. Robertson."

Oil As Black as Night.

About seven miles west of the "boro limits" of Foxburg, on the Blue Jay Peninsula, is a place called Balltown, and among other developments going on in that vicinity is a well that produces black oil. This oil is so black that even the glimmer of the brightest light can not be seen through a bottle containing a sample of it. It bears a perfect resemblance, in fact, to the substance known as coal-tar, and emits a powerful odor, precisely like that of spirits of tar. What it is good for, or what particular qualities and elements it possesses, have not yet been determined upon, though we may depend upon it that it would not exist as a mineral production unless there were some use to which it could be applied. What that use may be, however, is a question for future settlement. In its present state this oil (if we may call it oil), will not burn without emitting a dense, black smoke, almost as black as the liquid itself, which deposits a thick soot, that presents the idea of its being a very useful production for the manufacture of lamp-black or other substance of that description. It has also been suggested that it may turn out to be very valuable as a basis of extraction for analine dyes, though this is a subject that no one can speak upon with authority till a chemical analysis of the substance has taken place, and this, we understand, will be commenced immediately. The strike is certainly an extraordinary one, and as far as we can learn nothing like it has ever before been known in the history of the oil trade. No other well in or near the vicinity has anything approaching to it. The oil seems to be found in the slate at a depth of 270 feet, and what is the more singular is, that, although the drill passes through the same kind of slate and at the same depth in adjacent wells, no such yield as we have been describing has come from any other except the one in question. We shall refer at greater length to this subject in a subsequent issue.—Titusville (Pa.) Herald.

A Funny Duel.

A French lawyer, having had a dispute with a neighbor, went to a fencing-master to learn his art in order to fight a duel. Never having touched a sword in his life, he asked what he had better do. The master told him to hold his sword steadily on a level with his adversary's eye, remain immovable, wait until the other man rushed forward and found himself spitted like a woodcock. If his antagonist came nearer he himself was to retreat; if the other retreated he should stand still. An hour later, the neighbor arrived in the same ignorant plight in regard to the art of dueling. To him the fencing-master gave the same directions. When the two duelists at each assumed the same attitude as they had been directed, and for several minutes stood perfectly motionless, each thinking that the other would advance. The bystanders looked on in amazement, the seconds [illegible] and at length brought the farce to an end by declaring honor satisfied. The lawyer lowered his aching arms, saying: "I had no idea that a duel was such hard work. I would a thousand times rather plead for a dozen hours than fight as we have been doing for so many minutes."

Floral Offerings.

I chanced, not a thousand years ago, to be in a theater where an artiste was planting her shapely foot on a solid round of the ladder of success. She was poor. For years she had struggled for a "chance." That's what we all seek. Give me, says Wharton Baker, Esq., "a chance" at the Interior Department, and I'll show 'em. Give me, says the tyro, a "newspaper chance," and I'll make the world my slave. Well, this girl, after pawning everything but herself, found a great, grim wolf standing right in front of her stoin door. The wolf's name was Hunger, and made himself uncomfortably at home with her. Accident—and accident is the moving potentiality nine times out of ten—secured her "a chance" in a venture. She took the chance with a petty weekly salary and went to work. Her head was hot, her chest was sore, her arms and legs were thin for want of food. She strained every nerve all the time, and made the venture a success. The manager took in money fast. The girl became all the rage. More salary? Not a cent more. Why not? Because she had contracted for a petty price and managers never break contracts—do they?

But she got applause and flowers? Flowers?

Yes, and the night of which I speak (it was just a week ago in this city), with her red eyes inflamed with tears because she hadn't an extra cent in her wallet, with her heels sore with the rubbing of shoes she could not replace, she went smirking and smiling to the footlights to take with trembling hand from the leader of the orchestra two immense floral tributes, one of which cost $100 and the other $25!

What mockery!

Twenty-five dollars in money would have been a God-send.

Twenty-five dollars in cash would have bought her the underclothes and the shoes she literally needed.

Twenty-five dollars would have enabled her to get beef, iron and wine, which the physician had ordered, but which she hadn't the spare dollar for.

Of course, you won't think I advise the sending of money instead of flowers. That would be an insult quick to be resented. I am narrating facts, not tendering advice. A few dollars spent in cut flowers, or even for a choice bouquet, can do all the most extreme admirer should seek to do in public. It's the thoughtfulness, not the extravagance, that produces an impression. If I cared to cause a real lasting happiness—happiness that would start a tear or so of gratitude—I'd find out quietly and exactly the party's status, and in some proper and delicate mode send her what she most needed. There are times when a ton of coal, two suits of flannel underclothes, a bird cage, a pair of shoes, a small box of tea or three or four tickets for a Turkish bath would do much more toward warming the inner cockle of a young woman's heart than a hundred dollars' worth of flowers. Send flowers, too. Send, however, flowers that can be gratefully received and easily carried up the stage.—Howard's Philadelphia Times Letter.

A Natural Feeling.

Translated from the omnibus: A lecturess upon women said in one of her lectures: "I have neyer a beautiful girl, upon whose cheeks roses bloom, seen, without the desire to feel her in my arms to clasp and to kiss." This was too much for a masculine auditor, and he cried: "To me goes it just so!" (Stormy applause.)

Some persons are born with a strong natural instinct to be just. But it is also a habit of mind which may be increased and improved by study and reflection, and which should be sedulously cultivated.

The Missive Punctured Which Has Hitherto Held Garfield Above the Star-Route Quagmire—The President Left Floundering in the Muck with Brady and His Coparceners—An Autograph Letter Virtually Authorizing the Ex-Assistant Postmaster General to Make a Levy.

[Washington Telegram to Chicago Times.]

On two or three occasions since Brady was bounced and the star-route scandal re-opened with redoubled vigor, his personal organ here, the National Republican, has contained dark hints concerning a mysterious writing that would cause other hearts to ache, and has intimated that its contents would directly implicate the President himself. These innuendoes were regarded as but part of a game of bluff which Brady and Gorham understand fully, and it was given out, as by authority from Garfield, that he had never written a line to the ex-Assistant Postmaster General. This semi-official announcement forthwith strengthened the vertebræ of the administration organs, and immediately it was published broadcast that the mail-robbers' ring, inspired by Brady, was loading up, and would soon fire untold quantities of filth at the sacred person of the President. Extraordinary pains were taken to impress on the public the importance of the maxim that forewarned was forearmed, and that anything said against the integrity of the man of Mentor would be but the work of baffled scoundrels. The large majority of the correspondents here honestly took this view of the matter, the denial of anything inculpatory having ever been written by Garfield to Brady being hardly less explicit than the denial of the Morey letter.

To this extent they were not deceived. Garfield did not write a letter to that decapitated official; and, in so far as can be ascertained, that gentleman has not in his immediate possession a line of Presidential manuscript; but in August last he did write a letter to Hon. J. A. Hubbell, member of Congress from Michigan. This precious document your correspondent has been permitted to copy, and, as a valuable contribution to current literature anent the star routes, it is given to the public.

As prefatory to the introduction of this damaging document, a brief retrospect is necessary. It is dated Aug. 23, 1880; and about that time there was despair in the Republican camp. It was feared by the leaders that the defection in Maine might be fatal, and there were discouraging rumors with regard to the number and dimensions of the barrels about to be put on tap by English, of Indiana. There was a lamentable lack of the sinews of war, the usually liberal donors in New York apparently taking little interest in what seemed to be a desperate cause, while the noble army of office-holders sought shelter behind some mythical civil-service rule or other, and failed to respond when assessments were called for. It was indeed a dark time for the Republican party, the tide being low and all ebb, while all efforts to raise money seemed unavailing. At this crisis, Hon. J. A. Hubbell, Chairman of the Republican Congressional Committee, fully realizing the danger, called upon the Second Assistant Postmaster General, Thomas J. Brady, and asked that he raise in his department, from contractors principally, the sum of $50,000. This Brady, at first, absolutely refused to do. He said, in effect, that he had just been pulled over the coals, and, according to his range of vision, Republicans were the most active in stirring up the manifestation, and now to come to him for money to carry on the campaign savored strongly of cheek, and he would have none of it. The Michigan Congressman continued to press his claim in the persuasive manner for which he is noted, and finally Brady agreed to raise the sum if President Hayes would give his consent, as he didn't propose to haul out the chestnuts alone. Hubbell at once hastened to the White House, but its occupant was not feeling kindly toward the world, and didn't appear to care a continental whether "the party of honesty and great moral ideas" was successful in the pending struggle or not. In fact, he left the impression upon the Congressional intellect that he was perfectly willing that a Democrat should draw the Presidential salary for the next four years, monthly, in advance, and peremptorily declined to authorize the levy. The Michigander was very mad, to state it mildly, but, being a versatile genius, he was not discouraged. With a determination to bleed the star-route contractors still unshaken, he returned to Brady, and reported no progress, but asked if he would secure the money on the request of Garfield. After some consideration, he consented to the proposition, but on the condition only that his approval of the plan should be made in writing. A long head had that Hoosier!

That night a detailed account of the situation was started westward, and that it was regarded of the utmost importance may be judged from the fact that the return mail from Mentor brought an answer. This answer is in the handwriting of Gen. Garfield, it evidently having been considered of too much moment to be intrusted to an amanuensis, as was the case with nearly all of his correspondence at that time. It is in the following words:

> [Private.]
>
> Mentor, Ohio, Aug. 23, 1880.
>
> My Dear Hubbell: Yours of the 19th inst. received and contents noted. Please say to Brady that I hope he will give us all the assistance possible. I think he can help effectively. Please tell me how the departments generally are doing. As ever yours,
>
> J. A. Garfield.
>
> Hon. J. A. Hubbell, Washington, D. C.

This damning letter—it is but fair to say it is not in the hands of the gentleman to whom it was written—has been shown to but four or five, all of whom are thoroughly familiar with Garfield's handwriting, and all unite in saying there is not a shade of a shadow of doubt as to its authenticity. But an hour ago the original was shown to a Senator who happened to have one of Garfield's letters in his pocket, and, after comparison, he quietly remarked: "There will be no talk about Morey or hunting down rascals when that letter is shown."

Among the few who knew of the existence of this letter there is blank amazement that, under such circumstances, the President should have permitted Brady's removal in any event.

"Perhaps," suggested one, "Brady did not raise the money, as requested, and Garfield has a grievance on that account."

"But he did, though," said another, "though I can not speak positively as to the full amount. I do know, however, that $25,000 of star-route money went to Indiana and was disbursed there by Dorsey, and I have every reason to believe that he furnished the entire sum asked for."

"I can only account for the course of the President on the supposition that he must have forgotten that he wrote such a letter, but he could hardly have forgotten that so large a sum was raised, how it was raised, and that perhaps he owes his election to money the same as stolen from the treasury," said the third gentleman of the party, who is a leading member of the House.

THE SENATORIAL DEBATE.

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

In the debate in the Senate, pending the obstruction of the public business by the Republican Senators, the Democrats have obtained the advantage. This chiefly because "he is thrice armed whose cause is just;" for the Republicans have in the Senate men skilled in making the worse appear the better reason. But the Democratic Senators, in their exercise of judgment in fixing a policy in their tenacity and ability in adhering to and defending it, have earned the compliments and thanks of the Democratic party in the Union. The issue is well understood by the country. The Democratic Senators daily and repeatedly move to proceed to the consideration of the public business to attend to which the Senate was convened in extra session. The Republican Senators daily refuse to do this, but propose to disorganize the Senate that they may reorganize it so as to pay Mahone a stipulated price for services rendered. The Republican Senators are obstructing the business of the United States; the Democratic Senators are obstructing the payment of Mahone. This is the situation of the parties.

But the Republican Senators who have conducted the debate on that side have, in the course of the debate, taken three positions upon which they altogether rely in their appeal for the support of the country. We will state them in their fullest strength.

1. They deny that there has been a bargain with Mahone.

2. They claim that they are a "constitutional majority" of the Senate, whose demands should not be obstructed or resisted.

3. They are engaged in the overthrow of Bourbon Democracy, and all their proceedings in the Mahone-Riddleberger business are to that end.

The groundlessness of these positions has been pointed out in these columns, on the floor of the Senate, and is apparent to all fair-minded men. What of the first claim? That "constitutional" Republican "majority" consists of Mr. Arthur, who is not a member of the Senate, and Mr. Mahone, who is not a Republican. But, waiving the question as to numbers, must not the object, as well as the number, of the "majority" have something to do with the constitutionality of the action of that "majority?" A "majority for what purpose? For a constitutional purpose? Senator Call, of Florida, has, with fine logic, invited notice to this point. We give a few of his sentences:

> First, I ask the honorable Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Dawes) is not a constitutional object for the exercise of the power of a constitutional majority, in the spirit and intent of the constitution, equally essential to make a constitutional majority on any question as the mere existence of the requisite number? * * * Then I will ask Senators upon the other side, who maintain that there is a constitutional majority upon the question of the passage of this resolution to elect the officers of the Senate, is it a constitutional object, in the spirit and intendment of the constitution, for the exercise of the power of a majority to bestow the Senate offices for the purpose of carrying a State election in the interest of any party. * * * I ask further, may not a resolution otherwise constitutional become unconstitutional because of the intention with which it is passed, or the purpose and effect of it? As an instance of this proposition I submit the inquiry would it not have been unconstitutional in 1861 to have elected a Sergeant-at-Arms and a Secretary of the Senate for the purpose and with the effect of encouraging secession and the dissolution of the Union? Would it not be unconstitutional to elect officers of the Senate either for the purpose or with the effect of encouraging or aiding a movement in any State of the Union for repudiation or a readjustment of her State debt? Is it not unconstitutional to elect officers of the Senate for the purpose or with the effect of aiding or encouraging any State or any party in the State to do anything which is not within the prescribed constitutional powers of Congress and of the Government of the United States? Is the readjustment of the debts of Virginia or the question of the election of a Governor, a Senator, and members of the Legislature of the State of Virginia within the powers of the constitution and the Government of the United States?

Was there a bargain? Senator Beck has answered this question with the adroitness of a strict parliamentarian, with the canniness and force of a Scotchman, and with an emphasis of facts which cannot be overthrown. We have already printed this portion of Senator Beck's speech. The Kentucky Senator pointed out the importance and influence of the Senate Committee on Agriculture. Its supposed importance and influence among the agricultural classes are largely in excess of its real importance. Mr. Mahone, never before a member of the Senate, never a member of the House, without legislative experience, and not a Republican, is made Chairman of this committee by Republicans. No bargain?

There is the Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads, in close connection with the department of the Government that has widest patronage. Mr. Mahone was made a member of this committee by Republicans. No bargain?

There is the Committee on Naval Affairs. We have all heard of the Norfolk navy yard and of all navy yards. We know their voting capacity. They are for the purpose of turning out voters and not ships. The navy yards are all at sea in making ships, but are prolific of votes. Mr. Mahone was made a member of the Naval Committee. No bargain?

Mr. Mahone was also put on the Committee on Education and Labor. This was to seduce the colored vote of Virginia. No bargain?

And then Mr. Mahone was allowed to name a "Bourbon," and a "repudiator," and a "rebel" of whom no Republican Senator had previously heard, as the candidate of the thirty-seven Republican Senators for the position of Sergeant-at-Arms. No bargain?

Gems of the Star Service.

"This number," said Mr. Brady in his letter of self-vindication, when referring to the ninety-three star contracts which had provoked most comment—"this number, as small as it may be in comparison with the whole number, includes all the great national routes."

When the House committee investigated this business a year ago, inquiries were made as to the cost and the receipts of five star routes, with the following results:

No. 31,454, from Fort Worth, Texas, to Yuma, Arizona: Original pay, $134,000; increased to $399,000; receipts from postage, $33,194.94.

No. 32,024, from Vinita, Indian Territory, to Las Vegas, New Mexico: Original pay, $6,330; increased to $150,392.08; receipts from postage, $5,640.76.

No. 35,051, from Bismarck, Dakota, to Fort Keogh, Montana: Original pay, $2,350; increased to $70,000; receipts from postage, $6,545.77.

No. 37,110, from Rock Creek, Wyoming, to Fort Custer, Montana: Original pay, $10,507.25; increased to $56,768.13; receipts from postage, $2,493.52.

No. 40,101, from Prescott, Arizona, to Santa Fe, New Mexico: Original pay, $13,313; increased to $135,975; receipts from postage, $10,644.18.

These figures tell the whole story, and they prove incontestably that there was no other reason for this increase of service than the corrupt jobbery and collusion to plunder the treasury which are now made plain to all the world. These are specimens from what Mr. Brady calls "the great national routes," running through the wilderness, with with Indians for population. What the Court House was to Tweed and his gang of thieves, the star service has been to Brady and his confederates in and out of Congress.

Contracts aggregating seventeen millions and a half a year for carrying the mails passed through Brady's hands. Some of them were fortunately regulated by law, and the stealing on that part of the service was comparatively limited. But wherever there was an opening the thieves rushed in and carried off everything they could lay hands on. After doing this they were ready to denounce "Southern outrages," shout loudly for a "free ballot and a fair count," and glorify Mahone as the leader of a new dispensation.—New York Sun.

Old Bill Gridley.

"You may say what you please about old Bill Gridley," said a gentleman just down from Bodie to the crowd who were spinning for hot Scotches in Phil McGovern's back room the other night. "I know there's lots er fellers talking against him—'specially now that he's dead—but I allers speak of a man as I find him, and old Bill was as fair and square a one as I wish ter see, spite of his crankiness."

"Putty bad tempered, wasn't he?" said Phil, who was sprinkling red pepper on the salt herring to encourage trade.

"Well, he was—and he wasn't. I've seen that man keep his grip on himself and go along cool and easy like when any other man in the camp would have stood on his hind legs and rared. I call to mind suthin' that happened once away back in the flush days that showed what a big heart old Gridley had in his shirt. You see, we were at a mining camp called Lone Skull, up on the Feather river, and Bill's claim had panned so rich that he began to put on a good deal of style. He had the largest shanty in the place—four rooms—and what must Gridley do but send clear round the Horn for a carpet for the parlor. It took him nearly a year to get it out, and then it was the only carpet in that part of the State. White ground, with yellow and red flowers. Folks used to come for miles to see it."

"Is this yarn in one act?" growled a friend of the miner, who was wistfully watching the barkeeper take the lid off some hot chowder in the other room.

"It's in one scene," continued the party from Bodie. "Lemme see; where was I? Well, to make a long story short, I was playing pedro in Bill's best room one night, with some prospectors just up from 'Frisco, and was losing considerable dust when I dropped on one of 'em taking a jack out of his sleeve. As luck would have it, I wasn't heeled that night, so I just picked up a tobacco knife that lay on the table and cut the fellow's throat clean across."

"Good scheme, too," grunted a faro steerer in approval.

"Wel, as I was saying, old Gridley, who was in the next room, heard the scuffle and came in. There was that cut chap lying on the floor, with his blood all over the carpet—the whole thing just ruined. Everybody was scared to see Bill's face; he looked just awful. I expected to get a bullet through my head quicker'n a wink.

"'This is pretty tough on me,' says Gridley, looking at the carpet.

"'I know, Bill,' says I, 'and I axes yer parding, old man, I never once thought of the carpet. I wouldn't er done it, if I had.'

"'No, I don't believe you would, Tom,' says he, kinder sorrowful like. 'I don't believe you would.' And he actually helped me heave the corpse outer the winder, and kinder wipe up the muss a little. I tell you, gentlemen, old Bill Gridley was a white man, he was, and if ever I go back on him, after that, I'm a coyote!"

And they all agreed that a man must have a pretty big heart to act like that, after all.—San Francisco Post.

You may praise a man to the skies and you can not make all the people like him; so you may exhaust the whole list of opprobrious epithets in abusing him and you can not make all the people hate him.

INDIANA NEWS.

S. S. Heath has been commissioned Recorder of Boone, succeeding Sanford Peters, deceased.

There is a German woman in South Bend who dresses in men's clothes and goes out as a day laborer.

John Haney, a German, aged 60, cremated himself in a brush-pile near Sunman. Domestic trouble is the probable cause.

A lady residing in Evansville, some weeks since, swallowed a set of false teeth while asleep. She has experienced no trouble so far.

Elder R. L. Howe has received the appointment as Postmaster at Charlestown, succeeding M. P. Alpha, who had held the office thirty-two years.

Col. A. W. Prather, a prominent Republican politician of Columbus, has just been tendered a $2,000 position in the Treasury Department at Washington.

George Sieves, a German who had a huckster boat between Louisville and Bethlehem, was found in his boat with his throat cut. The murder was evidently committed for robbery.

Elder Miller, of the Baptist Church, baptized twenty-seven persons in the Ohio river, near the ferry dock, at Jeffersonville, Sunday morning. The elder was attired in a white robe and the candidates wore white turbans.

The Commissioners of Harrison county have ordered an election to be held the 6th of June, for the submission to the voters of Harrison township of a proposition to appropriate $18,500 to aid in constructing a branch of the Air Line railroad.

A young lady in Rochester, named Demont, aged about 20 years, attempted suicide by drinking two ounces of chloroform, because somebody twitted her of not being able to talk plain. A battery was used three hours before animation was restored.

"Uncle Billy" Sparks, 75 years of age, died at Anderson, lately, of starvation. He had been in infirm health for several years past. About seven years since he was partially paralyzed. He was paralyzed in the throat the 14th ult., since which time he has taken nothing.

The veterans are preparing to bring suit against the Wayne county Commissioners to collect a bounty of $100, said to have been granted to each soldier who entered the service in the years 1863-4-5, by an old act. They claim that there is $500,000 due the ex-soldiers from the county.

Frederick Hartman died near Centerville, about a month ago, and the old gentleman's friends suspected that he had a large sum of money that could not be found among his papers or in any bank with which he did business. A search was made about the old homestead, and $3,000 in small amounts have been fished out of chinks and crannies about the house.

Thirteen years ago Ed H. Weaver was interred in the old cemetery near Kokomo, and last week his friends and relatives had his body taken up and removed to the new cemetery and interred there. Upon examination it was found that the casket and body was in a perfect state of preservation, and the friends say that his appearance was as natural as on the day of his interment.

As a freight train on the L. E. and W. was approaching a bridge between Redkey and Albany, the engine jumped the track. The engineer closed the throttle, and, with the fireman, jumped just as the engine struck the bridge. Strange to say, the engine passed over the bridge on the ties, without jumping it, and ran nearly three-quarters of a mile on the ties. The bridge was severely racked.

Wilson J. Williams, President of the Vincennes National Bank, died at his home in that city, last week, of nervous disease. Mr. Williams has been connected with the Vincennes National (formerly the old State) Bank about twenty years, and was well known through the State as an active Republican politician. He was a candidate for nomination for State Treasurer on that ticket at the last convention, but was defeated by Maj. Hill.

Dr. Holliday contributed to the Connersville art-loan collection a desk with a history. Gen. Herera, while President of Mexico prior to the annexation of Texas, had expressed an opinion averse to the coercion of that State, and was consequently set aside, but was again recalled to oppose the United States arms in the field after the declaration of war. He met Scott at Cerro Gordo and was defeated. Among other things captured in the tent of Gen. Herera was the elegant piece of furniture referred to. It was appropriated by Maj. Hamilton, who subsequently, in preparing to remove to California, asked Dr. Holliday to accept the writing-desk and materials as a present.

Col. Horatio Woodbury died at New Albany, recently, of consumption, aged 48. Col. Woodbury was a native of Maine, but came to Indiana when quite a youth. He located at Leavenworth, where he studied law and taught school. At the opening of the war he entered the Union army, and was made Lieutenant Colonel of the Eighty-first regiment Indiana infantry. In 1869 he was appointed by President Grant Secretary of Wyoming Territory, which position he soon afterward resigned. In 1870 he was appointed Collector of the Second internal revenue district of Indiana, and held the position until the First and Second districts were consolidated. Retiring from office he engaged in the practice of law.

Matches.

The invention of matches was a happy thought, and is thus told by the inventor: "I used to get up at 4 o'clock in the morning to pursue my studies, and I used at that time the flint and steel, in the use of which I found great inconvenience. I gave lectures in chemistry at the time at a large academy. Of course I knew, as other chemists did, the explosive material that was necessary to produce instantaneous light, but it was difficult to obtain a light on wood by that mixture, and the idea occurred to me to put sulphur in the mixture. I did so, and told about it, and showed it in my next lecture. There was a young man in the room whose father was a chemist in London, and he at once wrote to him about it, and soon afterward lucifer matches were issued to the world. I was urged to go and take out a patent immediately, but I thought it so small a matter, and it cost me so little labor, that I did not think proper to get a patent, although I have no doubt it would have been very profitable." The name of this inventor of matches is Mr. Holden, and he is an Englishman.

KIDNEY WORT

DOES WONDERFUL CURES! WHY?

Because it acts on the LIVER, BOWELS and KIDNEYS at the same time.

Because it cleanses the system of the poisonous humors that develope in Kidney and Urinary Diseases, Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation, Piles, or in Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Nervous Disorders and Female Complaints.

SEE WHAT PEOPLE SAY:

Eugene B. Stork, of Junction City, Kansas, says, Kidney-Wort cured him after regular Physicians had been trying for four years.

Mrs. John Arnall, of Washington, Ohio, says her boy was given up to die by four prominent physicians and that he was afterwards cured by Kidney-Wort.

M. M. B. Goodwin, an editor in Chardon, Ohio, says he was not expected to live, being bloated beyond belief, but Kidney-Wort cured him.

Anna L. Jarrett of South Salem, N. Y., says that seven years suffering from kidney troubles and other complications was ended by the use of Kidney-Wort.

John B. Lawrence of Jackson, Tenn., suffered for years from liver and kidney troubles and after taking "barrels of other medicines," Kidney-Wort made him well.

Michael Cole of Montgomery Center, Vt., suffered eight years with kidney difficulty and was unable to work. Kidney-Wort made him "well as ever."

KIDNEY-WORT

PERMANENTLY CURES KIDNEY DISEASES, LIVER COMPLAINTS, Constipation and Piles.

☞ It is put up in Dry Vegetable Form in tin cans, one package of which makes six quarts of medicine. Also in Liquid Form, very Concentrated, for those that cannot readily prepare it.

☞ It acts with equal efficiency in either form.

GET IT AT THE DRUGGISTS. PRICE, $1.00

THE South Bend Times has been enlarged, and altogether is one of the best papers in this part of the state.

An exchange speaks of a Chicago man who "has one foot in the grave," Presume it is all they could get in without enlarging the cemetery.—Bos. Post.

It comes kind o' sudden like, just as the congregation have finished singing "Salvation free," to have the preacher announce that "the collection will now be taken up."

L. M. Ninde has taken the place of Judge Morris in the law firm at Fort Wayne. It is now Coombs, Ninde & Bell, and by the way, a mighty strong team.

A prominent lumberman in Burlington has had his coat of arms painted on the panels of his carriage, with the Latin motto "Vidi," which by interpretation is "I saw."—]Burlington Hawkeye.

"Major, I see two cocktails carried to your room every morning, as if you had some one to drink with." Yes, sir; one cocktail makes me feel like another man; and, of course, I'm bound to treat the other man."

A Brooklyn man disappeared, and seven detectives could not find him in nine weeks. But a shrewd politician got the mayor to appoint the man to office, and two hours later he came in on the run to be sworn in.

An uneven pane of glass in the residence of Dr. Stiers, of Selma, acting as a sunglass, set fire to a stool a few feet away. If there had been no one at home a mysterious conflagration would probably have resulted.

Near Richmond, Indiana, a man was bitten by a mad-dog recently, but up to last accounts had not been affected by it. But two steers and two dogs have been bitten and have gone mad. Several dogs have been killed

The last place of rustic laziness encouraged by out of town correspondents, is that of the man who, being asked what ailed his eye, answered: "I shut it coz I can see well enough with one. Sometimes I shut one, sometimes t'other."

Cupid's use of a newspaper: They had been engaged for a long time, and one evening were reading the newspaper together. "Look, love," he exclaimed, "only $15 for a suit of clothes!" "Is it a wedding suit?" she asked, looking naively at her lover. "Oh, no," he answered, "it is a business suit." "Well, I meant business," she replied.

The Northern Indiana Editorial Association will be held at Wabash on the 16th and 17th of June. A programme is being prepared that we think will develop considerable interest. We hope every editor in northern Indiana will make preparation and be present, and allow nothing less than providential interference cause a failure.—Lagrange Standard.

James G. Rogers, superintendent of the Indiana hospital for the insane, has issued an official announcement that, in accordance with legislative enactment, visitors will be admitted to the wards of the hospital on any day of the week except Sunday, between the hours of two and 5 p. m., but at no other time. Visitors to that institution are requested to make a note of this and govern themselves accordingly.—Angola Herald.

Henry Davis showed us a letter from his sister, dated at Maple Hill, Kansas, wherein she informs him that she has purchased twenty-two head of two-year-old heifers, and eight calves. She expects to engage in the raising of hogs, and expects to make enough money to enable her to visit her old home in this county next year. For a woman, we should say that Miss Davis is making a pretty fair start out on the prairies.—Indianian.

Complications.

If the thousands that now have their rest and comfort destroyed by complication of liver and kidney complaints would give natures remedy, Kidney-Wort a trial, they would be speedily cured. It acts on both organs at the same time and therefore completely fills the bill for a perfect remedy. If you have a lame back and disordered kidneys, use it at once. Don't neglect them.—[Mirror and Farmer.

"Women Never Think."

If the crabbed old bachelor who uttered this sentiment could but witness the intense thought, deep study and thorough investigation of women in determining the best medicines to keep their families well, and would note their sagacity and wisdom in selecting Hop Bitters as the best, and demonstrating it by keeping their families in perpetual health, at a mere nominal expense, he would be forced to acknowledge that such sentiments are baseless and false.[—Picayune.

Making Watches.

Defective Watch Cases are one of the chief causes of so many watches not being good time pieces. The cases being thin and not fitting well, admit dust and dirt to the movement, which soon interferes with the running parts of the watch, necessitating cleaning, repairing, etc. and the amount thus paid out, if applied toward buying a good case in the beginning, would have saved all this trouble and expense. We have recently seen a case that meets all these requirements, it having been carried for over twenty years and still remains perfect. We refer to the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, which has become one of the staple articles of the Jewelry trade, possessing as it does, so many advantages over all other watch cases being made of two heavy plates of solid gold over a plate of composition. and we advise all our readers to ask their Jeweler for a card or catalogue that will explain the manner in which they are made.

It is the only STIFFENED CASE made with two plates of gold, seamless pendants, and center, solid joints, crown pieces, etc., all of which are covered by letters patent. Therefore buy no case before consulting a Jeweler who keeps the JAS. BOSS' PATENT STIFFENED GOLD CASE, that you may learn the difference between it and all imitations that claim to be equally as good.

For sale by Abright the Jeweler. Ask to see the warrant that accompanies each case, and don't be persuaded that any other make of case is as good.

The New Bible

So much is now being said in regard to the new version of the Bible, that we select the following notes on the subject, in order that our readers may see some of the changes through which it has passed, as well as to show the necessity for the great care that has been taken in the present revision. In a future number we may give some of the points of difference between the old and the new editions.

FIRST MANUSCRIPT BIBLE IN ENGLISH.

The first translation of the entire scriptures into the English language was accomplished by John Wycliffe. This man was born in Yorkshire about the year 1324. Educated at Oxford, he took orders as a priest, and soon attained to eminence. He was the pioneer of the English reformation. Thrice tried for heresy, he was acquitted the first time, through the able advocacy of John Gaunt, and the second time escaped condemnation through the influence of the Queen-Mother, but on his third arraignment, for lecturing at Oxford against trans-substantiation, he was found guilty, and was forbidden by the king, Richard II, to lecture any further in that city. Three years after this, in 1384, Wycliffe died, being stricken with paralysis while performing divine service at his church in Lutterworth. Forty-seven years after his death by order of the council of Constance and by special command of Pope Martin V., his bones were disinterred and publicly burned, the ashes being cast into a neighboring stream. Wycliffe's translation of the New Testament was completed in 1380, about two years later. These of course, were in manuscript form, and the art of printing being then unknown, it was only by the slow process of writing that copies could be multiplied. This made the scriptures at once scarce and costly. The price usually paid at that time for a copy of Wycliffe's Bible was five marks, equal to $200 of our money. Nor was this the only obstacle to scripture reading in those days. Men read the Bible then at the peril of their lives, parliament, in 1414, having passed a law prohibiting every one from reading the scriptures in English under penalty of forfeiting "land, catel, lif, and goods from theyr heyres for ever."

FIRST PRINTED ENGLISH BIBLE.

For a century and a half the people of England were almost wholly dependent for their knowledge of the scriptures upon these condemned manuscript copies of the Bible left them by Wycliffe. Then appeared, in 1525, Tyndale's translation of the New Testament. This was secretly printed in part at Cologne, but the secret becoming known, Tyndale flew up the Rhine to Worms, and there completed his work. Six thousand copies were printed. These were stealthily conveyed to London, concealed in merchandise consigned to pious merchants of that port, and were as stealthily sold. The people received them gladly, but by the king and bishops the "pernicious books," as they were styled, were interdicted. Again, too, parliament interfered, decreeing that these books "should be by authority of this act cleerly and utterly abolished, extinguished and forbidden to be kept and used in this realme, or els where in anie the king's dominions." Tyndale was born in Gloustershire in 1484. His life was early consecrated to the work of giving the word of God to his countrymen in their native tongue, a thing to which the Roman church at that time was bitterly opposed. His education completed, he vowed: "If God spare my life, ere many years I will cause a boy that driveth a plow to know more of the scriptures than the priests do." In 1535, Tyndale was arrested on a charge of heresy, and confined in a castle near Brussels. Here, in the following year, he was strangled to death.

OTHER EDITIONS OF THE BIBLE.

The next English translation to appear was what was known as "Coverdale's Bible." This was printed in Antwerp in 1535. It was not translated out of the original languages, but, as the author confesses in its preface, "out of Douche Latyn." This translation embraced the Apocrypha, and was the first collection of the scriptures in English published in a single volume. Two years later, Mathews' bible was published. This was a revision of the two works last named, rather than a translation. It's editor, John Rogers, who, for some inexplicable reason, adopted the nom de plume of Thomas Mathews, was treated with great consideration by Edward VI, but on the accession of Mary he was arrested, and burned at Smithfield. This bible became the foundation of the authorized Version of 1161. The next to appear was an edition in 1539, by Richard Tavorner, strange to say, was a lawyer, but was licensed to preach by Edward VI. He was a very eccentric man both in dress and speech. He would sometimes, it is said, appear in the pulpit dressed in a damask gown, velvet bonnet and gold chain, with a sword by his side. Preaching to the Oxford students on one occasion, he began by saying: "I have brought you some fine biscuits, baked in the oven of charity, carefully conserved for the chickens of the church, the sparrows of the spirit and the sweet swallows of salvation!" Other English versions of the scriptures published in the sixteenth century were "The Great Bible," so called because of its size, the pages being fifteen inches by nine, larger than those of any other bible; "Wittingham's New Testament," remarkable as the first edition of the scriptures in which the text was broken into verses, and with numerals used to distinguish them; "The Geneva Bible," the first English bible printed in Roman type, and also the first in which italics were used to denote words supplied by the translators, and, last of all, an edition known as "The Bishops' Bible," whose title-page was embellished with a half-length portrait of Queen Elizabeth. The most correct of these was the Geneva version. This outlived all others, and for a long time was a powerful rival of the authorized version of King James.

THE BIBLE NOW IN USE.

This is what is known as the Authorized Version of King James. At a conference of leading men of the realm, called by the king at the instigation of the Puritans "for hearing and determining things pretended to be amiss in the church," the suggestion was made by Dr. John Reynolds, president of Corpus Christi college, Oxford, that a new translation of the bible ought to be had, owing to errors in existing translations. This conference was held at Hampton Court Palace, January 16 18, 1604. Nothing was done at the time, but the suggestion was not lost upon the king, for in a few months he ordered this work undertaken, and appointed fifty four of the most learned men of the kingdom, with Dr Reynolds at their head, to carry out his plans. Perhaps the most prominent of these scholastics was Dr. Launcelot Andrews, Dean of Westminster, of whom it was said that "he was so skilled in all languages that some conceived he might, if then living, almost have served as an interpreter general at the confusion of tongues." Another, who was prominent in this work of revision was John Bois, of whom it is affirmed that he could write Hebrew elegantly when only six years old. The committee of revision was divided into companies, and as illustrating the care taken in bringing out this edition of the bible we give the following three of the fifteen rules that were laid down for the guidance of these men in their work:

8. Every particular man of each company to take the same chapter or chapters; and, having translated or amended them severally by himself where he thinketh good, all to meet and confer what they have done, and agree for their parts what shall stand.

9. As any one company hath dispatched any one book in this manner, they shall send it to the rest, to be considered of seriously and judiciously; for His Majesty is very careful in this point.

12. Letters to be sent from every bishop to the rest of his clergy, admonishing them of this translation in hand, and to move and charge as many as, being skilful in the tongues, and having taken pains in that kind, to send his particular observations to the company either at Westminister, Cambridge or Oxford.

The authorised version of King James was brought out in 1611, with the following title:

"The | HOLY | BIBLE | Conteyning the Old Testament, | AND THE NEW, | Newly Translated out of the Originall | tongues: & with the former Translations | diligently compared and revised by his | Maiesties speciall Commandement. | Appointed to be read in Churches | Imprinted at London by Robert | Barker, Printer to the Kings | most excellent Maiestie | Anno Dom. 1611."

"Women Never Think."

If the crabbed old bachelor who uttered this sentiment could but witness the intense thought, deep study and thorough investigation of women in determining the best medicines to keep their families well, and would note their sagacity and wisdom in selecting Hop Bitters as the best, and demonstrating it by keeping their families in perpetual health, at a mere nominal expense, he would be forced to acknowledge that such sentiments are baseless and false.—Picayune.

The Begonia and Cashmere Shawls.

About two centuries ago a French navigator named Begon brought from Asia a new plant, which is still called after him, Begonia. Few reader would suspect the part this plant has played in the production of the handsome shawls so prized by ladies. The best by far of these are made in Cashmere, a beautiful district at the foot of the Himalaya mountains. The material used in their manufacture is the finest down from the Thibet goat. Every one has probably remarked the singularly graceful patterns with which they are ornamented, and perhaps wondered whether they were studies from nature or the production of the artist's brain. They are the former. Nature in the east supplies admirably graceful leaves on which the sun designs delicate ornaments, and the workmen of Cashmere imitate them, as the Grecian sculptors copied the curves of the acanthus in the Corinthian capitals. These leaves are those of the begonia. When the French arrived in Egypt, at the end of the last century, they were surprised to see the oriental wearing costumes, shawls, turbans, sashes, etc., of beautiful cashmere work. They greatly admired these dresses, which fell so gracefully upon the human form. When the conquerors of the pyramids returned to France they displayed their rich booty, which immediately came into fashion among the ladies. From that period they have constantly remained in high favor. Their prices vary from $300 to $400. Under the empire, no lady with any pretension went out without a Cashmere shawl. The taste for these articles, although not so great as formerly, has not entirely ceased. However, it is very rarely now that a person wears a real Indian Cashmere; the articles in general use are the product of French manufacture.

The Vicar Loved his Game.

Land and Water tells a curious story of an old country vicar of the sporting school. A marriage ceremony had been fixed, but it was a fine September morning, the clergyman loved his gun, and so, forgetful of the momentous knot he was to be the instrument of tying, he sauntered forth into the stubble of his glebe. He had not been out long before he got a shot; but scarcely had he done so when he heard the well known voice of the parish clerk shouting after him: "Sir, the young people be ready, and be at the church awaiting." "Bless me," said the old gentleman, "I forgot; I'll be there in a moment." He hastily picked up the partridge he had shot, and putting it in his pocket, hurried to the church. In the midst of the ceremony something was seen to be fluttering under his surplice, and, in a moment, to the astonishment of everybody, out from its folds flew the partridge, for it had been more stunned than killed. "Oh, dear! there goes the bird," involuntarily exclaimed the vicar. "It's all right, sir," replied the clerk; "she can't get out, and she's gone into the squire's pew."

Senator Plumb, of Kansas, is a staunch dyed-in-the-wool republican, but that fact did not deter him from saying in the senate recently:

"I am a national bank president, so I can speak without prejuice. I tell you the crisis has come when we shall see whether the banks run the government or the government the banks. I think the government has a right to fix the rate of interest it will pay, and it is no business of any set of men. It makes no difference if Wall street gamblers do lose money or railroad stocks stop rising. It would make a difference if the bees in western corn fields should stop, and it is with the producers, the prosperity of the country rests. Let the bottom fall out of money market if it will. It is an artificial movement to coerce."

My Good Woman,

Why are you so out of sorts, never able to tell folks that you are well? Ten to one it's all caused in the first place by habitual constipation, which no doubt finally caused deranged kidneys and liver. The sure cure for constipation is the celebrated Kidney-Wort. It is also a specific remedy for all kidney and liver diseases. Thousands are cured by it every month. Try it at once.—[Toledo Blade.

The steam cars run so rapidly that they get way ahead of a child's age, so that the boy or girl who was fifteen when he entered them is no more than six or eight by the time the conductor comes along. Boast of our progress as you may, there's no denying that the children are behind the age on railways and at the entertainment ticket office. Boston Transcript.

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A pretty deer is dear to me,
  A hare with downy hair;
I love a hart with all my heart,
  But barely bear a bear.
'Tis plain that no one takes a plane
  To have a pair of pears;
A rake, though, often takes a rake
  To tear away the tares.
All rays raise thyme, time razes all;
  And, through the whole, hole wears.
A writ in writing "right," may write
  It "wright," and still be wrong—
For "write" and "rite" are neither "right,"
  And don't to write belong.
Beer often brings a bier to man,
  Coughing a coffin brings,
And too much ale will make us ail,
  As well as other things.
The person lies who says he lies
  When he is but reclining;
And when consumptive folks decline,
  They all decline declining.
A quail don't quail before a storm—
  A bough will bow before it;
We can not rein the rain at all—
  No earthly powers reign o'er it.
The dyer dyes awhile, then dies;
  To dye he's always trying,
Until upon his dying-bed
  He thinks no more of dyeing.
A son of Mars mars many a sun;
  All Days must have their days,
And every knight should pray each night
  To him who weighs his ways.
'Tis meet that man should mete out meat
  To feed misfortune's son;
The fair should fare on love alone,
  Else one can not be won.
Alas, alas! is something false;
  Of faults a maid is made;
Her waist is but a barren waste—
  Though stayed, she is not staid.
The springs spring forth in spring, and shoots
  Shoot forward, one and all;
Though summer kills the flowers, it leaves
  The leaves to fall in fall.
I would a story here commence,
  But you might find it stale;
So let's suppose that we have reached
  The tail end of our tale.

STORY OF A MAD DOG.

A summer seldom passes that the cry of "Mad dog!" is not heard in some direction or another; and many and stringent are the police regulations put in force to guard against the perils of hydrophobia. More than one unhappy dog, innocent of anything except fright or thirst, panic at being hunted, or having lost his way or master, has fallen a victim to mistaken zeal. One day during last summer a peddler woman walking along the road observed a dog belonging to the neighborhood trotting calmly before her. She knew who was his owner and also that the animal was not far from home. A grassy bank was beside the footpath, and in this bank was a wasp's nest. The dog in passing it must have disturbed the insects, which flew out upon him, clustering round his head, and stinging him about the ears, eyes and nostrils. The poor animal, frightened and in pain, sprang forward, rushing on with wild contortions of agony. A policeman coming up at the moment saw him fly past, his tongue hanging out, his eyes protruded. "Mad dog!" he cried, and the poor beast was shot dead before the screaming woman, running breathlessly to the rescue, could explain what she had seen.

"And a sore pity it was," she said. "As honest and faithful and as handsome a dog as ever stepped before its own tail. Not so mad, indeed, as the man that was in such a hurry to shoot him."

Of all the changes which modern and more enlightened times have brought about, there is none happier than that affecting the treatment of sufferers attacked with hydrophobia. The writer of this is old enough to remember bygone tragedies connected with those victims that make one shudder. There was no hope for the unfortunates. Death was the doom; and at the first symptoms the hapless human victims were ruthlessly destroyed; suffocated between feather-beds the usual mode! An occurrence in humble Irish life, remembered still in the parish where it took place, and for the truth of which many can vouch, will illustrate painfully the above.

The narrative will be best given in the words of one of the family present at the time.

Myself was in the house when it all happened, being first-cousin to Mrs. Ryan, the mistress. A comfortable farm it was, and she well to do; with cows and other stock in plenty, and good land. Ryan had been dead some years, and she managed it all; a clever, brisk, stirring woman. She'd be up and out in her dairy at 3 o'clock in the summer mornings, to get the butter off the churn in the cool of the day; and then away with her across the fields to visit the cattle and oversee the laborers at their work. Many a smart young fellow would have been proud to help her, and right glad to step into Ryan's shoes if he was let. For she was pleasant to look at; as comely as she was industrious; tidy and trim, and wonderful at making and laying by money. But, though she had a gay word for them all, and was blithe and cheery as the day, they soon found that coming courting to the winsome young widow was only wasting their time. She wouldn't listen to man or mortal. Her whole heart and life was bound up in her one child—a lovely boy. It was easy to see by the look that would come into her face, and the light and love in her eyes as they followed him wherever he went, and she hadn't a thought to give to any beside. He was the entire world to her. Every penny she could make or save was for him; and late and early she worked to keep all things about the farm in the best order against he was old enough to take it up.

A fine, handsome child he was; merry as a bird, full of spirits and fun. He doted on his mother, and maybe she wasn't proud of him! Every one loved him, even the dumb animals, he was so good-natured and kindly—joyous and bright like sunshine in the house. There's something in the young and their ways that the heart warms to, natural.

As time wore on, young Ryan grew to be handy and helpful about the place, and knowledgable concerning farm business. He was rising 16 years old, a good scholar and a fine, well-grown active lad, when there came a wonderful hot summer, and rumors were rife about mad dogs seen going through the country, and of the terrible mischief they did. Cows were bitten, and pigs; Christians were attacked and a neighboring farmer lost two valuable horses that went mad after being bitten, and had to be destroyed. People were everywhere in dread and on the watch.

One morning just after the hay was gathered in and safe, herself and the boy were together in the yard, working away as busy as bees. They were seldom asunder now; for he had done with schooling, and they always kept one another company just like a pair of comrades. There was only nineteen years between the ages of the two. Talking merrily they were over their work, and laughing—he was full of his jokes—when a man came tearing into the yard, crying out that a mad dog was in the place, and was making straight for the field the cows were in. Quick as lightning the boy caught up a pitchfork and away with him like a shot to the field. His mother flew after him shrieking out to him to stop, and shouting out to the men to follow. But he was as light of foot and nimble as the deer; and before ever a one could overtake him, he had come up with the dog. The great animal faced savagely round upon the lad when he made at him with the pitchfork, and bit and tore with fury. But the brave boy grappled with him, and had pinned him to the ground by the time the men came up and gave the finishing stroke.

"Now, mother dear," he cried in glee, "the cows are safe! Another minute and the brute would have been into them!"

But the poor mother wasn't heeding the cows, when her darling son, for whom she'd have given all she was worth in the wide world, was there before her eyes all bloody and covered with foam from the beast's mouth. She washed and bathed the bites, the boy laughing at her the while, and saying they were nothing. And nothing there was for a time. But what all dreaded and were looking for in trembling came at last. He knew it himself, the poor fellow! It was pitiful to see how he strove and fought manful against it; and forced himself to drink, when even the sight of water or any liquid was unbearable. He'd try and try to swallow, though it strangled him. No use! he couldn't get down a drop; and the convulsions were dreadful. At length he grew violent, and went raving mad altogether; and hand and foot they had to tie him, to prevent his doing himself or others a mischief.

The doctor came, but what could he do? He was a good-natured man, and gave many a sixpence and a shilling to those he knew needed nourishment more than drugs; but no one thought much of his physicking. People said he had but the one medicine, and that he gave it to all alike, no matter what ailed them. Not that there was any harm in that, for it stands to reason that what would do good to one Christian couldn't be bad for another. When any of the quality were sick, they sent right away off to the city for the grand doctor there, but the parish man was good enough for the poor.

Anyhow, not all the doctors in creation could be of any use to the dear young master. There was but the one thing for him—his doom was sealed. And now the question was how it was to be done. Three ways were spoken of. To smother him between two feather-beds, or else carry him down to the river and drown him, or to open a vein and let him bleed away to death. The mother wouldn't hear of the smothering. When it was proposed to her, you'd think she'd go out of her senses. Indeed, for the matter of that, it was much the same whatever plan was talked of; they couldn't drag consent out of her to any of them. God help her! 'twas a cruel strait to be in. At long last and after much debate, it was settled that a vein should be opened; and, when it was done, the poor fellow—laid upon a bed of straw in an out-house in the yard—was left to die.

Oh, but that was the day of woe! The misery of it, and the despair of the distracted mother, if I was talking till doomsday I couldn't describe. Her neighbors and cousins and the lad's uncles flocked in, and were all gathered round her in the best parlor, striving to comfort her. They made strong tea, in hopes to get her to swallow some. They tried to raise her heart, telling her of the grand funeral he'd have—hundreds and hundreds coming to it from far and near—the handsomest coffin money could buy, real oak, with brass ornaments, and such a wake as was never seen in the country before; no expense spared! But you might as well talk to the dead in the clay. She didn't hear a word, but sat there without tear or moan—only her mouth working with the agony within—just a froze-up, stony image of despair! And you'd hardly know her, she was so changed. The bright, smooth, comely face all drawn and wrinkled like an old crone's, and ghastly pale. Sure it was no wonder, when all she loved upon earth was dripping out his young life within a stone's-throw of her.

When they saw it was of no use, they let the poor woman alone. A gloomy silence fell upon the sorrowful company as they sat there waiting—waiting for the end. The minutes seemed like hours. There was no stir, except when now and then some one would whisper under his breath about the dying boy; how pleasant he was, and gay! How generous and open-handed he'd been.

But no matter how sorrowful the house, or what woe and misery are within the walls, the business of life outside must go on. So, when milking-time came, Kitty M'Cabe, the dairy woman—though the heart in her body was breaking—slipped out to call the milk-girls and see the cows. Coming back through the yard when the milking was done, she had to pass by the outhouse where they had laid the boy; and for the life of her she couldn't help stopping to try and listen how it was with him, and whether he was in heaven yet. There was no sound. Strict orders had been given that no one was to go in; but the door was not locked, and she thought she'd just give it a small shove and take one look. It was an old crazy door, contrary and ill-fitting; and at the first push it gave a great skrick and made so sharp a noise that she was frightened, and tried to pull it back again. The sight, too, of the blood trickling upon the floor made her giddy and sick.

"Is that you, Kitty M'Cabe?" came in a weak, faint whisper from the far end.

Her heart leaped up at the voice she never thought of hearing again. "Ay is it, my life! my darlin'! jewel o' the world!" and she pushed in, never heeding the orders against it, or the trouble and disgrace she was bringing on herself.

"O, Kitty, I'm lost with the thirst! Have you any milk?"

"To be sure I have, darlint—lashins!" and she ran and filled a jugful. He drained it every drop, and then called for more.

"I'm better now, but weak as water. Untie me, Kitty, and I'll try to sit up. Don't be afraid. Some more milk now; it is doing me good."

He struggled up and leaned the poor white face against her shoulder while she put the jug to his lips. They were pale as a corpse's; as if every drop of his blood had run out. The milk seemed to revive him. She thought he'd never stop drinking. After a while he said: "Go now, Kitty, and tell my mother I'm well—quite well. Something has cured me. Or stop! I'll try and go myself, I'm able. She won't be frightened, will she, and think it's my ghost?"

"Heart's darlin'!—'tis clean wild with joy she'll be! But stay, jewel, till I've bound me handkerchief tight over against the cruel cut. There, now, masther dear."

"Reach me over that big stick in the corner and I'll lean down upon you, Kitty, and make shift somehow to creep along;" and, supported by the woman, he began, with feeble footsteps, to totter across the yard.

Roused by a cry from one of the company, his mother looked up, and caught sight of the boy helped past the window. Staggering blindly in, he fell into her outstretched arms; and as they closed convulsively round his half-fainting form, and she held him folded to her breast—fast locked and strained to her—all who were present and looked on knew that she would never part with him more.

And she never did. From that day out, sign or symptom of the madness never appeared; though he was long in recovering his strength, and had to be nursed and tended like an infant. He had, you see, bled such a power that it was the world's work to bring him to. When the doctor fixed up the cut, he was almost gone. A minute more, and 'twould have been too late. The doctor said that all the poison of the dog's bite had flowed away out of him with the blood; but what did he know? Anyhow, there wasn't a healthier or a handsomer or a finer man than himself in the whole barony when he came to his full age—over six feet in his stocking vamps, and broad-shouldered in proportion.

The Heart.

The effect of everything that touches the heart is multiplied by the intensity of the heart's own changes. Hence it is that it's so sensitive, so true an index of the body's state. Hence, also, it is that it never wearies. Let me remind you of the work done by our hearts in a day. A man's total outward work, his whole effect upon the world in twenty-four hours, has been reckoned about 350 foot-tons. That may be taken as a good "hard day's work." During the same time the heart has been working at the rate of 120 foot-tons. That is to say, if all the pulses of a day and night could be concentrated and welded into one great throb, that throb would be enough to raise a ton of iron 120 feet into the air. And yet the heart is never weary. Many of us are tired after but feeble labors; few of us can hold a poker out at arm's length without, after a few minutes, dropping it. But a healthy heart, and many an unsound heart, too—though sometimes you can tell in the evening by its stroke that it has been thrown off its balance by the turmoils and worries of life—goes on beating through the night when we are asleep, and when we wake in the morning we find it at work, fresh as if it had only just begun to beat. It does this because upon each stroke of work there follows a period—a brief, but a real period of rest; because the stroke which comes is but the natural suspense of that rest, and made to match it; because, in fact, each beat is, in force, in scope, in character, in everything, the simple expression of the heart's own energy and state.

Curious Reminiscences.

How strange it must seem to many of our readers to be informed that the United States Court was once occupied trying a woman for the crime of being a scold. The prisoner was the notorious Ann Royal. She was tried at Washington in 1829, the following being an extract from the indictment: "The said Ann did annoy and disturb the good people of the United States by her open, public and common scolding to the common nuisance of the good citizens of the United States and to the evil example of others." The prisoner's counsel pleaded in her defense that the English statute, which punished common scolds with ducking, was obsolete and hence the indictment could not be maintained. Judge Cranch, however, held that the offense was not obsolete, and added that all correct legal authorities decided that being a common scold to the nuisance of the neighborhood is an indictable offense. The judge thereupon fined Mrs. Royal $10, and ordered her to give security for good behavior and to stand committed until the above-mentioned security should be maintained. This is the only instance of the kind I have ever heard of in the history of our country, and hence I give it as a legal curiosity. Another bit of antiquity is found in the following extract from army orders a half century ago: "Cadet R. E. Lee, promoted to brevet second lieutenant artillery, July 1, 1829." How little could any one have imagined the part which this cadet was yet to play in the bloody work of internecine strife!—The Hermit in Troy Times.

A New Industry.

Self-supporting industrial employment for women is attracting more and more attention from the public as the necessity for it becomes daily more apparent. The diversification of industries, which is now increasing with such wonderful rapidity under the demands of modern life is furnishing rapidly many new opportunities for all degrees of intelligence and skill, and a plain, practical hint upon the subject was offered recently in the proposal that shops should be established where mending could be done. The idea is so simple and reasonable that it seems almost useless to dilate upon it, but here is an occupation which could be remuneratively added to the work of many of the small shops in which there must necessarily be much time not fully occupied. In the variety shops, which are already generally attended by women, a simple card is only needed to announce the fact that mending is done, to produce an instant demand for small services. Especially in cities where a large part of the population is employed away from home, both men and women would gladly avail themselves of some assistance of the needle in repairing the damages wrought by the wash-tub, or accident upon the wardrobe.—Washington Critic.

THE whistle of a locomotive can be heard 3,300 yards through the air; the noise of a train 2,500 yards; the bark of a dog and the report of a musket can be heard 1,800 yards; the roll of a drum or an orchestra 1,600 yards; the human voice travels 1,000 yards; the croaking of frogs, 900 yards; the chirping of crickets, 800 yards.

DR. JOHNSON tells an extraordinary story of a sea-cucumber which he possessed. He forgot to furnish it with fresh water, and the creature became sick and dejected. Under this neglect it wasted away in a most remarkable manner. One by one it ejected its tentacles, its teeth, its digestive tubes. These fragments lay here and there, scattered about the aquarium. Still what was left of the creature was not dead. Its empty sack contracted at the least touch. As soon as fresh water was provided the animal began to revive again, reproducing one after another of its lost organs, and at the end of two or three months appeared to be as well and as happy as before.

FRENCH newspapers report the discovery in Algiers, by the archæologist M. Tarry, of a city which had been intombed in the sand. M. Tarry's attention had been awakened by the mound-like appearance of the sandy soil, and some digging brought to light the minarets and upper portion of a mosque. Further excavations laid bare a terrace, a tower and about a dozen houses, all in excellent preservation. He reported his discoveries to the Government of Algiers, which has undertaken to have the site thoroughly explored. The place is in the southern part of the province, not far from the town of Ouargia, and exposed to the full blast of the sandy winds from the desert. Probably a succession of siroccos bearing clouds of sand completely filled up the streets and houses, making the town uninhabitable, and so drove out the population. At present there is no ground for conjecture as to the date of the occurrence.

Oriental Nonsense.

Calling on a giddy girl, who has nothing under heaven to do but to follow the fashions, I found her reclining on a lounge in her boudoir. She wore what is called a tea-gown, shaped not unlike a long, loose paletot, with elbow-sleeves, or angel-sleeves, looped and gathered up at the wrists. The material of the garment was a combination of brocade in gold and silver with silk gauze. Anything more Oriental could hardly be found out of the Orient itself. Over her bosom was a fichu of lace, laid over the shoulders and crossing in front; a bunch of red flowers was fastened at her belt; her abundant black hair was brushed back with a well-counterfeited negligence; the toes of her extended feet were stuck into embroidered sandals, and her stockings were a true flesh-color. A glorious creature she looked, truly, as she lay there in her studied carelessness of finery. But what I set out to say was that incense was burning at her side. Yes, fragrant smoke was rising lazily from an incinerating pastile in a bronze dish. This is a new freak of the girls. The scent-bottle is put aside, and rooms and clothes are perfumed with incense. If the practice lasts long the cannibal who eats a fashionable girl will find her smoked through and through, like a ham, but a great deal spicier.—New York Letter.

The Dead-Letter Office.

A visit to the Dead-Letter Division is exceedingly interesting to strangers. Here all letters and packages that the department has failed to deliver, either for the reason that they were unclaimed, unmailable, misdirected or upon which the postage is not paid, are returned as "dead." Mail matter of this class originated in foreign countries included in the postal union is returned to the country of origin unopened. The remainder is opened and delivered in all cases where any clew to the identity of the writer can be discovered. Of the letters of this kind opened during the fiscal year 23,400 were found to contain money to the amount of $43,336.13, of which 19,305, containing $37,279.81, were afterward delivered, 21,311 contained drafts, checks, bills of exchange, etc., of the value of $1,520,216.65, of which 20,121, containing $1,454,587.44, were delivered; 34,771 contained receipts, paid notes and canceled obligations of all sorts; 30,957 contained photographs; 68,849 contained postage, the most of which were delivered. Of the number of letters passing through the mails it appears that the department fails to deliver but one in every 289; the success of our service in this respect is very gratifying. From official statements it appears that Great Britain fails to deliver one in every 216; France one in 430; Italy one in 126, and Germany one in every 436; this last is, however, scarcely a fair comparison, as a very much larger proportion of registered matter passes through the German mails, the delivery of which is almost inevitable. Before the department building became so crowded, a room was set apart as a museum, where strangers were shown a variety of unclaimed articles from bottled tarantulas to "Blackstone's Commentaries." Now the articles are stowed away, and every year or two disposed of at public auction.

A Masonic Legend.

Many years ago, in the parish of Carpshairn, in Galloway, a rude and sequestered district, there were only three Free Masons, the minister, a tailor and a mason. The mason, being desirous to introduce his son to the same mystery, caused a lodge to be called for the purpose at a lonely cottage, where the ceremonies were proceeding when a knock was heard at the door. The mason, whose name was Dun, went to see who it was, and found an old woman, who addressed him as follows:

"The Masons are met the nicht?"

"Yes."

"Weel, ye ken my web was stolen last week?"

"Yes, Janet, but what business has that wi' the Mason meeting?"

"Ou, ye ken, ye'll be raisin' the de'il, and I wad just like if ye wad ask him, since he's there at any rate, who stole the web."

"Ou, ay, Janet; just you gang awa' then, and we'll see what we can do."

Mr. Dun then returned to the interior of the cottage, and mentioned to the minister what had passed between him and the old woman. The clergyman rebuked him severely for conceding to the superstitious notions of the aged crone, and said he feared that it would "affront them a'."

"Nae fear o' that," answered the mason, "just leave it all to me."

Next day, when Janet called upon Mr. Dun, he told her that "the de'il" had not exactly communicated the name of the thief, but he mentioned that, if the goods were not returned before Thursday next, the house of the guilty person would fall upon him in the night time, and the whole family would be killed. This, he said, was a great secret, and he strictly forbade her communicating it to more than one person.

Away went Janet, quite satisfied; although it might have been expected to occur to her that the prediction of punishment to a thief was not exactly a characteristic piece of conduct on the part of Old Nick. The secret was speedily imparted to her next door neighbor, with many injunctions as to the propriety of letting it go no farther. As a matter of course it was known to the whole parish before night.

On the third morning thereafter Janet's web was found lying at her door, with a part which had been cut off attached to the main body of it with pins.

Care of the Teeth.

Almost any young miss, if she has an amiable expression and clean, white and pearly teeth, will be called at least "good looking," while the otherwise beautiful, if disfigured by foul and black teeth, with unsightly roots and a consequent foul breath, will be regarded as uncomely, if not shunned on account of a foul breath. As one smiles—and young misses love to do that—the teeth are the most conspicuous ornament of the face, and it is important that they be kept clean. To do this it is needful to cleanse them daily, at least, using a soft brush after breakfast; use with a dentifrice made by dissolving two ounces of borax in three pints of boiling water, adding, when not quite cold, a teaspoonful of spirits of camphor; bottle and use with an equal quantity of tepid water. The same may be used to rinse the mouth at any time, while the brushing at bedtime, also, in certain cases will be of great service. By such means the teeth are made beautiful, preserved, the tartarous adhesions removed, decay arrested and health secured. The fastidious miss who learns that the tartar is but an accumulation of salivary mucus, phosphate of lime, in which "wriggling eels" are imbedded, living creatures! may not hesitate to remove them. I will add that the use of castile soap and water will aid in their extermination.

The teeth are covered by an enamel—resembling ivory—hard and brittle, which resists most acids, such as will dissolve common bone. When this is cracked and removed by the use of hot and cold drinks or food, by cracking nuts and the like, the acids easily reach the true bone, of course destroying the teeth. It is more than foolish, therefore, to bite off pins, thread and the like or crack nuts with the teeth.

Do not remove the first teeth too soon, till they are loose, nor let them remain after they are loose, badly decayed—mere shells—since they are a source of harm. If removed too soon they may deform or destroy the second set.

To preserve the teeth it is needful to use them, to chew our food thoroughly, not only for the sake of good digestion, but for the sake of the teeth, since nature is economical and removes them if not needed and used, as seen in the cows fed on distillery slops, with little or no hay. I will add to what I have already said in reference to fine flour, that the teeth suffer for want of bone materials, if that is used, unless an article is used containing these bone elements, for the bony structure, the teeth included.—Dr. J. H. Hanaford.

What Egyptians Eat.

The modern Egyptians are, in general, extremely temperate in regard to food. Even the richest among them take little pride, and perhaps experience as little delight, in the luxuries of the table. Their dishes mostly consist of pilans, soups and stews, prepared principally of onions, cucumbers, and other cold vegetables, mixed with a little meat, cut into small pieces. On special occasions, however, a whole sheep is placed on the festive board; but, during several of the hottest months of the year, the richest restrict themselves entirely to a vegetable diet. The poor are contented with a little oil or sour milk, in which they may dip their bread.

A GERMAN paper says that Carl Schurz speaks better English than any American does. We would reply to this foolish and prejudiced person in the language of Goethe: "Anohderschowderdowzen nichts mer zwei lager und der pretzel. Das ist ein campaign lie giedamt."—New York Commercial.

Dr. Harter's
IRON
TONIC

Is a preparation of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and the Phosphates, associated with the Vegetable Aromatics. Endorsed by the Medical Profession, and recommended by them for Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Diseases, Want of Vitality, Nervous Prostration, Convalescence from Fevers and Chronic Chills and Fever. It serves every purpose where a TONIC is necessary.

Manufactured by The Dr. Harter Medicine Co., St. Louis.

The following is one of the very many testimonials we are receiving daily:

Gentlemen:—Some three months ago I began the use of DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC, upon the advice of many friends who knew its virtues. I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the TONIC. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the TONIC has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit.
Most gratefully yours,

SONS OF "KAINTUCK."

A Story Told by Ex-Gov. Beriah Magoffin, of Kentucky.

"I well remember," said the Governor, "an incident which occurred just before the breaking out of the war, and which afforded us infinite amusement at the time. Breckinridge, who was then Vice President; Floyd, Buchanan's Secretary of War; Senator Powell, of Kentucky, and myself, met one Sunday evening at the residence of Mr. Floyd, and the conversation turned on the sporting proclivities of Kentuckians. Breckinridge and myself good-humoredly maintained that Kentuckians were an improvement upon the old Virginia stock in this particular, and that, while they had inherited dash and daring of their ancestors, they were really the better of the two. 'As men we are your equals, at least,' said I, turning to Floyd. 'Our women are the handsomest in the world. We have finer and faster horses, and even better chickens, than the Old Dominion can produce.' To the latter proposition Floyd demurred energetically, and proposed then and there to arrange a main to be fought on the Virginia border. I agreed, and then proposed to let one fight between two picked birds at the close of the main decide the question of supremacy.

"This was agreed to, and we wagered $1,000 each on the result. Breckinridge wanted half of my $1,000, and I gave it to him. The dispute was to come off in September, 1860, and we arranged all the preliminaries then and there. When the question had been all adjusted I turned upon the party, and, with mock solemnity, proceeded to read a lecture. 'A pretty picture we present, do we not?' said I. 'Here we are, the Vice President of the United States, her Minister of War, a Senator from Kentucky, and the Governor of the same State, desecrating the Lord's day arranging for a cock fight, while the greatest crisis in American history is approaching. The cloud is spread over more than half the horizon, and the storm may burst any moment.' I went on in this strain for some time, and the company at last separated.

"Imagine my astonishment and disgust the next day to read in the New York Herald a full report of our conversation and of my lecture. The hackman had given it away. When I read the Herald I started for the Capitol to tell Breckinridge about it; but on my way up Pennsylvania avenue my attention was attracted by a chorus of cock-crowing which seemed to come from a long row of coops ranged in front of an express office. I stopped to see what it meant, when I saw that the coops were all directed to the Vice President. At first I did not know what to make of it, but suddenly light dawned upon me. Four or five months before Breckinridge and myself had asked Gen. Preston, who was about to go abroad in the discharge of his duties as Minister, to send us a coop of game chickens for a gentleman of whose kind offices we were in need, and who could not be reached in any other way.

"Instead of one coop he had sent a dozen or more, thinking, as I then supposed, that it would be an excellent joke on us. I hurried to the Capitol, and, calling Breckinridge from his place as presiding officer of the Senate, laid the whole matter before him. There was the consignment of game chickens in confirmation of the Herald story, and I assured him that unless he did something promptly he was a ruined man. He laughed, but together we made our way to the express office and paid the charges, which were enormous, amounting, I believe, to several hundred dollars, and, having no use for the birds, sent them to a noted cockfighter in Lexington as a present.

"The war breaking out soon afterward, the proposed main was declared off. Subsequently I learned the inwardness of the chicken business from Gen. Preston. It seems that in visiting Madrid, Paris, Rome, Berlin, Vienna and other European capitals he had prosecuted inquiries about game fowls, and that when he reached London he found all the birds he forwarded to us awaiting his orders. As the easiest way out of the dilemma, he shipped them to Washington. Those cocks afterward whipped everything in the United States, and these strains, I understand, are yet in great demand."

Artemus Ward's Pranks.

Among his youthful diversions was the writing of letters to prominent persons in all parts of the country whose names he happened to see in print—entire strangers to him. These usually referred to some prospective business arrangement. Thus he would write to some gentleman in New York: "Dear Sir—I'm sorry to say I sha'n't be able to get that harness done on the day I promised;" or, "I will not be able to call at your house, as you requested," etc. In this mystification of unsuspecting people he was not unlike the German Owlglass, who, while always playing the fool, never lacked fools upon whom he might try experiments. Nothing seemed to please him more than to get the better of his brother Cyrus. One very cold night in the winter, when he had come home at a late hour from an entertainment, instead of going quietly to his room, for which his mother had provided by leaving the doors unfastened, he stationed himself in the street and called to his brother as if in deep distress about something. Cyrus was slow to wake and appear. Charles continued calling, and with more agony, "Cy! Cy! Ho! Cy!" When Cyrus at last came to the window, he solemnly asked, "Do you really think, Cyrus, that it is wrong to keep slaves?"

What Wives Are Worth.

The value of wives varies in different countries. In America they are often expensive companions, but in the higher regions of the River Amar, and on the Ussuri, in Siberia, according to information furnished to the British Scientific Association by the Rev. Henry Lansdell, the price of a wife is eight or ten dogs, a sledge, or two cases of brandy. In another part of the world, according to evidence furnished to the same association by Wilfred Powell, in New Britain and the neighboring islands of the South Pacific, on the east coast of Guinea, the wives are the absolute property of their husbands, and are bought, sold and eaten by their better halves. There was one New Britain young woman who rebelled at her matrimonial relations, whereupon her husband said he could put her to better use, and straightway killed and ate her. Unfortunately, according to the same authority, the eating in New Britain is not confined to wives. The natives are fond of missionary meat, and think the English are unutterably stupid because they are unwilling to feast on such a delicacy as the human thigh, prepared with cocoanut milk and dressed with banana leaves. Mr. Powell does not advise women to emigrate to New Britain.

Substitutes for Wood.

Year by year other materials are being substituted for wood in the erection of dwellings and buildings of all kinds, in the construction of bridges, fences and sidewalks, in the manufacture of carriages, agricultural implements and furniture, for producing heat for cooking and warming dwellings, and for generating steam. In many parts of the country it is quite as cheap to erect buildings of brick or stone as of wood, though the time required is somewhat longer. Within the past five years boards have given place to wire in building farm fences, and in ten years more wooden fence posts will give place to those of stone, cement or iron. Wood is rapidly going out of use as a material for hoops for barrels and other forms of cooper's ware, and, indeed, barrels and casks of any kind are giving way to other kinds of packages for holding other substances than liquids. Wooden pavements are now generally condemned in all large cities, and wooden sidewalks will soon share their fate. Recently baskets made of strip-iron for picking cotton, gathering potatoes and harvesting fruit have been introduced. They are light, clean, very serviceable and comparatively cheap. Furniture made of metal or stone is fast displacing that manufactured from wood.

Wood supports are still used for railway tracks, but it is likely that a substitute for them in some form of metal or stone will be found before trees can be grown of sufficient size to convert into ties. Not only sea-going steamers and vessels are made of iron, but many smaller boats are constructed of the same material. With the exception of steamboats navigating rivers and lakes whose banks and shores are lined with forests, or locomotives running through sections of the country that are heavily wooded, there is no longer a demand for wood for generating steam. No one will question the excellence of a wood fire, whether it burns in a stove or open grate, but it is no longer economical in most places, even if the material to support it can be obtained at a comparatively low price. Wood is bulky, while coal is compact. The former requires considerable preparation before it can be used, while the latter needs none. Much more labor is required to keep up a fire of wood than one of any kind of coal. Wood needs better protection than coal, and depreciates in value much faster when kept in any situation.—Chicago Times.

How Grant Got Into the Army.

Several persons have laid claim to the credit of bringing Gen. Grant out during the late war; but, in the light of truth, no man had more to do with the matter and has less to say about it than John E. Smith, present Colonel in the United States army, at Fort Douglas, Utah. Grant had gone down to Cincinnati to get a position as Captain on McClellan's staff, and had failed in the effort. One day Dick Yates, on whose staff Col. Smith was serving, entered the gubernatorial office swearing like a trooper, as he was wont to do when occasion demanded.

"What's the matter, Governor?" said Smith.

"Matter enough!" replied Yates. "I have been trying to find a man that has sense enough to muster those fellows in (pointing in the direction of the barracks), and I'll be cussed if I can do it."

"I know a man who will fill the bill exactly," eagerly replied Smith, who had taken a great interest in Grant, not only because he was his fellow-townsman, but because he had discovered in him genius of more than ordinary nature.

"Who is he?" said Gov. Yates.

"Capt. Grant, of Galena," replied the Colonel.

"Can we get him to take hold and help us out?" inquired Yates.

Smith replied that he (Grant) was eager to enter the army, and that he would accept almost any position that might be offered him.

"Then write him at once—no, telegraph him—to come down at once—on the first train," said Gov. Yates, with an air of relief, and a message was forwarded to Grant, who replied in person on the following day, when he was set to work as mustering officer, entirely relieving the Governor thereafter from further anxiety. Grant was subsequently appointed to the command of the Twenty-first regiment, stationed at Mattoon, and his history from that time on is familiar to almost every man, woman and child on the face of the globe.—Galena letter.

Investigating His Historical Learning.

"And so you are studying American history?" asked a fond father of his hopeful.

"Yes!" responded the lad.

"Good enough!" roared the delighted parent. "Now tell us who George Washington was."

"He was nurse to a lot of old colored women," sang the boy.

"What was he first in?"

"First ashore, first to leave, and first in the carts of the hungry man."

"Look here, you scalawag," said the old man, riling up, "you want to get this thing straight. What was it Washington couldn't do?"

"He couldn't lie!" snorted the youngster.

"You've got the right man. What fight did he win?"

"He licked Hunker Bill on Boston Common, in three rounds."

"What was it he cut when he was a boy?"

"He cut his father's cheese, and exclaimed, 'Father, spare me; I cannot tell a hatchet from a lie!'"

His father graduated the boy at once, and he now makes a living selling papers.

Sweet Pain.

A Scotch minister once said no woman could bear pain as well as a man. That is not so. Where's the man who can stand having his waist squeezed so he can hardly breathe for three hours of an evening, and not even murmur?

LINCOLN'S LOVE.

His Engagement to Mary Owens, and How it Was Broken Off.

Mr. W. G. Green tells the following story in the Chicago Inter-Ocean concerning the engagement of Abraham Lincoln and Mary Owens:

My cousin, Nancy Green, had a great, strapping baby that she was in the habit of lugging about with her wherever she went. Possibly Lincoln didn't have a passion for babies; at any rate, he was not in love with this one, and I remember very well that when his own son Bob was in the cradle, Lincoln used to lie on the floor reading, and let the future Secretary of War split his lungs yelling to be carried about the house. If Mrs. Lincoln happened to arrive home about this time there was trouble in the family for a few minutes, but no remonstrances or appeals could ever make him a good nurse. He would read, and, so far as appearances went, was deaf to all the infantile cries that came from his hopeful heirs. When the babies grew up a bit, and knew something, they found in their father a companion and a friend, but they had to look elsewhere for a nurse.

Well, Lincoln had grown very fond of Mary Owens, and she seemed to take quite a fancy to him. They were together a good deal, and finally, as was understood, became engaged. One day Mary and Nancy Green were going a mile or so to a neighbor's, and Lincoln went with them. As usual, Nancy took the baby and trudged along with it, although it was a heavy weight for her. Perhaps she expected that Lincoln would offer to shoulder the boy himself for part of the distance, and so relieve her, but if she had such expectations they were not realized, for he put his hands in his pockets and leisurely sauntered by the side of Mary Owens, without a glance toward the baby.

Pretty soon Mary became cold, and answered Lincoln with short and curt sentences. Then she refused to talk to him at all, and by the time the end of the journey was reached she fairly withered him with her glances. Lincoln did not know, or seemed not to know, what the matter was, and at last asked an explanation.

"What's up, Mary," said he. "You seem to be in bad humor."

"Oh, no," she replied, mockingly. "I'm ez purring and good-natured az a kitten. What is there to ruffle a body, my gracious!"

"It's something I've done, I suppose," said Lincoln.

"No," replied Mary, tartly, "it's nothing you've done. It's what ye hain't done, and that's just what's the matter."

"Well, what is it?" said Lincoln.

"You don't know, of course," responded Mary, disdainfully.

"No; I'll be hanged if I do," said Lincoln.

"Wall, I tell you," said Mary. "You've walked yer for more'n a mile with us—a great, strong fellow like you, and let that woman carry a baby that weighs nigh onto forty pounds, and never so much as lifted yer finger to help her. That's what ails me."

"Why, she never asked me," said Lincoln.

"Oh, she didn't! And you hadn't politeness enough to offer to help her, but must wait to be asked."

"Why, I never thought of it," returned Lincoln. "I always supposed she would be afraid to let a fellow like me touch the baby for fear he might break it or something. I'd carry a bushel of 'em for you, Mary."

"Yes, now," said Mary, bitterly.

"Any time," said Lincoln.

"If I asked you?" responded Mary.

"Well, I reckon you could ask me if you wanted them carried," retorted Lincoln.

"I just tell you what it is, Abe Lincoln," cried Mary, getting excited, "any man as is fit to be a husband would have offered to a carried that child when he could see its mother was near about tired to death."

"And I didn't offer!" said Lincoln.

"No you didn't," responded Mary.

"And so I ain't fit to be a husband?" said Lincoln.

"That's just the fact, you hain't" said Mary.

Lincoln turned about with a laugh, and didn't appear to think much more of the matter. He treated Mary very nicely, and much as if nothing had been said, but her words, no doubt, made a serious impression, and from that time their intimacy began to wane, and after a while there was a general understanding that the engagement was canceled. There were no more words about the baby, I believe, but it was the baby, after all, that broke up the match.

The World's Languages.

It is stated by Professor G. A. F. Van Rhyn that there are about 900 languages and 5,000 dialects now known. Another authority states that there are about 1,200 different spoken dialects, while the languages proper from which these have descended may not number more than five or six. Just where to draw the line is the point where authorities differ. The States of Europe, Asia, and America can be given exactly, but it is quite another matter when inquiry is made in regard to Africa, or the islands of the sea. Ethnologists differ, as languages can be traced back about so far, and then a halt has to be called.

How Animals Foretold an Earthquake.

An Italian writer on the catastrophe on the island of Ischia mentions those prognostics of an earthquake which are derived from animals. They were observed in every place where the shocks were such as to be generally perceptible. Some minutes before they were felt, the oxen and cows began to bellow, the sheep and goats bleated, and, rushing in confusion, one on the other, tried to break the wicker work of the folds; the dogs howled terribly, the geese and fowls were alarmed, and made much noise; the horses which were fastened in their stalls were greatly agitated, leaped up, and tried to break the halters with which they were attached to the mangers; those which were proceeding on the roads suddenly stopped and snorted in a very strange way. The cats were frightened, and tried to conceal themselves, or their hair bristled up wildly. Rabbits and moles were seen to leave their holes; birds rose, as if scared, from the places on which they had alighted; and fish left the bottom of the sea and approached the shores, where at some places great numbers of them were taken. Even ants and reptiles abandoned, in clear daylight, their subterranean holes in great disorder, many hours before the shocks were felt. Some dogs, a few minutes before the first shock took place, awoke their sleeping masters by barking and pulling them, as if they wished to warn them of the impending danger, and several persons were thus enabled to save themselves.

Something Worth Knowing.

The French papers announce the discovery of a remedy, instantaneous in its efficacy, for burns occasioned by oil of vitriol—a soft paste of calcined magnesia and water, with which the parts burned are covered to the thickness of an inch. The pain is almost immediately alleviated, and after a few hours, when the paste is removed, no scar remains.

SILK KNITTING.

The Hot Springs (Ark.) Star has the following touching the best brand of knitting silk: There are two kinds of knitting silk—one made from pure thread silk, the other from spun silk. Thread silk is reeled from cocoons, several threads being doubled and twisted together, according to the desired size of the finished thread, and is of far greater strength and durability than any other fiber known. Spun silk is made from short pieces of waste, carded and spun like wool, and have but little strength or durability. All knitting silk stamped "Belding Brothers & Co.," with blue ink, on the end of each spool, is warranted pure thread silk, and will wear fully three times as long and look much better than any spun silk. The superiority of Belding Brothers & Co.'s manufacture is not confined to knitting silk. All other goods bearing the stamp of their names will be found, also, to be the best.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS [illegible] in this paper.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, IND.; MAY 26, 1881.

J. A. BARNS, D. Y. HUSSELMAN, EDITORS.

THE Ohio state anti-liquor alliance met in Columbus yesterday.

CONKLING and Platt have both concluded to get elected again if they can.

THE I. P. C. railway has taken steps to build a branch of their line from Plymouth to South Bend.

GEN. GRANT has written a letter to Senator Jones, of Nevada, in which he takes the part of Conkling, as against Garfield.

THE republican state convention in Ohio is called to meet at Cleveland June 8, to nominate a candidate for governor and other state officers. It is believed that the choice will fall on Governor Foster.

AS IF to still further complicate matters, and render the punishment of the mail contract swindles more difficult, it now turns out that some of the books and papers in the post-office department are missing.

The Chicago Times last Saturday contained the new translation of the four gospels entire. It was one of the many astonishing things that paper is continually doing. It is a curiosity in its way.

WE are in receipt of the announcement that the third annual session of the Island-Park Assembly will be held at Rome City from June 29 to July 15. The programme, as laid out, is a very interesting one, and would be very profitable to anyone who could attend the entire course.

WE have received an invitation to join the Eastman Business College excursion from Poughkeepsie down the Hudson on the 28th of this month. The steamer, Mary Powell, has been chartered for the occasion, and no doubt the boys will have a good time. But as the distance is about eight hundred miles, we can only send our regrets.

WHY don't some republican from the inner circle rise up and explain how those double tickets were voted by that party last fall? Conner, of Newton county, has brought the subject up again. It would now be a good time to discuss the thing, as it might throw some light on the method by which several precincts in this state counted out more ballots than there were names on the tally-sheets. It might even lift the veil a little on some of the precincts in DeKalb county.

AFTER Conkling and Platt resigned last week, there was, of course, a majority of democrats in the senate, but no change was made in the organization. When Robertson's case was reached he was confirmed with but little opposition. The next doubtful case was that of Wm. E. Chandler of fragrant memory in connection with the counting in of Hayes. He was unceremoniously rejected, and is about the first of those concerned in that piece of eminent rascality that has received anything like a back-set. After disposing of the rest of the more important appointments the senate adjourned, and will not meet before next winter, unless there is an extra session.

NO WONDER there was plenty of money to pay all campaign expenses in carrying Indiana last fall, when the star-route ring could get money as easily as they did. Take one route for example, the one from Los Vegas to Venita, New Mexico. It was taken at first for $6,000, but under the able administration of Brady, it was soon arranged to pay the contractor $15,000 a year, though but little mail was to be taken over the route, and much of the way none at all was carried, there being no demand for it, in fact, no one to receive letters. And hundreds of other routes were handled in the same way. No wonder that Garfield wrote to "My Dear Hubbell," hoping Brady would do all in his power, and asking "how departments generally are doing."

THERE is nothing like belonging to a party of great moral ideas, if you want to be president. The advantages may be illustrated by the following statement: Brady, second-assistant postmaster-general, and Dorsey, secretary of the republican national committee, were in collusion so as to control the letting of contracts on the star routes. Their friends and fellow-conspirators would help to bid off the star routes, then get up the bogus petitions to have the number of trips increased, and the pay of course increased at the same time. Then Garfield and others called on them for a "divide," and the money thus drawn from the people by fraud was used to carry Indiana. The election in Indiana carried New York for the republicans, without which Garfield could not have been elected.

Neighborhood Nippings.

Laporte mills are now buying wheat at New Carlisle for the first time in many years.

Angola is moving in the matter of holding an old-fashioned celebration of the Fourth of July. Who bids first in this county?

The twenty-first annual meeting of the Womans Suffrage Association will be held in Kokomo, June 15 and 16.
